SEVENTY-SECOND CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

SENATE

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1933

The Chaplain, Rev. Z@Barney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, the strength and hope of all who seek for peace and love along the path of duty, be near to every heart that Thou hast made; teach us to sow beside the waters of life and patiently to await the fruitage of our labour. Make us strong enough for life's daily burdens, brave enough for life's daily crosses, lowly enough to be worthy of the love of Christ and of our fellow men, that we may turn the world toward Thee, and, with our failures and our triumphs, our gladnesses and griefs, our utterance and our silence, bear true witness of Thy leading through all our rugged ways, until we pass at length into Thy presence, where there is fullness of joy and abundance of peace forevermore. We ask it in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. FESS. I desire to address the Senate on the question of inflation. I would like to know whether I can take the floor at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks not, except by unanimous consent, until after the conclusion of morning business.

Mr. FESS. I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to address the Senate now on the question of infla-

The VICE PRESIDENT. That can only be done by unanimous consent. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent for that purpose.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, that would probably consume the morning hour. I have on the table a resolution which for some time I have been anxious to take up. I have tried to accommodate myself to the wishes of Senators, but I do not want to wait until the Senate is about to adjourn before I get action on the resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I suggest that we transact routine morning business first.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from Ohio.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Governor of Arizona, transmitting a joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Arizona, which, with the accompanying copy of resolution, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as follows:

Executive Office, State House, Phoenix, Ariz., February 13, 1933.

The honorable the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES SENATE,

Washington, D. C. SIR: I have the honor to transmit Senate Joint Resolution No. 2, in which the Eleventh Arizona Legislature, now in session, respectfully prays that Congress pass United States Senate bill 1197, known as the Frazier bill, and amend said bill to include ranchers and livestock owners.

Very truly yours,

B. B. MOEUR, Governor.

STATE OF ARIZONA, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

State of Arizona, ss:

I, James H. Kerby, secretary of state, do hereby certify that the within is a true, correct, and complete copy of Senate Joint Resolution 2, regular session, Eleventh Legislature, State of Arizona, all of which is shown by the original engrossed copy on file in this department. department.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Arizona. Done at Phoenix, Ariz., the capital, this 9th day of February, A. D. 1933.

[SEAL.] JAMES H. KERBY Secretary of State.

Senate Joint Resolution 2, urging State legislatures to petition Congress to pass United States Senate bill 1197, known as the Frazier bill, and to amend said bill to include ranchers and livestock owners

Be it resolved by the Eleventh Legislature of the State of Arizona, That-

A crisis exists and hundreds of thousands of once prosperous farmers, ranchers, and livestock owners in this Nation have already lost their homes and their all by mortgage foreclosures because of the fact that the price of agricultural products and livestock have for years been below the cost of production, a condition that affects all of the people of this Nation and is largely responsible for the continuance of the depression; and

There is no adequate way of refinancing existing agricultural

There is no adequate way of refinancing existing agricultural indebtedness, and the farmers, ranchers, and livestock owners are at the mercy of their mortgagees and creditors; and

Unless immediate relief is given thousands and hundreds of thousands of additional farmers, ranchers, and livestock owners will lose their farms, ranches, and livestock, and their homes, and millions more will be forced into our cities and villages, and the army of unemployed will necessarily increase to alarming proportions, precipitating a condition that threatens the very life of this Nation: and this Nation; and

The State Legislatures of Montana, North Dakota, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Nevada, and Illinois have each and all petitioned Congress to pass Senate bill 1197, known as the Frazier bill, without delay, which bill provides that existing farm indebtedness shall be refinanced by the Government of the United States at 1½ per cent interest and 1½ per cent principal on the amortization plan, and through mortgages on livestock at 3 per cent per annum, not by issuing bonds and plunging the Nation further into debt but by issuing Federal reserve notes, the same as the Government now does for the banks through the Federal reserve bank:

ernment now does for the banks through the Federal reserve bank: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of the State of Arizona respectfully requests and petitions the legislatures of the other States that have not already done so to petition Congress to pass Senate bill 1197 without delay, and amend same to include ranches, ranges, and livestock in order that the agricultural and ranch indebtedness of this Nation may be speedily liquidated and refinanced and agriculture and livestock saved from utter ruin and destruction and this depression brought to an intelligent and speedy end; and respectfully requests that the State legislatures cause copies of such resolution, after same has been passed to be cause copies of such resolution, after same has been passed, to be sent to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House, to Senator Frazier, at Washington, D. C., and to William Lemke, Congressman elect, at Fargo, N. Dak.; be it further Resolved, That the secretary of state cause sufficient copies of this resolution to be printed, and that he mail a copy to the president of the senate and the speaker of the house of each of the States that have not as yet petitioned Congress to pass Senate bill 1197, requesting that said resolution be read before each of said bodies; and be it further Resolved, That Arizona's representatives in Congress, Senator Henry F. Ashurst, Senator Carl Hayden, and Hon. Lewis Douglas, be sent copies of said resolution.

Approved February 2, 1933. Passed the senate January 31, 1933, by the following votes: 19 ayes, 0 nays, 0 not voting.

HARRY W. HILL President of the Senate, W. J. GRAHAM, Secretary of the Senate.

This bill was received by the secretary of state this 2d day of February, 1933, at 4.55 o'clock p. m.

JAMES H. KERBY Secretary of State.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of California, which were ordered to lie on the table:

Assembly Joint Resolution No. 2, relative to memorializing Congress to propose an amendment to the Constitution of the United States repealing the eighteenth amendment and to provide for conventions in the several States to accomplish this

Whereas one of the modes prescribed for the amendment of the Constitution of the United States is that Congress, whenever two-Constitution of the United States is that Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, may propose amendments to said Constitution, which shall be and become effective and operative as part of said Constitution when ratified by conventions in three-fourths of the several States, if such mode of ratification be proposed by Congress; and

Whereas the selection by the qualified voters in the several States of delegates to represent them in State conventions called to consider and act upon proposals thus submitted is in harmony with the spirit of our institutions and the tenor of our time, and is the mode most expressive of the will of the people; and

Whereas the Supreme Court of the United States has held that the determination of the method of ratification of a proposed the determination of the method of ratification of a proposed amendment is the exercise of a national power specifically granted by the Constitution of the United States to the Congress, and that the Congress is not bound by the conflicting constitution or laws of any State in the exercise of this national power: Now, therefore he it fore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the Legislature of the State of California does hereby petition the Congress of the United States to submit to the sevpetition the Congress of the United States to submit to the several States a resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States repealing the eighteenth amendment thereto, without any reservation whatever, thereby restoring to the several States exactly those powers over the beverage use of the several States exactly those powers over the beverage use of intoxicating liquors possessed by them prior to the adoption of said amendment, and reserving to the Congress only those powers possessed by it prior to the adoption thereof; and be it further Resolved. That it is the further desire of the Legislature of the State of California, in order that the most prompt and direct vote of the people may be had, that the Congress provide and enact:

First. That the above-proposed amendment be submitted to a convention in each of the several States for their approval and ratification or their disapproval and rejection.

Second. That the delegates to the ratifying conventions be elected at large in their several States after the manner of the election of the members of the Electoral College, namely, that the delegates be elected on the basis of whether they are in favor of delegates be elected on the basis of whether they are in favor of or opposed to the proposed amendment.

Third. That the day of election be uniform throughout the United States and as soon as practicable after the submission of the resolution.

Fourth. That the Congress provide the ways and means of nomiroute in That the Congress provide the ways and means of nominating delegates to the several conventions, of conducting the election, and of assembling the several conventions, and that the Congress provide for the costs incurred thereby; and be it further Resolved, That in adopting this resolution it is not the purpose or intent of this legislature to apply to the Congress to call a convention for proposing amendments but to give expression.

through their representatives in senate and assembly, of the desire and hope of the people of California that such repeal of the and hope of the people of California that such repeal of the eighteenth amendment be submitted, and that it be submitted to conventions in the several States for ratification; and be it further Resolved, That duly authenticated copies of this resolution be sent forthwith to the President of the Senate of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, to the Members of Congress from the State of California, and to the presiding officer of each branch of the legislature of each of the several States.

Assembly Joint Resolution 3, relating to memorializing Congress to adopt legislation permitting the manufacture and sale of light wines

Whereas large sums of money have heretofore been invested in, and great tracts of land have been devoted to, the grape industry in California; and

Whereas in the past said industry has furnished work for thousands of persons; and sands of persons; and Whereas because of certain provisions contained in the laws of the United States the production of grapes and the products thereof has been greatly curtailed, causing many persons heretofore gainfully employed to lose their means of livelihood; and

Whereas it is of vital interest to the people of the State of California that the Congress of the United States adopt legislation legalizing the manufacture and sale of light wines so that the grape industry in California may again be revived and employment furnished many people; and ment furnished many people; and

Whereas the sale and taxation of such light wines in this State would produce a large annual revenue, relieving the tax burden now placed upon owners of real property; furnish employ-ment to thousands of unemployed persons and provide a market for large quantities of farm products required in the manufacture of such wines: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the legislature of said State urgently petition and request the Congress of the United States to adopt legislation now pending before it to amend section 29, Title II of the national prohibition act, being an amendment to H. R. 13312, to allow the manufacture, possession, transportation, sale, or exportation of naturally fermented wines without the addition of distilled spirits, manufactured, possessed, sold, transported within or exported from the United States, to be served and consumed with usual meals in bona fide hotels, restaurants, public eating places, dining cars, or for the distribution and sale by duly permitted retail stores, for consumption in the home, which uses are expressly declared by this act of Congress to be nonbeverage and when so used said naturally fermented wines are declared to be and are nonintoxicating.

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, the Vice President, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to the Senators and Representatives of the State of California in Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of West Virginia, which was ordered to lie on the House Concurrent Resolution 12 (by Mr. Beacom), petitioning Congress to submit a proposal to the States providing for the submission of the eighteenth amendment to the vote of the

Whereas the Democratic Party in its last national convention in its platform declared in favor of outright repeal of the eight-eenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States;

Whereas the Republican Party in its national convention declared in favor of submitting a proposal providing for the submission of the eighteenth amendment to the several States; and

Whereas it appears from the results of the election held in November last, that the sentiment of the people favors resub-mission of the eighteenth amendment to a vote of the people; and Whereas there seems to be a strong sentiment in favor of ren-dering to the States their sovereign right to determine for themdering to the States their sovereign right to determine for themselves the matter of handling the liquor problem; and Whereas such ample Federal laws will be enacted as will guarantee to each State its right of protection in the exercise of its sovereign rights: Therefore be it Resolved by the house of delegates (the senate concurring therein), That the National Congress submit to the people of the several States the question of repeal of the eighteenth amendment and that the National Congress is hereby petitioned to submit such a proposal to the several States.

we, Charles Lively, clerk of the senate, and John S. Hall, clerk of the house of delegates, of the West Virginia Legislature, hereby certify that the foregoing resolution was regularly adopted by the Legislature of West Virginia on January 25, 1933.

CHARLES LIVELY,

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a joint ing the prompt passage of legislation for the rehabilitation of the farm industry through the adoption of some form of the domestic-allotment plan, the refinancing of farm mortgages, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

(See joint memorial printed in full when presented to-day by Mr. Walsh of Montana.)

I, Sam W. Mitchell, secretary of state of the State of Montana, do hereby certify that the following is a true and correct copy of an act entitled "Senate Joint Memorial No. 2," being a memorial to the Congress of the United States urging the prompt enactment of legislation for the rehabilitation of the farm industry through the adoption of some form of the domestic-allotment plan, the refinancing of farm mortgages, and such other measures as may be found necessary to place the farm industry upon approximately the same footing as other great industries of the United States, enacted by the twenty-third session of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana and approved by J. E. Erickson, governor of said State, on the 14th day of February, 1933. In testimony whereof I have hereun'to set my hand and affixed the great seal of said State.

Senate Joint Memorial 2

A memorial to the Congress of the United States urging the prompt enactment of legislation for the rehabilitation of the farm industry through the adoption of some form of the do-mestic-allotment plan, the refinancing of farm mortgages, and such other measures as may be found necessary to place the farm industry upon approximately the same footing as other great industries of the United States great industries of the United States:

To the Congress of the United States:

We, the Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, both senate and house, do hereby join in the nation-wide demand that something constructive and substantial be done by the Congress of the United States for the rehabilitation of agriculture, the basic industry of the Nation. More than thirty and one-half million men, women, and children live and labor upon farms throughout this country, approximately one-fourth of the entire population. According to the reports of the Department of Agriculture of the United States the income per farm available for "labor and management" during the prosperous years of 1919 to 1928 averaged only $584.90, or about $1.60 per family per day, or a shade less than 40 cents per person per day. This is far less than the average cost of supporting inmates of charitable and penal institutions throughout the United States. It should be understood that these meager returns to the tillers of the soil were the institutions throughout the United States. It should be understood that these meager returns to the tillers of the soil were the returns in the days of prosperity. We shall not attempt to discover what they are during these years of depression; we know that they are less than pauper allowances. At this time wheat is quoted at less than 25 cents per bushel throughout the State of Montana, far below the bare cost of production, and the price on other farm products is in proportion.

These ruinous prices have destroyed the purchasing power of the thirty and one-half million people living on farms in the

These fullous prices have destroyed the purchasing power of the thirty and one-half million people living on farms in the United States; they are no longer able to purchase implements, building materials, and the numerous other products of mill and factory. As a result the wheels of our mills do not turn; the machinery of our factories does not operate; millions upon millions of unemployed languish in idleness, and their children cry for bread.

Raise the price on the products of the soil so that the tiller may receive a living wage; the millions on the farms will then be able to purchase the goods from mill and factory; idle millions will be placed at work, and their children will be fed.

placed at work, and their children will be fed.

The economic conditions now prevailing throughout the Republic are dark and distressing; but we should be cowards, unworthy of American citizenship, if we surrendered to the drift of circumstances and the spirit of hopelessness and despair. Let intelligence rule the Republic, and final disaster shall be averted and economic well-being shall return in a fuller measure. One-half of the great economic problem of the United States has been triumphantly solved. We are capable of producing such an abundance of all material things that every man, woman, and child in the United States may live in comfort and to some extent even in luxury. The remaining one-half of the problem is to bring about a somewhat equitable distribution of this abundant production. It should be possible to approach nearer to a solution of this problem than we are to-day.

tion. It should be possible to approach nearer to a solution of this problem than we are to-day.

In this age of specialization of production, each man produces, practically speaking, only one class of goods or renders only one kind of service. This one class of goods or service must be exchanged for the numerous kinds of goods and services required in the everyday life of to-day. The problem of exchange and distribution is therefore fundamental in our economic life. If each man receives an equitable price for his labor or his goods, this system of exchange will function freely; but if the price on one class of goods or one kind of service is entirely out of proportion to the price on other kinds of goods or services the system will break down to that extent. Equitable exchange relations constitute the basis of prosperity.

With regard to agricultural products this equitable exchange relation does not exist, and as far as wheat is concerned it will not restore itself for decades to come; we are likely to continue to have an exportable surplus of wheat and other farm products for have an exportable surplus of wheat and other farm products for a long time. The production of wheat in many foreign countries, particularly Asiatic Russia, is likely to increase. Foreign countries continue to erect tariff walls against the importation of American wheat. These circumstances conspire to keep down the export price on American wheat, and this ruinous export price will drag down the price on that part of the wheat consumed in this down the price on that part of the wheat consumed in this country; it tends to fix the domestic price. It is absolutely intolerable, unbearable, and ruinous to American agriculture to have the domestic price on its products fixed and determined by foreign tariff walls, pauper wages, and revolutionary experiments in foreign countries. In order to survive and prosper we must regulate our own domestic affairs.

We therefore ask that the Congress of the United States protect the great domestic market for our farm products, so that the farmer may receive a reasonable price on the home consumption. We believe that this can be accomplished through the application of some form of the domestic-allotment plan—a plan under which the price on the home consumption will be approximately on par with the prices on the goods that the farmer has to purchase.

This would tend to place agriculture on the same footing as other great industries of the United States. Under this plan the Government of the United States would obtain control over the areas to be utilized for the various farm crops and thereby adjust production to demand. We realize that the growth and development of a country and the well-being of its people depend very largely upon an abundant food supply. The reduction in acreage should therefore proceed with caution; but we also realize that it is impossible to meintain resonable prices with an increase. is impossible to maintain reasonable prices with an increasing

We urge that in the carrying out of the domestic-allotment plan, the details of administration be intrusted as far as possible to the governments of the various States and counties so that plan, the details of administration be intrusted as far as possible to the governments of the various States and counties so that the plan may not result in the development of added administrative machinery on the part of the United States and increased expenses to its Treasury. We ask that the domestic-allotment plan be made effective not only with regard to wheat but also other farm products where it may be found applicable.

On account of the ruinously low prices on farm products our farmers are finding it impossible to pay interest and principal on the billions of farm mortgages incurred in good faith in better years, and farmers throughout the country are losing their homes by the thousands through mortgage foreclosures. We, therefore, ask that the Government of the United States lend its credit toward the refinancing of farm mortgages at the lowest rate of interest which the United States can obtain.

The deplorable conditions now prevailing will justify Congress in applying far more drastic remedies than in ordinary times.

We ask for the application of the domestic-allotment plan for the refinancing of farm mortgages and for the enactment of such other measures as may be found necessary to place the farm industry upon approximately the same footing as other great industries of the United States, honestly believing that this is absolutely necessary for the reestablishment of ordinary, prosperous conditions in the economic life of the Nation. It will not help the farmer alone, but will aid in rehabilitating the business of the merchant, the banker, the investor, the manufacturer, the railroads—and above all it will help to provide work for the millions of unemployed.

We hereby direct the secretary of state of the State of Montana of unemployed.

We hereby direct the secretary of state of the State of Montana to forward copies of this memorial to the President of the Senate of the United States, to the Speaker of the House, and to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

We, the members of the Twenty-third Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, do hereby respectfully represent that—
Whereas we are aware that the prevailing difficulties in many parts of Montana are partly due to the drought conditions existing during the years 1929, 1930, and 1931, when our farmers realized practically nothing from their crops; and
Whereas living conditions in many of our farming communities during these years were such as to make it necessary for the Red

whereas fiving conditions in many of our farming communities during these years were such as to make it necessary for the Red Cross to render aid to hundreds of our people; and Whereas due to the deflated prices of wheat the past year many of our best citizens in the farming districts of our State have been unable to pay their taxes, thereby endangering our public schools and local governments, and causing the loss of many homes through tax sales; and

Whereas many of our farm owners have hardly enough wheat on hand to finance another crop, and to require them to pay 25 per cent of their seed loans would cause such a hardship as to result, in many instances, in want and suffering, and add to the general breakdown of the agricultural situation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the State of Montana, the House of Representatives concurring, that the Congress be memorialized to grant an extension of one year on the payments of the 1932 seed, feed, and fuel loans in all cases where the producers are compelled to sell their grain below the cost of production; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this memorial be forwarded to each of the Members of the Senate and of the House of Representatives of Montana in Congress, and to the Federal seed-loan depart-ment at Minneapolis, Minn.

GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP OF RAILROADS

Mr. BROOKHART presented an editorial from the Washington (D. C.) Herald of the 21st instant, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP OFFERS ONLY SOLUTION OF THE RAILROAD PROBLEM

It is time the American people looked their railroad problem in the face—sized it up as it is—thought about it in terms of its realities and addressed themselves to its solution realistically.

"Robbing Peter to pay Paul" has not yet found a place among the maxims of sound economics. We are doing, however, exactly that with the railroads as we continue to lend them money wrung from the people by taxation in order to pay their deficits, their bank loans, their fixed charges and their costs for operation and maintenance. maintenance.

The rates charged for both passenger and freight service are igh. They are violently out of line with the costs of comparable services.

And yet the railroads can see no hope of rehabilitation except in the maintenance of these charges—even their increase. They hope traffic will revive despite practices which can only operate to its destruction.

It is a hopeless mess.

If the public interest were not so inseparably involved in the plight of the railroads, we might leave them to their fate.

The history of some of the rail carriers is strewn with bad management and fraud—frauds upon their creditors, their shareholders and the public.

The poor bondholders and shareholders have been plowed again and again to no purpose except the enrichment of railroad financiers.

The legacy of past evils, despite all reforms of practice, is still represented in distended capitalizations, towering overheads, postponed charge-offs and physical obsolescence, which are fatal handicaps to service, efficiency, and the reasonable treatment of the public in the matter of charges.

Their borrowing capacity is spent. The paper collateral pledged for Government loans, which had nothing more than paper value, is now exhausted.

It is ridiculous to describe the process by which they are seek-

It is ridiculous to describe the process by which they are seeking further Government aid as borrowing.

Let the Government realize this.

It is not lending to the railroads. It is paying for the railroads—paying for them—but not getting them!

How much better to spend the people's money acquiring the roads, reorganizing them, liquidating burdens which can no longer be carried—doing, in short, the things necessary to put the roads on a paying and serviceable basis.

Only in this way will the people obtain from their railroads what they are entitled to expect—efficient service at reasonable rates.

The physical properties of most railroads are not equal in value to their bonded debt. This fact, coupled with the depressed prices for their securities, would enable the Government to acquire the roads at a not excessive valuation.

It must be apparent, even to those most antagonistic to public ownership, that there is no solution of the railroad problem except through Government acquisition and operation.

The railroads have no solution for their situation.

If it must be solved by the public and by the use of the public's money, the money should be used in the service of the public interest exclusively.

PUBLIC-WORKS PROGRAM

Mr. BROOKHART presented a letter from F. W. Meyers of Iowa City, Iowa, relative to the economic situation and suggesting a remedy therefor, which was ordered to lie on the table.

IOWA CITY, IOWA.

Hon. SMITH W. BROOKHART,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senator: At this time, when all the "captains of industry and wizards of finance" tell us that before adequate relief can be given a starving people it is necessary that we balance the Budget, I hesitate to offer an opinion to the contrary, but feel it a duty to do so.

a duty to do so.

Balancing the Budget inevitably involves two things—first, the curtailment of governmental activities and the reduction of salaries, and, second, an increased burden of taxation.

Neither of these things is calculated to bring relief to a people who need more work and more governmental activities and who are now overburdened with taxes.

Fifteen years ago had anyone in authority insisted that we must balance the Budget before meeting the great emergency of war and mustering all our resources of men and money to make the world safe for democracy, he would have been branded as a traitor to his country and landed behind the bars of Leavenworth.

We were confronted by a tremendous emergency that threat-to his country and landed behind the bars of Leavenworth.

We were confronted by a tremendous emergency that threatened the very life of our civilization. It was no time for delay or faltering, no time to count the cost, because no cost could be greater than the cost of delay and failure to do our duty.

It was time for immediate action and the whole Nation responded with patriotic abandon. Every able-bodied man was called, every resource used, every source of credit mustered. Our public debt reached a total never before heard of in all history—$29,000,000,000—but no one complained, no one objected, and our national credit was neither exhausted nor endangered.

It was only by these prompt and stupendous efforts that we won the war.

During the war, and after it, as a busy, happy, prosperous nation we began paying that debt faster than any nation had ever paid its debt before, and money flowed into the Treasury in such unprecedented volume that three times were taxes reduced. No great personal or national emergency was ever met and overcome by balancing the Budget.

While sound wisdom in normal times and under normal conditions, it becomes the height of folly and shortsightedness in abnormal times and under abnormal conditions.

Had the Colonies stopped to count the pennies, which were about all they had, there would be no free America to-day. Instead, they issued currency backed by "God and the Continental Congress," and with it the Revolution was won, our country freed, and, incidentally, every cent of that money was redeemed and, incidentally, every cent of that money was redeemed.

In 1861 there was no hesitation, either North or South, about "balancing the budget" before maintaining what they believed to be the right. Abraham Lincoln sent no message to Congress urging that the budget be balanced before we met the emergency of Civil War and sprang to the defense of the Union. Had he done so, he would not now be known as the savior of his country, but as a fit companion for Judas Iscariot and Benedict Arnold. More than three hundred millions of "Lincoln greenbacks" are in circulation in this country to-day, unbacked by anything but faith in America and its ability to pay.

To-day we are confronted by the greatest emergency the great-anything but faith in America and its ability to pay.

To-day we are confronted by the greatest emergency, the greatest peril, our country has ever known. The death toll through suicide alone is almost as great as the total of all our slain on all the battlefields of all the wars America has ever known, and this does not begin to tell the story of the tragic disaster, the details of which have been told only too many times, and which are on every lip and etched with the acid of despair upon millions of American hearts.

lions of American hearts.

Instead of meeting this great emergency of peace with the courage and daring with which we have met the great emergencies of war we have faltered and delayed. For the dying man we have called in the bookkeeper. When the people have asked for bread, we have given them taxes; when they have asked for work, they have been told that the Government must economize and has no have been told that the Government must economize and has no work to offer. Graft, extravagance, and waste should not be allowed at any time. If, and where, they exist it is a serious reflection upon those who have permitted them. But this is the poorest possible time to curtail public works, to reduce salaries that are in keeping with the service rendered, or to eliminate or restrict any useful governmental service. President Hoover was right when he said, a few years ago, that when private enterprise lagged, public enterprise should be speeded up to take its place. He was wrong when he failed to act upon his own advice when the emergency arose where it should have been made effective.

Work and wages, not doles and loans, are what the people need. Profitable employment for both capital and labor is what is wanted. Additional loans or renewals to a business which can is wanted. Additional loans or renewals to a business which can not be made to pay has the same tender quality of mercy as cutting a dog's tail off by inches.

America is a better credit risk to-day than it was when its public debt was $10,000,000,000 more. It is a creditor, not a debtor nation. It has more gold, if that is an important factor. It has more property. It has more men and, through science and invention, their productivity has been quadrupled. Our fields are more fertile, our factories more efficient, our transportation better. Under God's shining sun there is no better credit than that of Under God's shining sun there is no better credit than that of Uncle Sam. And yet we refuse to use that credit even to the extent that we used it to meet the emergency of war, refuse to furnish the lifeblood of industry, refuse to touch the rock of public credit that private enterprise may spring forth and thrive. Do this and soon 120,000,000 busy, happy, prosperous people will be helping to balance the Budget without hardship and without

When the farmers, heretofore the most conservative and law abiding of our citizens, unite to defeat the law it is time that our lawmakers should "stop, look, and listen." If they do not, God save our country—for He alone can do it.

If any country should declare war upon America, as may happen within a year, we would not stop for an instant to balance the Budget. Why hesitate now? Why not exert the great credit power of the United States and initiate such a stupendous program of public works as shall lift us by the boot straps, if necessary, out of this slough of despair and onto the firm ground of national prosperity?

Yours very respectfully,

F. W. MEYERS.

JAMES RIVER AND NEW AND KANAWHA RIVERS WATERWAY

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I introduce a joint resolution, which I ask may be read and appropriately referred.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 257) providing for the investigation, survey, and report of a continuous water line from the James River in Virginia to the New and Kanawha Rivers in West Virginia was read the first time by its title, the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 47) was referred to the Committee on the Library, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Architect of the Capitol, upon the approval of the Joint Committee on the Library, with the advice of the Commission of Fine Arts, is hereby authorized and directed to relocate within the Capitol any of the statues already received and placed in Statuary Hall, and to provide for the reception and location of the statues received hereafter from the States.

BUSINESS AND OPERATION OF THE POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I present for the Record a statement made February 15, 1933, by the Postmaster General, giving a brief résumé of the operations of the Post Office Department during recent years. This statement is a valuable and interesting one and will give a good idea of the magnitude of this great governmental institution and of the efficiency of its operation.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the Record, and it is as follows:

Because nearly everybody is in daily contact with the Post Office Department, as the time approaches when the responsibility of administering the executive branch of the Federal Government, by reason of the mandate of the people will pass to others, perhaps a summary of the major problems encountered by the department during the past four years may be of interest.

At the outset may I remind you that the Post Office Department is basically a business institution; it is a public utility, just as are the railroads, electric-light companies, and telephone com-

At the outset may I remind you that the Post Office Department is basically a business institution; it is a public utility, just as are the railroads, electric-light companies, and telephone companies, differing in the respect that it is Government owned and operated. The War and Navy Departments, the Treasury Department, the State Department, and in fact all the agencies of the Government excepting the Post Office Department, carry on their operations for the common benefit of all our citizens. It is proper, therefore, that they should be supported by general taxation. But the Postal Service supplies an individual need. When it carries a letter, a parcel, or an advertising circular, when it accepts savings deposits, when it transfers money from one city to another, it serves an interest that is not common to the mass of citizens, but personal to the particular patron using the service. So from the earliest Colonial times the effort has been consistently made to support the post office, not out of taxes but out of charges collected from postal patrons.

Because it is a business establishment the Post Office Department has been affected by the present demoralization of business

Because it is a business establishment the Post Office Department has been affected by the present demoralization of business in exactly the same way as enterprises privately owned and operated for profit. Since 1929 about one-third of our business has disappeared. Our revenues for the fiscal year which ended June 30, 1930, were $705,000,000. Last year they were $588,000,000. While they will approximate the same amount this year, they would have shrunk to less than $500,000,000 if the postage rates

May I recount the steps which have been taken to meet this unprecedented loss of revenues? In 1930 the Administration brought to the attention of Congress the advisability of increasing postal rates. Although the depths of the depression had not been sounded at that time and everybody was hoping for a speedy recovery, the Postal Service was even then running behind at the rate of about $60,000,000 a year in its strictly postal operations; that is, not taking into account the merchant marine, and aviation subsidies and the cost of Government mail. We recommended to Congress an increase in the rate of postage on nonlocal letter mail to 2½ cents. We suggested also advances in the schedule of money order and registry fees and we petitioned the Interstate Commerce Commission for permission to revise parcel-post rates upward. We hoped in this way to add to our revenues sufficiently to balance our Budget without calling upon the General Treasury for funds.

Our efforts at first met with no success. Congress, reluctant to vote postage-rate increases, took no action. We closed the books for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1931, with a gross revenue deficiency of $146,000,000, and a deficit in our strictly postal operations of almost $100,000,000, a sum which, of course, had to be made up out of taxes or, in this instance, out of borrowed money, for there was a Treasury deficit that year amounting to almost a billion dollars.

This condition seemed to us intolerable. We could find no justification for mortgaging the country's future to pay a substantial part of the cost of carrying the mail for the present generation; and so in 1931 we urged Congress to authorize a 3-cent rate upon nonlocal letter mail and renewed our recommendations for advances in the schedule of fees for the special services. We also continued to press the Interstate Commerce Commission for action upon our proposal for an upward revision of parcel-post rates.

Again we encountered the same reluctance on the part of Congress to deal with this situation, and, instead of following our recommendations, the Senate, in January, 1932, passed a bill divesting the Interstate Commerce Commission of authority with relation to parcel-post rates. This legislation, which obviously was intended to defeat the department's pending proposal to increase the parcel-post rates, was defeated in the House of Representatives, which was coming to the conclusion that an increase of postage rates was imperative.

You will recall the difficulties which Congress had in the spring of 1932 in agreeing upon tax legislation. After months of controversy, a revenue bill was finally adopted including the department's proposal for a 3-cent postage rate on nonlocal letter mail. Indeed, Congress went further than the department's suggestion and applied the higher rate to local mail as well as to nonlocal. It also substantially increased the second-class rates and approved our recommendations for higher money-order and registry fees. Following this legislative action the Interstate Commerce Commission sanctioned the proposed revision of the rates upon parcel post. With the exception of the new parcel-post rates, made effective October 1, all of these changes took effect at or about July 1, 1932, at which time the department likewise raised the rate on air mail from 5 to 8 cents for the first curice.

made effective October 1, all of these changes took effect at or about July 1, 1932, at which time the department likewise raised the rate on air mall from 5 to 8 cents for the first ounce.

But in the meantime the service had gone through another year at the old rates and with a steadily diminishing mail volume. It closed its books for the fiscal year 1932 with a gross revenue deficiency of $205,000,000 and a deficit in its strictly postal operations of $153,000,000.

At this point you may be interested in the department's views concerning the effect of the 3-cent postage rate upon postal revenues. It is frequently urged by postal patrons that from the standpoint of a balanced Budget the increase in the first-class rate was a mistake; that it has driven much business out of the mails; and that the department would now be getting more business and more revenue had the 2-cent rate on letter mail been continued.

This is an erroneous conclusion. Of course, we can never tell from day to day exactly how our revenues are apportioned over the various classes of mail. When we sell stamps to the public we have no way of knowing whether they will be used on letters or merchandise or for special delivery or even for air mail. Our system of classifying our revenues is based upon a periodical count of all mail at selected offices. Each count extends for one week and covers the volume and weight, as well as the number of pieces of mail of each class. We classify the revenues for the service as a whole and for the year as a whole from the statistics developed by these periodical counts. You will understand that under this procedure we will not be able to estimate accurately the results of the higher letter-postage rate until the returns are in and the computations are completed at the end of the fiscal year. But we do have partial figures which are sufficiently complete to assure us that there is no foundation for the statement that we are losing

I will give you some statistics in the aggregate for 20 of the largest cities in the country, including, of course, New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston, St. Louis, Los Angeles, and other cities in order of population. In the week from June 20 to June 26, 1932, the last complete week under the 2-cent postage rate, the total first-class mailings at these cities, both local and nonlocal, amounted to 93,893,706 postage ounces. In the week from September 19 to September 25, under the 3-cent rate, the total first-class mailings at these cities amounted to 82,969,884 postage ounces of about 11,000,000 postage ounces, or 11,63 per suppose of about 11,000,000 postage ounces. ounces, a decrease of about 11,000,000 postage ounces, or 11.63 per cent. This loss obviously is not attributable entirely to the higher rate, because our volume had been declining steadily for many months prior to the change in the rate, the first-class mallings at these same cities during the June week of 1932 being about angs at these same cities during the June week of 1932 being about 33 per cent below the mailings of the corresponding June week of 1931. But assuming, however, that the entire loss of volume which occurred between June and September is attributable to the increase in the rate, what is the net effect upon the postal revenues?

The revenues at these 20 cities from first-class mailings during the June week at the 2-cent rate amounted to $1,981,691.25. During the September week, with a loss in volume of 11.63 per cent, the revenues from first-class mailings amounted to $2,60 cent, the revenues from first-class mailings amounted to $2,603,-351.01, an increase over the June week of $621,659.76, or 31.37 per cent. For your own city of Chicago, taken alone, the volume during the June week was 14,008,321 postage ounces. In the September week the volume was 11,789,320 postage ounces, a decrease of 2,219,501 postage ounces, or 15.84 per cent. The first-class revenues during the June week were $298,356.61. During the September week they were $373,240.32, an increase of $74,883.71,

The very worst view which we can take of the effect of the higher letter-postage rate on the volume of first-class mail is this: Where we now handle 90 letters at 3 cents, we would be handling 100 letters had the rate been left at 2 cents. Expressed in terms of revenue, it is seen that the revenue upon 90 at 3 cents is $2.70, by comparison with $2, which would be collected on 100 letters at 2 cents.

People are misled by the fact that the postal revenues as a whole are no greater in the aggregate to-day than a year ago, when the letter-postage rate was 2 cents. They jump to the conclusion from this fact that the rate increase has failed of its purpose, and completely overlook the unprecedented decline common to all business which has occurred in mail volume of all classes as the result of business stagnation, which had been continuing for many months before the rate change became effective.

Some part of the loss of revenue is, of course, fairly chargeable to the rate increase. I have in mind particularly a diminished use of the mails by utility companies, municipalities, department stores, and similar establishments, in sending bills and other communications to local patrons who can conveniently be reached by private messenger; but on this point I desire to remind you again that the department did not recommend that the 3-cent rate be applied to local, or drop letters, because local mail costs substantially less to handle than mail destined for out-of-town delivery. Becently we have used Converses to restore the 2-cent delivery. Recently we have urged Congress to restore the 2-cent rate upon this class of mail matter.

So much for the steps which have been taken to maintain our revenues as far as possible in these difficult times. Let us look briefly at the other side of the ledger. Many of you have doubtless been wondering what has been done to reduce postal expenditures, since this would have the same salutary effect upon our Budget as an increase in revenues, and would be much more agreeable to the country as a whole, and to mail users in particular.

It has not so far been possible to bring about a reduction in expenditures in proportion to the decline in mail volume. There are many reasons for this. Numerous of our items of expense are many reasons for this. Numerous of our items of expense are not affected by fluctuations of mail volume. In the rural delivery service, for instance, the annual cost of which is about $100,000,000, our expenses go on at the same level whether the mails are heavy or light. The same thing is true, more or less, of the city delivery service, although in the large cities a lengthening of routes is sometimes possible as volume falls off. Compensation for star-route service is based upon the length of the haul and the frequency of the trips and has no relation to the weight or the volume of the mails. Payments for rail transportation, which amount to approximately $100,000,000 a year, are about equally divided between storage and distribution space. The storage space can be reduced as volume falls, but regardless of volume, distribution space—that is, the railway post-office cars in which our clerks sort the mail on the trains—can not be cut down materially without delaying dispatches, connections, and deliveries. our cierks sort the mail on the trains—can not be cut down materially without delaying dispatches, connections, and deliveries. The same limitation applies to the item of $18,000,000 a year for rented post-office quarters. Clearly there can be no relationship between the volume of our business and the amount of the rentals which we pay our landlords.

A second difficulty about reducing the postal expenditures as volume decreases is the fact that to a large extent we are bound.

A second dimentry about reducing the postal expenditures as volume decreases is the fact that to a large extent we are bound by long-term contracts. Star-route and screen-wagon contracts run for four years. Ocean mail contracts run for 10 years. Our leases for post-office quarters vary in length of time from five to 20 years. Of course, in making new contracts, we are taking advantage of the keener competition and the lower prices which are

About 70 per cent of the budget of the Post Office Department is spent for salaries—the compensation paid to postmasters, clerks, carriers, and the rest of our personnel. The department has no control over its wage scale. Both the wage scale and the hours of labor of postal employees are fixed by Congress, usually upon the labor of postal employees are fixed by Congress, usually upon the importunities of organized postal workers, as is evidenced by the fact that Congress in February, 1931, when the depression was in full force and the cost of living rapidly declining, in spite of the vigorous opposition of the department, reduced the hours of labor of all postal employees from 48 to 44 a week without any reduction in the compensation—adding something like $7,000,000 to our annual costs of operation at a time when we were already running behind at the rate of approximately $100,000,000 a year.

As the force of the business depression grew it soon became

As the force of the business depression grew it soon became apparent, first at the larger cities and gradually throughout the entire country, that our offices were overmanned. Here was a diffientire country, that our offices were overmanned. cult problem. In the same situation a privately owned enterprise would have been compelled to lay off the surplus—to cut its personnel to the number actually required. Many considerations made the Government reluctant to adopt that course. In the first place, we all hoped for many months that the slump was temporary and that our volume would soon come back. On that assumption it seemed unwise to risk the permanent loss of our trained men. There was also the obvious undesirability of throwing several thousand additional persons into the ranks of the unemployed. Then, too, these were civil-service men who had selected Government work as a career and who had always been selected Government work as a career and who had always been assured that so long as they were faithful in the discharge of their duties they were secure against dismissal. So from the earliest days of the depression the administration and Congress agreed upon the policy of retaining in the Postal Service all the regular, permanent personnel, leaving our force to be reduced only by normal processes of separation; that is, by deaths, resignations, retirements, and removals for cause. Under this policy, and with the department powerless to alter either the hours of labor or the rates of compensation of its employees, it is evident that substantial pay-roll savings could be realized but slowly.

However, it must not be understood that postal expenditures have not been materially reduced. We have economized to the fullest extent possible under the limitations and restrictions mentioned and have made effective many improvements in our opertioned and have made effective many improvements in our operations, some of the more important of which are the following:

1. To permit better supervision of our several interrelated services we early reorganized the department at Washington upon functional lines.

2. The larger post offices have been surveyed and reorganized. Simplified methods of distribution have been adopted, nonessential service has been eliminated, and the collection and delivery of the mails have been standardized through the country.

3. We have reorganized the leasing work of the department, and have brought down our total expenditures for rented quarters about 8 per cent.

4. We have established a training school in which new entrants

4. We have established a training school in which new entrants into the inspection service are given instruction in their work so that they may be better prepared to enforce the required standards of performance and efficiency in post-office operations.

5. We have completely overhauled our fleet of more than 8,000 motor trucks, replacing all obsolete and worn-out equipment, and have brought down our expenditures for motor transportation, after including the purchase cost of the new trucks, by about 10 per cent.

6. For the first time in the history of the department a scalesinspection division has been created. This activity, which at regular intervals inspects and adjusts the department's 240,000 weighing devices in the field, is amply justifying itself.

7. We have continuously reduced the storage space used for the transportation of the mails by rail so as to cut down the cost of transportation as nearly as practicable in proportion to the lower volume of mail. Our savings in this item now amount to about 15 per cent of the total compensation formerly paid the railroads.

8. We have accelerated the consolidation of rural routes and

8. We have accelerated the consolidation of rural routes and have reduced the number of such routes by about 3,400.

9. Under the policy of lapsing all nonessential vacancies we have reduced the number of postal employees from 254,956, as it stood on December 31, 1929, to approximately 245,000 at the present time—a reduction of about 10,000 employees.

Strictly as the result of administrative economies, expenditures for nextle chiefts during the fiscal warr which ended Tune 30.

for postal objects during the fiscal year which ended June 30 last were about $24,000,000 less than in 1930. A much more substantial curtailment of expenditures will be possible during the current year, due largely to the provisions of the so-called economy law. The plan urged upon Congress by the President, inonly law. The plan triged upon congress by the Freshterit, involving the furlough of all employees of the Government for 1 month out of 12, will result in savings of about $41,000,000 during the present year. This sum, added to other savings made possible by minor provisions of the economy law and by continuing the policies heretofore discussed, will reduce our gross exing the policies heretofore discussed, will reduce our gross expenditures for the current year, including the shipping and aviation subsidies and the cost of handling the Government's own mail, to not more than $715,000,000, which will be approximately $90,000,000 less than corresponding expenditures in the year 1930. If we deduct the subsidies and other nonpostal items from this total, our expenditure for strictly postal operations in 1933 will be about $673,000,000 by comparison with $775,000,000 in 1930, a reduction of $102,000,000. On this basis, and taking the same figure for the revenues as last year—$588,000,000—our gross revenue deficiency for the current year will be about $127,000,000 and the net, or true, postal deficit approximately $75,000,000.

Last year the gross deficiency of revenues was $205,000,000 and the net deficit more than $153,000,000.

The Post Office Department has a number of important func-tions which are not directly related to the postal business which which are not directly related to the postal business which we are of course required to superintend with the same care which is given to the primary duty of handling the mails. One of these functions has to do with the public building program.

The quarters occupied by post offices of the fourth class are furnished by the postmaster, who is ordinarily a general store-keeper of the community and conducts the post office as an incident to his principal means of livelihood. The Government itself must provide the accommodations for post offices of the first self must provide the accommodations for post offices of the first, second, and third classes—about 15,000 in number. For the most part, these offices are located in rented quarters. Up to five years ago post-office buildings were owned by the Government in only ago post-office buildings were owned by the Government in only 1,200 cities.

Beginning with 1926, Congress has enacted a number of laws providing for the construction of additional Federal buildings. The primary responsibility for carrying out the program which Congress has authorized rests upon the Treasury Department. But since the most of the buildings are intended for the accommodation of post offices, the duty devolves upon the Post Office Department to work out with the Treasury Department the location and the design of hundreds of these buildings. Our aim has been to see that all new post-office buildings are modern in every particular and so located, laid out, and equipped as to permit the conduct of postal operations with the greatest possible efficiency and at the lowest possible cost. Because one of the principal elements of expense in the larger cities has always been the cost of hauling the mails between the railroad station and the post office, in working out the details of the building program every effort has been made to eliminate this haul by placing the post office close to the railroad, and, in fact, whenever feasible, to locate it on a site immediately adjacent to the railway terminal. This has been accomplished in your city of Chicago, also in Minneapolis, St. Paul, Kansas City, New York, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, Boston, and a number of other large cities where new post-office buildings have been completed or are now in the process of construction.

There is, of course, a great economy in this policy. In Chicago alone we estimate that the annual savings in transportation costs which will result from the location of the new post-office building at the railway terminal will be in the neighborhood of a half which will result from the location of the new post-office building at the railway terminal will be in the neighborhood of a half million dollars. Savings in other cities will be in proportion, and in all these places we will not only be able to handle the mail with a much smaller outlay for transportation but we will greatly with a much smaller outlay for transportation but we will greatly expedite the movement of mail matter of all classes, saving anywhere from 30 minutes to 24 hours in the time required for distribution, transfer, and dispatch.

The funds appropriated by Congress to carry out the building program have been allocated by the Treasury and Post Office Departments to cover about 1,100 buildings in cities where the post office has heretofore been in rented quarters and 245 buildings at places where post-office quarters in Federal buildings have become inadequate. In addition to these entirely new buildings, the program includes extensions or annexes to existing buildings in 191 cities. In all 273 projects have now been completed and more cities. In all, 273 projects have now been completed and more than 400 are in process of construction.

Partisanship has not entered into the public-building program. Partisanship has not entered into the public-building program. The necessary legislation was supported in Congress by members of both political parties and the particular projects have been selected with sole reference to the needs of the service. Because the program was authorized before the economic depression reached the acute stage, in recent months, by reason of the Government's financial difficulties, some criticism has been directed to the expenditures which are involved. I believe that this criticism is not justified. It should not be overlooked that in carrying on extensive building operations in these times the Government has not only been able to secure permanent quarters which it has long urgently needed at very low costs, but that in so doing it is making a substantial contribution to industry and employment in hundreds of communities. hundreds of communities.

The ocean mail is another activity which in its broadest aspects is not strictly a part of the postal business. Our foreign mails are of extreme importance to the business interests of the country, as well as to our citizens who have family or social ties abroad. It has, of course, always been the duty of the Post Office Department to move these mails to their foreign destinations as expeditiously as possible; but when we contract with steamship lines for the transit of the foreign mails were here exhibit lines for the transit of the foreign mails we now have an objective which goes far beyond the mere transportation of letters and packages. The Government is using the ocean mail as a medium packages. The Government is using the ocean mail as a median through which to build up the American merchant marine. To this end the Post Office Department is at present paying about $21,000,000 a year for carrying the United States mails to foreign countries over and above what this service would cost at ordinary poundage rates.

Most of us will agree not only that an adequate merchant fleet under our own flag is vital to American commerce and industry in time of peace but that it will be indispensable to the national defense in the event of war. In 1928 Congress passed a law the purpose of which is to place our merchant marine on a basis of equality with the commercial fleets of the other great nations of the world. This law, which is known as the Jones-White Act, authorized Government loans to American shipping companies for the construction of fast, modern passenger and cargo vessels; and it empowered the Post Office Department to enter into 10-year contracts with such companies for carrying the mail on important trade routes, the compensation to be based, not upon the volume of mail carried but upon the size and speed of the vessels and of mail carried but upon the size and speed of the vessels and the mileage of the routes.

The purpose of these contracts is not primarily to furnish means for carrying the mail but to provide funds to equalize the costs of constructing and operating merchant ships between American and foreign operators so that ships of the United States can compete for both cargo and passengers on equal terms with ships under foreign flags. The ultimate object, as I have said, is to build up and maintain a modern and competitive American merchant fleet, to protect and strengthen our foreign trade in all world markets, and to provide a reserve of merchant ships to serve as naval auxiliaries in the event of war. These objects are national in scope. They affect us all, whether we live at the seaboard or in the interior, whether we are manufacturers, merchants, farmers, or wage earners. They have no special remerchants, farmers, or wage earners. They have no special re-lation to the postal service. Ocean mail pay is simply the form in which Congress has elected to extend financial aid to the ship-

In which Congress has elected to extend mancial aid to the snipping industry.

Under the provisions of the Jones-White Act, the Post Office Department has now awarded 44 contracts for ocean mail service on trade routes from American ports. These contracts have all been approved not only by the Post Office Department but by the Shipping Board, the Department of Commerce, and the Navy Department, in so far as their respective interests are involved. They provide compensation at mileage rates for the transporta-tion of the mails, but they also require the shipping companies

They provide compensation at mileage rates for the transportation of the mails, but they also require the shipping companies to build or recondition a large number of vessels to be placed in service on the respective trade routes. The fleet which will ultimately be launched under this program will consist of about a hundred fast cargo and passenger ships, the equal of any vessels of their respective classes under foreign flags. It will aggregate about 900,000 gross tons and will cost the shipping companies approximately $300,000,000. Thirty-four new vessels have now been completed under this program, while 48 old ships have been reconditioned and modernized. All this work has been done in American shipyards by American labor with American materials; and these ships are now carrying the United States flag and American cargo to every important foreign port.

During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1932, the department paid out on ocean mail contracts under the Jones-White Act the sum of $22,400,000. Ultimately, the annual payments will be about $30,000,000, and the aggregate mail pay for the 10-year term on the 44 routes now under contract will be close to $300,000,000.

In these difficult days when every effort is being made to reduce Federal expenditures, there is some agitation to abrogate these ocean mail contracts as a measure of economy. A proposal which undoubtedly had abrogation as its purpose was defeated in the Senate only a few days ago. I can not believe that, regardless of what changes may occur in Congress, the Federal Government will ever repudiate contracts made in good faith with its citizens. The broad question, of course, is whether the policy of subsidizing our merchant marine shall be continued and supported in these stringent times. Every modern sea power has provided ocean mail pay for the ships of its flag. All maritime nations consider that a ship subsidy is justified by the essential public service rendered by their merchant fleets, both in times of peace and in times of national emergency a ship subsidy is justified by the essential public service rendered by their merchant fleets, both in times of peace and in times of national emergency. For generations this has been the policy of Great Britain, France, Germany, and in fact all the great powers of the world. By the merchant marine act of 1928 the United States, after the lapse of many years during which its shipping was swept from the seas by the competition of subsidized vessels of other nations, has now committed itself to this same wise national policy. Only by continuing this policy, and supporting it with the moderate appropriations which it requires, will we be able to revive and maintain our shipping industry. If we continue this policy it will be only a question of a few years when we shall again carry substantially all of our own commerce in our own ships, and regain the commercial and maritime independence which was ours a hundred years ago and without which there can be no hope of final and complete economic recovery.

And what of the air mail? Again I regret to say that there is agitation for the abrogation of contracts and the abandonment of service in the name of economy. In giving consideration to the Post Office supply bill, the Senate has completely eliminated the air mail appropriation for the fiscal year 1934. Although we have hopes that necessary funds may still be provided, it is evident that the air mail service is in grave danger.

In its broader phases the air mail, as the term is popularly used, is not a Post Office activity. While it is true that the immediate object is to provide facilities for the rapid transit of mail matter, the ultimate object goes far beyond that. The ultimate object is to build up a nation-wide network of air lines to carry passengers and express, upon which the transportation of the mails will some day be only an incidental operation as it is to-day on the railroads. day be only an incidental operation as it is to-day on the railroads as to early an incidental operation as it is to-day on the failroads. The payments to the air transport companies under their present contracts with the Government are analogous to payments under the ocean mail contracts. They are calculated to aid in the development of a new and desirable transportation system and to assist the aviation industry in the period of its infancy, until it can become economically independent. These subsidies are calculated to promote the national security by keeping this Nation abreast of the other nations of the world in the art of flying. They are calculated to make this country air-minded, to popularize air transportation and air travel, and to give us the nucleus of the manufacturing resources and the technical and flying personnel which would be essential in time of war. All of these objectives are now in jeopardy by the proposal to abrogate air mail contracts.

The present air mail contracts, or route certificates in legal parlance, have all been awarded under an act of Congress approved April 29, 1930, known as the McNary-Watres Act. They look be-yond the mail service and require the operators to provide ade-quate planes, adequate personnel, adequate ground facilities, and above all, every known device for the safety and protection of passengers.

above all, every known device for the safety and protection of passengers.

Prior to the enactment of the McNary-Watres law in 1930, there was no air transport service in this country worthy of the name. The length of air mail routes in 1929 was about 14,000 miles. In that year the schedules flown with the mails were about 10,000,000 miles, the volume of the mails carried was about 5,600,000 pounds, and the postage revenues were about $4,000,000. The service was fragmentary and incomplete and failed to serve many important sections of the country. The operators derived practically no revenues from passenger or express service. Yet the Government's annual expenditures was approximately $12,-000,000, and the cost of scheduled flying to the Post Office Department was about $1.20 per mile.

In the three years which have elapsed since the enactment of the McNary-Watres law, the air mail map of the country has been completely revised. The service has been extended to all parts of the country; the length of the routes now under contract is almost 28,000 miles; the scheduled service this year will aggregate about 34,000,000 miles, carrying over 8,000,000 pounds of mail, and producing postal revenues of not less than $7,000,000. Yet the total annual expenditures will be only about $19,500,000, or only $7,500,000 more than in 1929. Scheduled passenger service is now provided on virtually all routes, producing revenues during the current year estimated at $6,000,000. The creation by the operators of this nonpostal revenue has enabled the Department to cut the air mail pay progressively from an average of $120 a mile in 1929 utili it is to-day approximately 45 cents a by the operators of this nonpostal revenue has enabled the Department to cut the air mail pay progressively from an average of $1.20 a mile in 1929 until it is to-day approximately 45 cents a mile. With general business recovery, there is every reason to believe that the mail, passenger, and express business of the various air-transport companies will quickly grow to the point where these rates can be cut down to a level approximating the actual value of the transportation service rendered, excluding any subsidy.

Aviation is to-day an industry of constantly growing importance.

Aviation is to-day an industry of constantly growing importance and value to the country. Including the amounts expended by the air mail operators, its gross annual turnover is now about the air mail operators, its gross annual turnover is now about $50,000,000. The Federal Government itself has invested more than $100,000,000 in the industry in the form of mail pay, lighted routes, landing fields, and communication facilities. Municipalities have invested a similar sum in airports. A repudiation of the policy expressed in the McNary-Watres Act would utterly destroy the value of these investments. It would go far to nullify all the progress which has so far been made in the development of this industry and in the construction of a comprehensive air-transport system for this country. In the end it would prove as shortsystem for this country. In the end it would prove as short-sighted, as costly, and unwise as for the city of Chicago, in the name of economy, to eliminate its fire department or to suspend the maintenance and upkeep of its highways.

But I would not overemphasize the Post Office Department's difficulties in these critical times, nor do I fear for its future. The department has a way of its own of winning support for itself. Whether that characteristic is due to the fact that the Postal Service utilizes the minds and muscles of such a vast number of very human beings, nearly one-third of a million in the aggregate, or whether it is due to the fact that the service touches our lives or whether it is due to the fact that the service touches our lives so intimately in its dependable daily routine of carrying our business communications, our money, our merchandise, our messages of love and of sorrow, of this I am sure, that no one can long be engaged in its activities and not hold its functions and its achievements in the highest esteem. And so I am sure that whoever may be charged with the responsibility of directing the department in the years to come will find abiding satisfaction in ever increasing its usefulness—in striving to solve its problems, whatever they may be with fidelity to the public interest and the whatever they may be, with fidelity to the public interest and the best traditions of the service. Postmasters and Postmasters General will come and go, but the Postal Service will carry on.

LIMITATION OF DEBATE FOR THE SESSION

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the following resolution coming over from a previous

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 360) submitted by Mr. Barkley on the calendar day of February 15, as follows:

Resolved, That during the remainder of the present Congress debate on the part of any Senator shall be limited to 1 hour on any measure, including conference reports and amendments between the Houses, and to 30 minutes on any amendment or motion relating thereto.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not care to take the time of the Senate to discuss the resolution. It speaks for itself. We now have less than two weeks before the final adjournment of Congress and there is so much public business of an emergent nature which ought to be transacted before the 4th of March that it seems to me there ought not to be any objection on the part of Senators to the adoption of the resolution, which undertakes to limit debate hereafter to 1 hour on any measure and to 30 minutes on any amendment or motion relating thereto.

It seems to me that would give ample opportunity for the discussion of any measure that is proposed and guarantee to us not only that we shall have time for ample debate, but that the Senate will be able to function in the latter days of the session.

I do not care to discuss the resolution any further. It seems to me the history of the session and of all short sessions has been such as to indicate that we would not only facilitate legislation but the adoption of such a limitation on debate would meet with almost unanimous approval throughout the country.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BARKLEY. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I ask the Senator whether the resolution restricts debate on the part of any Senator to half an hour on conference reports?

Mr. BARKLEY. It limits debate to one hour on conference reports. The 30-minute limitation is on amendments. The limitation of 1 hour applies to measures and conference reports and of 30 minutes to amendments.

Mr. KING. I am in entire sympathy with the purpose of the resolution, but I challenge the attention of the able Senator from Kentucky to the fact that I am advised that the conferees who have under consideration the so-called Bratton amendment and other amendments of an important character have rejected the same. If the conference report, as I understand it has been agreed upon, shall become a law, $200,000,000 or $300,000,000 of economies which the Senate attempted to effectuate will be lost. It seems to me there ought to be ample time when the conference report comes to the Senate to discuss the action of the conferees and point out the result of this action.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is no question that the resolution gives at least an hour to any Senator on a conference report. and also on amendments as between the two Houses. I have no doubt that would include any motion to instruct the conferees or any proceeding with reference to conference reports. The limitation of 30 minutes on amendments would not apply to conference reports.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the resolution which the Senator from Kentucky has presented has some merit in it, and I have a good deal of sympathy with the purpose of it. but I doubt very much whether it would be wise at this stage to pass such a resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. FESS. I would much prefer that whatever be done in this respect be submitted to the Rules Committee, and let us have a rule reported on the matter. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Of course, the objection to that suggestion is that the time remaining between now and the end of the session is so brief that it would be impossible to get action on the resolution if it were referred to a committee. The resolution does not unfairly limit or restrict debate. It does make impossible the carrying on of a filibuster in the closing days of the session. I hope that the Senator may see fit to let the resolution be considered at

Mr. FESS. I recognize the strength of what the Senator from Arkansas has said. In fact, it is a rule that is followed in the House. During the last six days of the session debate there is limited drastically, aside from any regulation the House itself may adopt. It is a rule of the House. I have talked about its being a wise course to follow here, but it | ought to go in the regular form to the Rules Committee.

I recognize the purpose of the Senator, that he might want to cultivate favorable opinion on a limitation of this kind, and he offers it to test the Senate at this time. But here is the difficulty, and I might as well make it clear: For eight days I have been awaiting an opportunity to address the Senate at some length and I can not possibly do it within the time limit fixed by the Senator's resolution. For that reason, with great respect, I could not allow the resolution to come to a vote at this stage.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

INFLATION OF THE CURRENCY

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I have in my hand a communication from one of the best business men in Ohio inclosing certain data. This letter says:

Inclosed is a copy of Rev. Charles E. Coughlin's eight radio broadcasts on the gold standard. If all the outstanding proposals that have been presented to the public go before the leaders in Congress, it would appear that they might have an opportunity of bringing about helpful legislation.

The inclosure mentioned is, in part, in this form:

FEBRUARY, 1933.

My Dear Friend: I am grateful to think that you are interested enough to read these lectures conscientiously.

Before outlining our common plan of action, I want you to realize that in unity there is strength. Neither you nor I can accomplish anything when acting alone. But when hundreds of thousands of us act in unison we can accomplish almost the impossible. impossible.

Thus, here is what I suggest that you do:

Thus, here is what I suggest that you do:

1. If you are convinced that what I have said is substantially true, then take the time within the next two weeks to write 3 letters—1 to your Congressman, 1 to your United States Senator, and 1, a copy of the first 2 letters, to me.

2. In the letters to your Congressman and Senator be brief, but petition him as your Representative to take up the question of revaluating the gold ounce, which is another way of asking to get rid of the famine of money. Suggest that he advocate the correction of the financial abuses which more than anything else have brought us to the brink of ruin.

have brought us to the brink of ruin.

3. Add a short paragraph to your letter petitioning your Senator and your Congressman to work for the elimination of the abuses which are associated with present mass productionism.

4. Ask at least one friend to write a similar set of letters.

Your part in this is important. Each of the hundreds of thousands to whom I am sending this letter must consider himself a crusader in the army.

This is the only constitutional and efficient method which we may adopt. It is the only way to oppose the powerful lobbies who are in Washington seeking to retain the old policies of greed which in the past have resulted in the concentration of the wealth in the hands of a few.

I will preserve a copy of the letter which you send to me.

A list of Senators and Congressmen is included. Find out from this list your own Congressman and your own Senator. Whoever he is, his address is the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

CHAS. E. COUGHLIN.

A copy of the eight lectures that were included by the correspondent I hold in my hand. Here [indicating] is the list of Senators and Representatives to whom it is suggested letters should be addressed. That explains, Mr. President, in part, the tremendous correspondence that many Senators and Representatives have received. My own mail is a flood of demands for relief from what is called a "famine" in the money market. When the flood of letters first began to inundate my office I could not understand the reason for it, except I realized that in periods of depression there is always more or less agitation for a change of the money standard, and I thought probably that was the explanation; but now I have discovered the source of this very heavy correspondence that can not be answered by individual letters; that is simply impossible, and, therefore, I am adopting this method of answering my correspondents on this subject, especially those who are located in Ohio.

Mr. President, in all financial or economic crises remedies are sought, and the supposed remedy, which involves changing the monetary standard of value, is always one of the first to be recommended by a certain type of mind. I do not think that statement can be disputed, and in a crisis so widespread and so deep as the present one, involving so much suffering and so much uncertainty, I can easily understand why there would be considerable agitation on the part of certain types of mind advocating as a remedy what may be termed a debasement of the currency.

Cheap money has always been regarded as a panacea. It was so in colonial days, when the issue of continental money reached such an amount as to become practically worthless; and to indicate that a thing was of but little value the expression "It is not worth a continental" became current and remains to this day. So in Rhode Island there was such an unlimited issuance of paper money that that State was nicknamed "Rogues' Island" because of its effort to alter contracts by changing standards of value. The same thing occurred during the middle of the last century. It was what produced the greenback craze. When we were confronted by a great Civil War and our money seemed to be exhausted, we had to resort to the issuance of a paper currency. The first effort by the Secretary of the Treasury in that direction was the issuance of $60,000,000 of greenbacks, but in connection with that issuance there was a redeeming feature in that there was written into the greenback contract the words "redeemable on demand in gold." Consequently, the first issue remained worth 100 cents on the dollar, but with the progress of the war and the greater or less destruction of values we launched further upon the issuance of greenbacks. We could not pay on demand in gold, so we issued $400,000,000 of greenbacks not redeemable in gold on demand. The result of that, as everybody knows, was a decline in the value of the dollar to 35 cents, and its value remained at 35 cents until, in the administration of President Hayes, with John Sherman as Secretary of the Treasury, it was announced that after four years, ending on January 1, 1879, the Treasury would pay to any holder of greenbacks 100 cents on the dollar in gold.

It was thought by the public that the country had reached a point where that could be done; and the result of that announcement was that the greenback that had been commanding only 35 cents commanded 100 cents, and from that day to this there has been a flotation of greenback dollars in a limited amount. To-day the amount is $346,000,000, and it changes not from year to year, as the Federal reserve notes change according to the amount of reserves deposited in the Federal reserve banks. The result is that the greenback dollar is worth a hundred cents, no matter whether it is exchanged in America or in any other country.

When we issue an increased volume of money without a backing of gold, the difficulty always arises that we must keep the redemption feature in such money, and the issue must be within the limit of our ability to redeem; otherwise it would depreciate as the original $400,000,000 of greenbacks depreciated, or precisely as the German mark depreciated. So the history of these crises, such as that of 1893. which was followed by the craze for the free and unlimited coinage of silver-an issue which was raised in 1896-shows that a demand for a change in the money standard is a response to a desire on the part of the people who are suffering that a remedy be applied. So much for that policy, as we view it from the standpoint of history. As was once said, "Our only guide in the future is the lamp of experience."

Now, Mr. President, the proposals for inflation are numer-There is a proposal to inflate the gold dollar by a devaluation of its gold content. There is another proposal to inflate paper money by increasing its issue, whether it be fiat or whether it be based on a further issuance of scrip for service. For example, there was a bill passed by the House of Representatives which provided for the issuance, without any redemption feature, of $2,200,000,000 in the form of scrip to be paid to the veterans. It was claimed that that would not be any charge on the Treasury because it would not come from the Treasury, but would be based only on the authority of the Government to issue that amount of additional money in the form of irredeemable scrip. It was assumed that if the Government would add to the circulation an amount sufficient to pay the bonus to the soldiers, the Treasury would be relieved from any burden and at the same time the scrip would be money worth 100 cents on the dollar. That is impossible not only in theory but in practice, as demonstrated by both economic philosophy and history.

Then another form of inflation has been proposed. It is said we have a deficit of three and a half billion dollars, representing Government obligations which it must pay in money. It has been suggested that we could safely issue sufficient scrip to cover the three and a half billion dollars and not make it redeemable at the Treasury, and therefore not collectible from the people in the form of taxation. That is another form of inflation that would be very unwise, for the scrip thus issued would be purely flat money. Thus we see the various forms of inflation.

I am frank to say that the bill introduced by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson], and also that which is sponsored by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Hastings] have my sympathy. That proposed legislation does not have the element of inflation, although it is claimed by some that it has certain features of inflation. That measure looks only to the relief of the debtor by either giving him more time or giving him a lower rate of interest or giving him an opportunity of shaving down the principal. In other words, it is an attempt to relieve a situation that is a very unfortunate one. I frankly say that effort has my sympathy, and I shall be willing to give my support to some measure of that kind. That measure, however, does not involve the question we are afraid of here.

What disturbs me is the strength of the demand that is growing in the country for a change in our money system. It is said we do not necessarily want to go off the gold basis, but we must change; and the most seductive suggestion that is made is that we should devalue the gold dollar. For example, we have in the United States $4,000,000,000 in gold stock, representing 40 per cent of the gold of the world. In our present gold dollar there are 23.22 grains of gold, and if we would reduce the gold content and make it 11.61 grains, or just reduce it by half, the proponents of that plan claim that that would double our circulation and that instead of having $4,000,000,000 in gold we would have $8,-000,000,000 in gold; so that instead, then, of it taking 23.22 grains of gold to pay a dollar's worth of debts, 11.61 grains of gold would pay a dollar of indebtedness. The claim is that by a stroke of the legislative pen we could double our monetary gold. It is argued because a debt that was contracted 10 years ago was in a dollar that is cheaper than the dollar of to-day that, in common honesty, we ought to take this step.

In the first place, that is theoretically wrong and practically wrong; and, in the second place, it would not do what the proponents of the proposal indicate a belief that it would do. In other words, purchasing power is not money; it is a thing for which money is paid. Purchasing power results from the payment of money for service rendered; the money is not purchasing power; and if we, by an act of Congress, should decrease the ounces of gold in a gold dollar one-half in order that one could pay his debts by half the number of grains now required, that would not increase the purchasing power of the country one whit. It might in a sense for a time lift the price level, but the higher level would not continue, and ultimately the price level would go below what it had previously been.

Mr. President, that claim is based on the contention that there is not enough gold to support our financial structure and we must increase our supply of gold; that while we can not increase the product, we will increase the number of dollars derived from the same product.

In the first place, there is enough gold, so far as our past practice goes. There is more gold to-day than ever before. The truth about the matter is that we have more gold in stock now than we had in 1929, at the peak of our business activity. Not only that, but we mined more gold last year than ever before in any one year in the history of the world. We mined $475,000,000 worth of gold last year, and never before in the history of the world has so much gold as that been mined in a year. In other words, we added to the monetary value of the gold stock in the last year the enormous amount of $475,000,000, and from 1922 to 1932 we lifted the gold stock from $5,000,000,000 to $12,000,000,000; so that there is more monetary gold in the world to-day than there ever has been before.

Not only that, but there has been a change in the use of gold so that less gold is being used as a commodity to-day in manufactured articles sold as gold than is usual. In other words, more gold is being released for monetary purposes than in any previous year in our history.

So it would seem to me that the argument that we do not have sufficient gold is a fallacious one. Of course, if we mean that every transaction is to be conducted in gold, we do not have enough. We do not have one-tenth enough. That, however, is not the way business is done. Ninety per cent of all the transactions in the world are carried on without either gold or currency. They are carried on by credit as represented by deposits in the various banks of the country; and all that we need is the ability to redeem, in cases of emergency, the outstanding money that is based upon gold.

So, Mr. President, this contention that we do not have sufficient gold to do the money work of the world does not hold, either in history or in practical operation. As I have stated, we have more gold to-day than we had in the palmiest days of our greatest business activity.

Then, on the other hand, we have the currency in addition to the gold. That currency, as everybody recognizes, takes four or five forms. The gold that is in the form of bullion can be doing work by its representative out in the markets in the form of gold certificates.

I have here a table, Mr. President, that is most illuminating. This table shows the total of all the paper money in its various forms.

On January 1, 1932, there were outstanding $1,751,000,000 and a fraction in gold certificates; $494,241,000 and a fraction in silver certificates; $1,230,000 in Treasury notes; $346,000,000 in greenbacks; $2,863,000 Federal reserve bank notes—that is a very negligible sum; and $2,926,000,000 in Federal reserve notes.

That was on January 1, 1932. On April 1 the gold certificates had dropped from $1,751,000,000 to $1,591,000,000. The silver certificates had dropped $2,000,000 to $492,000,000. The silver certificates had dropped $2,000,000 to $492,000,000. The Treasury notes of 1890, the old Sherman notes, were so negligible in amount that there was only $1,225,000 out; but the greenbacks remained exactly the same, $346,000,000. The Federal reserve notes, which are the flexible notes have dropped to $2,316,000,000; and the national-bank notes had jumped from $710,000,000 to $737,000,000. So that the total paper money on January 1, 1932, was $6,233,000,000, and on April 1 of the same year it was a little less—$5,989,000,000.

Then, as we go from April 1 to September, the gold certificates had dropped from $1,751,000,000 to $1,469,000,000 and a fraction, while the total paper money remained about the same—$6,151,000,000.

Now, Mr. President, I want the Members of the Senate especially to see the effects of two bits of legislation here. The first was when, under the Glass-Steagall bill, we expanded the base of the Federal Reserve System to release a certain amount of gold. We stated that we could release $800,000,000 of gold; but it will be noticed that with this liberalization, both in the Steagall bill and in the Borah amendment to the home loan bank bill—the one to increase the issuance of Federal reserve notes, the other to increase the issuance of national-bank notes—when we passed these measures there was a slight increase, but in a very short time the total dropped back again to the uniform number of dollars.

Now let me illustrate with these two measures. One of t them, the Borah amendment, was passed in August of 1932. The other one, the Steagall bill, was passed in June. The month the Steagall bill was passed, authorizing the release of gold to increase the Federal reserve notes, $263,000,000 of additional notes were issued. The very next month, July, the amount jumped from $263,000,000 to $606,000,000; then the next month, August, it increased to $623,000,000. In September it dropped from $623,000,000 to $578,000,000, nearly $50,000.000. The next month it dropped to $503,000,000 from $578,000,000; that is $15,000,000. The next month, November, it dropped to $451,000,000. In December it dropped to $414,000,000, and in January to $428,000,000. But on the first of February—that is, this month—that issue dropped to $306,000,000. The month after the Glass-Steagall bill passed, authorizing the enlargement of the Federal reserve notes by releasing gold through the substitution of United States bonds, there was an increase of $606,000,000, and a year afterward the increase was only $306,000,000.

Exactly the same thing is true of the issuance of national-bank notes. I am trying to indicate here that we can not pump currency into circulation if we have not any business to demand the currency, no matter how much legislation we pass here.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. FESS. I yield to my friend.

Mr. PITTMAN. The question necessarily arises, in considering that circle, How are we going to have any business if we do not have any currency in circulation?

Mr. FESS. Let us not put the horse at the wrong end of the cart. We can not have circulation without business; and if we have business, the circulation comes as a result.

Mr. PITTMAN. It seems that we can not have businessthat is, that we can not raise commodity prices-without circulation.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, there is the difficulty. We can issue any amount of money that Congress decides; but if we do not give the people confidence in that currency, so that business can afford to employ it, the currency goes in the banks and stays there. No man is going to take the risk of investing money in any enterprise unless he knows what is to be the character of that money; and when we are tampering with this subject we are defeating the very purpose we have in mind, namely, to instill confidence in the man who invests. No man alive is going to take any risk to-day in the way of enlarging business until he knows what is going to be the policy on the question of inflating the currency.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In other words, so far as business is concerned, the controlling factor is less the volume of currency than it is the velocity of its turnover?

Mr. FESS. Absolutely. No matter how much the volume is, if there is not some assurance that business is going to have a return in some profit, business at this day is not going to venture, and money will not be used, no matter how much there is in the vaults.

Take the illustration of the Borah amendment. That is another amendment designed to increase the volume of currency. Our present national banking system depends upon United States bonds upon which currency is issued. The Borah amendment suggested that we enlarge that. The present system rests upon the 2 per cent bonds. This amendment went beyond that, and included the three and a fraction per cent bonds, in order that it might be an invitation for the issuance of more notes. Now, let us see what happened.

The month after that amendment was passed, on August 1, there was $4,535,000 of additional national-bank notes, especially from the Borah amendment. The next month it jumped to $68,000,000, meaning an advance of $64,000,000. go uncompromisingly along with that suggestion without fur-

The next month it went to $111,000,000, or $50,000,000 more. The next month it went to $131,000,000, or $20,000,000 more. The next month it went to $152,000,000, or a little over $20,000,000 more. The next month it was $159,000,000. The next month it was $162,000,000. The last month that I have is February, this month, when it was $162,612,000. But while there was an increase in that column, watch the column of the old national-bank circulation and see how that decreased.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the Senator is speaking about something increasing. Will he tell the Senate what was presumed to be increasing during this period of time?

Mr. FESS. I referred to an increase in the issuance of national-bank notes.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Senator is not clear. Does he mean bank notes or dollars?

Mr. FESS. No; bank notes.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. What do the bank notes represent?

Mr. FESS. The amount of money the bank notes would represent. If there is one bank note for $5, that would be a $5 note. I mean exactly what the Senator means, that when there are national-bank notes we do not say they are all $1 bills or all $2 bills or all $20 bills. We speak of the bills as money, without designating their denomination.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Is it not true that the Senator is trying to say that circulation was increased by so many dollars through these banks increasing their circulation?

Mr. FESS. No. I am showing that under the Borah amendment there was an increase of issuance, and now I am going to show that there was a decrease of the old nationalbank notes as the new were increased, if the Senator will just wait. I am about to give the figures.

Let it be remembered, Mr. President, that the nationalbank note which is originally based upon bonds, to which the Borah amendment would add, is resting upon a 2 per cent bond, while the Borah amendment rests upon a three and a fraction per cent bond, and as these bonds were taken up and notes issued, the old bonds would be decreased and the notes would be reduced. That is what I want to show.

During the month when the Borah amendment was agreed to there were $668,000,000, and the Borah amendment added $4,000,000. The next month the old bank notes amounted to $665,000,000, or $3,000,000 less. The second month after that the amount was $664,000,000, $1,000,000 less. next it was $659,000,000, a drop from $664,000,000, or $5,000,000 less. Two months later it was $637,000,000, dropping from $659,000,000 to $637,000,000. The next it was $632,000,000, and that was in the present month, February. So that while the reduction in the old bank notes is not quite as great as the increase in the new bank notes, the figures indicate that by a new régime, under which new notes are being issued, the old notes are accordingly decreasing as the new ones are increased.

Mr. President, what does that mean? It means that with a certain scale of business a certain amount of money is needed, and it is impossible to pump into circulation more money than the scale of business then existing will demand. If more money is pumped in, there will be an increase in one place and a decrease at another place.

So much for the effort to increase the currency by decree of the Government. It does not matter whether it is gold certificates that are being increased. Of course, the gold certificate is equivalent to gold, because it is redeemable in gold at any time. It does not matter whether it is the silver certificate. That makes no difference either, because the silver certificate can be redeemed at any time.

I digress here long enough to say that the only suggestion I have read in regard to this question of money which appeals to me as being based upon a sound principle is the suggestion made by the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], when recently he tendered the proposal of the use of a certain amount of silver at a price. I am not ready to ther consideration, but as far as I have looked into it, it | seems to me that it has two or three qualities which ought to enlist our interest. It is not based on an increase in circulation. That premise is false, because it matters not how much the circulation is increased by decree, there must be business enough to make the money work, or the currency will go into idleness. But the proposal of the Senator is the use of a medium of exchange well understood by certain countries which do not have the gold standard, and it would appear to me that in that degree the proposal demands our very careful attention. It appeals to me to be sound, in that it would facilitate business with those coun-

There is another thing to which I might call attention. There is no doubt but that any effort toward the use of silver will appreciate the value of silver up to a certain point. Of course, this suggestion of the Senator from Nevada is not linked with the foolish fallacy of the unlimited coinage of silver, throwing silver and gold into competition, circulating one with the other as rivals. Under that system the cheap dollar would immediately drive out of circulation the dearer dollar and we would be on the cheap-metal basis at once. The Senator avoids that, and while I say to him that I am not certain whether his proposal entails anything that is dangerous. I have not seen anything in the suggestion that appealed to me as dangerous. The proposal he has made appeals to me as worth while, and I want to give it more consideration than I have been able to give it up to this

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am very much pleased that the Senator is looking on the legislation I have proposed with so much interest. I wish to confirm his statement by saying that recently I testified before the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures of the House of Representatives, at which time I emphatically stated that this measure for the purchase of United States produced silver could not in any sense be considered as an expansion measure, because the total amount of silver produced in the United States last year was only 24,000,000 ounces. At the present price of silver, 25 cents an ounce, six or seven million dollars would purchase it all. I stated that the object of the bill was solely to offset the unnatural supply of silver being thrown on the world market by reason of the melting up of silver coins of India under the Indian policy. It would be only an offset, and it would restore the normal demand of the world, which, I believe, would bring the price of silver back to where it was before this abnormal condition was brought about.

Then, too, it would restore the depreciated currencies of China, and they are depreciated. The silver currencies, the same as the gold-standard currencies of the rest of the world, have been depreciated. It would restore those depreciated currencies to where they were before the dumping took place. That should, in the nature of things, enable the people of those countries to purchase more from us as a result of the doubling of the purchasing power in gold-standard countries, such as ours, and should, in my opinion, restore our exports to China to normal. They have now fallen off 75 per cent.

Mr. FESS. I thank the Senator. The observations the Senator made a few days ago I thought were pretty strong in urging two lines which I think we would be justified in undertaking. The Senator has reinforced my view that he is not advocating an effort to expand the currency by the use of silver.

Another thing the Senator mentioned the other day which I think is still an additional reason—that is, the value of permitting certain countries to pay a proportion of the debts they owe us in silver at a certain rate. That is of value also, and I think it deserves consideration.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question.

Mr. FESS. Certainly.

Mr. PITTMAN. This is the first time the bill I introduced has been mentioned on the floor of the Senate since I made the statement with regard to it, and I want to say that I do not expect any action on the bill at this session of the Congress, naturally, but I would like to have the opinion of the Senator from Ohio on this question: If India, which desires to get rid of three or four hundred million ounces of silver to balance her currency, as they state, should be willing to pay Great Britain in silver, at the world market price of silver, the $85,000,000 they owe her, and Great Britain should be willing to pay to the United States $74,000,000 on the interest installment due on June 15 out of that payment made by India, at the same market price, and that silver, under the terms of the bill which I have introduced, should be impounded in the Treasury of the United States and $74,000,000 of silver certificates issued against it, that being the exact amount of the payment due, retaining the rest of the silver there, which would be four times the amount of the silver certificates issued, would that, in the Senator's opinion, be any extensive expansion of currency in this country?

Mr. FESS. I think not. The paper currency here, including the gold and silver certificates, amounts to about six and a half billion dollars. Then we have a small amount of gold stock. I doubt whether that small amount would have very much, if any, effect.

The three things in the Senator's proposal which appealed to me were, first, that it would facilitate our trade with the countries on a silver standard; and it seems to me that is not controverted. The second was that it certainly would enhance the price of one of the valuable products of the United States. Then it might make it easier for debtor countries to pay debts they are trying to get rid of without any particular sacrifice on our part. Those are the three things which appealed to me in the address of the Senator, and I read his remarks afterwards in the RECORD, and I promise him to go along in a further study of his proposal. My thought was that I am not led into the fallacy that our evil is a lack of money, and that we ought therefore greatly to expand the currency. That is a feature I contest, because it certainly is fallacious.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield. Mr. DILL. Does not the Senator think that we might well use the proposal of the Senator from Nevada that we accept silver for some of these payments which we are entitled to have in gold as a bargaining point to induce countries like England and France to stop the dumping of silver at a price below a fixed minimum agreed upon in the world conference?

Mr. FESS. That is a consideration I had not thought of. As I think of it now, it seems to me to have some merit.

Mr. DILL. It seems to me the important thing is to stop the rise and fall of silver, and that would be a weapon

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I was addressing myself to the volume of money. I referred to the gold stock known as monetary gold in the country used for money. I also referred to the five kinds of paper money that we have. One kind of paper money that is elastic is the Federal reserve note, and I would like to have the attention of the Senate to that for a moment.

The greenback has not increased in number. It was $346 .-000,000 originally decided upon by the specie resumption payment law and it is that to-day. The national bank note does not increase very much. It is capable of increasing if business would demand it, but it is more or less stationary. The silver certificate is more or less stationary. The gold certificate can vary, of course, because, if people prefer to have paper money instead of gold coin, it can be done if we desire to do it. The only difficulty is that when we talk about gold stock and gold certificates, if we are not sharp in our discrimination we will be duplicating because, when the gold is in the Treasury and its representative is out in the form of a certificate, we ought not to count both of them as a part of the circulating medium. If we need any more, if there is any desire to have a greater amount of circulating medium beyond the $45 per capita that we now have, the best way to do it will be through the Federal reserve note issue.

The purpose of the Federal reserve act was to find what up to that time we had never yet discovered, namely, a currency that was elastic. I have heard Senators on both sides of the Chamber, well equipped on this subject, very often discuss the elasticity of the Federal reserve system. I think it is the best system that any country has yet undertaken to use. Prior to 1913, when a farmer was gathering his crop in the fall of the year, when he needed a little ready money to transport his product he could not get it. Money was not fluid. It would not flow from one section to another. When he needed it, it might be in some other locality.

The Federal reserve system, after months and even years of consideration, including the famous monetary commission that went to Europe and made its report in 1908, was the answer to the need for an elastic currency. While it is based upon gold there is a limit to the amount of gold necessary, only 40 per cent. It is based also upon gilt-edged commercial paper acceptable to the Federal reserve bank that will issue, under the authority of the Federal Reserve Board in accordance with the act, the amount of money that is needed. If a member bank is in need of additional currency, all it needs to do is to take its gilt-edged commercial security and deposit it with the Federal reserve bank and take away, in the form of borrowings, whatever is needed that is secured by the gold and the gilt-edged commercial paper.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. FESS. I yield for a question.

Mr. LONG. I understand it is admitted that we have about $200,000,000,000 of debts contracted and about 60 per cent value in the dollar. Those debts to-day will amount to over $500,000,000,000. How does the Senator think we will ever be able to pay out unless we reflate or decrease the value of the dollar?

Mr. FESS. To answer the question specifically I want, first, to discuss the question of whether that would be the proper thing to do, and, secondly, whether it would be needful to do it even if we thought it proper.

Mr. LONG. But the point we are up against absolutely is the fact that we have in the standard value of the dollar $500,000,000,000 worth of debts, which is about twice as much as the estimated wealth of the United States in good times. How are we ever going to pay out?

Mr. FESS. I am coming to that very shortly. I do not want to go into that question immediately, but I shall come to it very soon. In other words, I am discussing now the possibility of increasing the circulating medium through the Federal reserve note. We can increase to any amount demanded by business. If we increase it beyond that amount it will immediately flow back, because we can not, as I have stated, force money into circulation, no matter in what form it is, unless there is business to employ it.

This is what I have in mind. On January 20, 1932, Federal reserve borrowings, which represent notes, were $819,000,000. The reserves which represented the security for which notes may be issued were $1,972,000,000. The deposits in the banks at that date were $27,200,000,000 and the loans and investments of the banks represented $30,000,000,000. That was a year ago.

On July 21, 1932, just six months later, the borrowings, which represent the issuance of Federal reserve notes, fell from $819,000,000 to $538,000,000, and yet the reserve jumped from $1,972,000,000 to $2,036,000,000, the deposits decreased from $27,000,000,000 to $25,000,000,000, and the reduction in loans and investments was about the same.

On January 18, 1933, just last month, the borrowings of the member banks from the Federal reserve banks, which represent the additional increase in the Federal reserve notes, were only $249,000,000, while a year ago they were $319,000,000. This is less than one-third. What does that mean? It does not make any difference whether we broaden, by the Glass-Steagall bill, the base of the Federal reserve system so we can release the gold and issue more notes. It does not make any difference how much legislation we enact we are not going to issue the additional currency unless there is borrowing, and there will be no borrowing when there is no business, no matter how much we issue. Of course, the Glass-Stegall bill was not to issue notes, but to release gold by accepting United States bonds. Volume of money, therefore, is not the thing that is the determining factor. The issue is the lack of employment of the money that we have. Our concern should not be to try to increase the money at the cost of its value, but to try to stimulate business in order that it may employ the money that we now possess, and have it increased as business increases.

While the borrowings last month were only $249,000,000, yet the reserve was $2,545,000,000. There is enough reserve so that we could increase the issuance of currency almost ten times what it is. Why is it not increased? We ask what is the use to issue more money if there is no one to use it, because there is no business going on? We may issue to our heart's content, but how are we going to get that money to business? Are we going to give it to them? We have to have the prospect of profitable business before the business man will risk the borrowing of money.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. BROOKHART. I would like to ask the Senator, if that money were issued to balance the Budget, whether it would not be put out in circulation?

Mr. FESS. It would.

Mr. BROOKHART. If it were issued to relieve agriculture, to remove the exportable surplus from the domestic market, would not that put it in circulation among the farmers?

Mr. FESS. That Mr. President, is an inflationist suggestion. In other words, it is suggested that instead of collecting money from tax sources that represents service, to pay the deficit, the thing to do is to issue money and pay the cost of Government without collecting any taxes. That would be a rosy thing to do, would it not? That is exactly what the Senator suggests.

Mr. BROOKHART. I will ask the Senator again, if that money were put in circulation, whether he concedes it would restore business?

Mr. FESS. No; I do not.

Mr. BROOKHART. Then could we not collect taxes and redeem the currency?

Mr. FESS. I do not concede that it would restore business. That is the very thing that would smite business, and send us to the rocks.

Mr. BROOKHART. The Senator concedes that if gold were put in circulation it would restore business.

Mr. FESS. No; the only thing that will put money in circulation is business that can employ service and produce commodities. The Senator holds that putting money in circulation provides business, when as a matter of fact business puts money in circulation. He has the horse at the wrong end of the cart.

Mr. BROOKHART. The Senator has the horse in the cart, I think.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I do not yield further. I suggested the other day to my friend the Senator from Iowa that I wanted to talk about an hour and a half or two hours on this subject and the Senator from Iowa promised me that he would take four hours to answer me. He can have his time. I shall not let him do it in my time.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I am very much in sympathy with what the Senator is saying. I can not see for the life of me how anybody can believe that money put out, just poured out or printed by printing presses and put out, is going to help anything or anybody. As the Senator suggested, it must be a productive business, it must be a going concern.

Mr. FESS. Absolutely. The Senator is correct.

Mr. COPELAND. I think the Senator is right in that statement. I wonder if the Senator agrees with me in this further respect. To my mind the bankers have become so hysterical that they are in many instances refusing loans which in normal times would be loans they would gladly make. In consequence business has dried up. The merchant can not fill his shelves; neither can the manufacturer operate his plant, because he can not get any money from the bank.

I realize that the banker must be conservative. He has a fiduciary relationship which he can not forget. Nevertheless if a doctor had practiced medicine and made such a failure of his business and his patients all died, he would be arrested for malpractice and sent to jail for at least a hundred years. The bankers of the country have made greater mistakes, in my opinion, than any doctor ever did. The Senator from Ohio is entirely right.

Mr. FESS. What the Senator from New York said just now has been in my mind very much and I have often spoken about it; that is, in a sense the greatest hoarders we have are the bankers. The Senator from New York, however, must concede that the banker who handles another man's money which is deposited in trust in his bank must have pretty good assurance that when he loans money it will not be lost but can be repaid to him. That is the other side to the question. I am looking at both sides. We can not have business without credit. We will not back commercial credit without confidence. We seem to be on a dead center. If we could only get connection again between credit and confidence we could again move the car off of dead center and start business; there would be no trouble. There is an adequate amount of money in the country that will flow into business just as soon as there is security that business will not suffer from losses, but will have profit. How are we going to do that thing is the problem, in my mind, and in the minds of every responsible legislator.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield for just one question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Does the Senator from Ohio in any particular criticize the banks for their present inactivity in making loans?

Mr. FESS. I think they are ultraconservative. I think they are subject properly to some criticism, but I can see their side of it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Senator realizes that the bankers are not lending their own money. They are the guardians and trustees of the funds in their banks. To make my question specific, suppose that the Senator had $1,000,000 in money in a bank that was drawing no interest, what would the Senator now loan any part of that money on in the way of security?

Mr. FESS. Does the Senator mean if I were a banker?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. No; if the Senator had money of his own that was drawing no interest, what is there in the country that is sufficiently secure and productive and profitable that the Senator would feel free to loan his own money upon it?

Mr. FESS. I frankly confess to the Senator that the question of what one is to do with any money that he may have, I am not disturbed about, because I do not have any; but if I did have, if it were invested in real estate the taxes are so high that they would eat it up, and if it were invested in a business the business might go "flooey" and the money would be lost. So it is a difficult problem to say how the money should be invested in abnormal times like these.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Then does not the Senator think that we are unjust when we criticize the bankers for not making loans under present conditions?

Mr. FESS. I want frankly to state that the banker has something on his side for the contention he makes, because he is loaning the money of somebody else.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a moment?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I want to say, for my part, that while I have sympathy for the banker, yet, after all, as I view it, the banks are now no better than pawnshops. If a man is fortunate enough to have a thousand dollars in bills and takes them to a bank, he can go to the bank a couple of weeks later and get the same bills. The banks have ceased to function as banks. While under present circumstances there ought to be great conservatism on the part of the bankers, yet it seems to me they have practically dried up credit; consequently there is no money in circulation, as the Senator from Ohio so well says, and there can not be a resumption of business in America, in my opinion, until the banks function as banks and not as pawnshops. That is the way I feel about it.

Mr. FESS. There is something to what the Senator from New York says.

Mr. President, I was referring to the question of elastic currency and showing that if we need additional currency there is no reason in the world why we can not get it under our present system. For example, in January, 1933—that was last month—the total reserves were $3,418,000,000; that amount representing Federal reserve issues. The Federal reserve notes amounted to $2,687,000,000, and 40 per cent of those Federal reserve notes, of course, would have to be covered by gold. That would require only $1,074,000,000. Thirty-five per cent of $2.644,000,000 would be $925,400,000. These two items amount to $1,999,400,000, or an excess of reserve over and above the Federal reserve issues of $1,417,-000,000, indicating that we have not even touched the edge of our ability to increase the Federal reserve notes if it were thought wise to increase their issue. That they are not increased is not because we can not increase them nor is it because some one thinks we ought not to increase them in order that we may contract the currency. Whenever a member bank borrows from a Federal reserve bank and deposits securities to secure that borrowing, it takes the money and employs it for the purpose it intended when the investment comes to maturity and the money is repaid to the member bank. The member bank will then take up the commercial paper that was deposited as security with the Federal reserve bank. Of course, the borrowing is then paid and that much currency goes out of circulation, for it has been redeemed. That is not contracting the currency; that is the process of elasticity, according to which when an obligation requires the issuance of additional money and that obligation is paid, then the basis of that issuance is no longer in existence.

It is argued on the floor of the Senate that to-day the Federal reserve banks may issue $500,000,000 additional notes and then in a little time may contract that issue to the amount of $500,000,000. Of course they do; they contract the issuance of notes when the borrowed money is repaid; the borrowing represents the obligation, and when it is paid those notes are retired. It is not a policy of contracting; it is a policy of business.

If we issue $1,751,456,019 gold certificates and then those gold certificates are redeemed by the same amount of gold, of course the gold certificates are retired, but that does not mean that we have contracted the currency; it means that the currency is there, only in a different form. So it is in the reserve issue. The difficulty is the inflationist can see no justification in not keeping both the certificate and gold in circulation.

So the idea that the Federal Reserve Board has pursued a policy that is dangerous to business and the charge that when they are ordered by us to enlarge the circulation they turn about and contract it are wholly without foundation. The currency is enlarged by an increase of business, and when the obligation is paid, of course, the security upon which the currency was issued is redeemed, and then the amount issued has to be retired, just as gold certificates are retired when gold is issued for them. So the idea that has been expressed here so often on the floor of the Senate in regard to this form of contraction of the currency seems to me to be very erroneous.

There is another consideration that I do not think I will take the time to discuss, in reference to the amount of monetary gold stock in contrast with bank deposits and also the ratio of the gold to deposits. I am inserting the figures in the Record.

Gold stock in United States 40 per cent, compared with bank deposits

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Johnson in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have been following the Senator's argument, and it is quite logical in many respects; but I believe it comes to the point where it seems necessary that we shall increase business. How shall we increase business? How can we increase business? That seems to be the key of the situation. I should like to have the Senator's suggestions as to how we may increase business.

The Senator will recognize, I think, that world trade is badly hampered by the lack of a world metallic medium of value. Generally speaking, it seems to be recognized, since 30 nations have gone off the gold standard, including England, that there is not sufficient gold to stabilize the currency of the world, and that is reflected in conditions here. Look at our exports and our imports falling off almost to one-third or perhaps one-half of what they used to be.

Mr. FESS. The Senator from Louisiana propounded a question to me in reference to the debts, and I told him that I would reach that subject in time, and the question the Senator from Florida has propounded I will also reach in the course of what I have to say. I desire to proceed, if possible, in an orderly way.

My first contention was that there was sufficient gold, and I discussed that phase of the subject. Next I referred to the currency in the form of paper. I have just concluded that. I will be able to go on with the questions referred to later.

As I stated earlier in my remarks, we have more currency now than we had in 1929, the peak of business activity.

December, 1931, it was $5,646,577,888. December, 1932, it was $5,676,183,224. January, 1933, it was $5,602,000,000.

What I was trying to indicate was that the difficulty is not a lack of volume, either of gold or of currency, or both together, but is a lack of the working of that volume. That working is not especially represented by gold or currency; it is represented by credit. Ninety per cent of everything that is done in the way of business is done by credit. Of course, we could not require every transaction to be carried on in gold, for there is not sufficient gold for that purpose. Ninety per cent of all of the business of the world to-day is transacted without the sight of either gold or currency, and credit almost wholly spells business. Without any business, there is no demand for credit, and without credit there will be little business.

Mr. President, I have some figures here which I desire to bring to the attention of the Senate. The estimated volume of business in financial transactions in a certain month of 1929, when we were certainly at the peak of business, was $1,170,000,000. The reserves of the member banks during that month were $2,400,000,000, and the amount of currency in circulation was $4,800,000,000; the amount of the gold stock was $4,400,000,000, and the amount of credit represented by bank deposits—note this, Mr. President—was $58,800,000,000.

It is not the reserves of the member banks of $2,400,-000,000; it is not the gold stock of $4,400,000,000 or the amount of currency of $4,800,000,000 that spells business activity; it is the credit which represents $58,000,000,000 of deposits, and through that credit in that month $1,170,-000,000 of business was transacted.

Now let me take the figures for another month in 1931. The reserves remained the same, $2,400,000,000; the currency remained the same, $4,800,000,000; the gold stock increased from $4,400,000,000 to $4,900,000,000—$500,000,000 additional—but what about business? During the month referred to in 1929 the total business transacted was $1,170,000,000, whereas in the month referred to in 1931 business transactions amounted to but $720,000,000. Business dropped off nearly two-thirds. What about credit? Credit fell off from $58,000,000,000 to $55,000,000,000, so that the falling off of credits measured the falling off of business.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. What the Senator is so ably attempting to demonstrate is, as I understand, that the important problem before the country to-day in connection with this discussion is not so much the quantity of currency as it is the velocity of the currency?

Mr. FESS. Precisely.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. And that what we need most of all is to speed up what has been described as the velocity of currency rather than expanding the quantity of the currency?

Mr. FESS. Precisely. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. Vandenberg] made a similar statement a moment ago.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Will the Senator tell me how we are going to speed up velocity without expanding the currency? The thing that the present administration has been trying to do is to expand the credit, but money can not be loaned.

Mr. FESS. I will come to that.

Mr. WHEELER. I should be very happy to have the answer of the Senator.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I am not going to let any Senator interrupt me by introducing a phase of this discussion before I am ready for it. I am coming to the point the Senator is suggesting. It is the same question the Senator from Florida asked a while ago.

Mr. WHEELER. I was not in the Chamber when the Senator from Florida interrogated the Senator from Ohio. Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I believe the Senator wants to be accurate in his statements, does he not?

Mr. FESS. Certainly I do.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Senator just said that at one time we had $58,000,000,000 of deposit money or credit, and that that had been curtailed to $55,000,000,000. Does the Senator mean to have those figures stay in the Record? Let me suggest to the Senator that at one time we had a little less than $60,000,000,000 of credit or deposit money, and now we have slightly more than $41,000,000,000; so the Senator is off in his figures only about $15,000,000,000 of credit. The condition is $15,000,000,000,000 worse than he mentioned to the Senate.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I rely for my figures upon authorities, not upon a statement made here on the floor of the Senate. I am reading from authorities. The figures I gave were for months, respectively, in 1929 and 1931.

In June, 1932, the bank credits had dropped from $55,000,-000,000—the figure in June, 1931, which I mentioned a while ago-to $46,000,000,000, a fall of $9,000,000,000, while the member-bank reserves had dropped from $2,400,000.000 to $2,100,000,000. The currency had increased from $4,800,-000,000 to $5,500,000,000. The gold had fallen from $4,900,-000,000 to $4,000,000,000. But notice: The business that was done in that month was $450,000,000 only, with bank credits dropping from $55,000,000,000 to $46,000,000,000; and last month, in January, 1933, the figures were virtually the same, except that the member-bank reserves had jumped from $2,100,000,000 to $2,500,000,000, and the currency had increased $200,000,000, and the gold stock had gone back to $4,500,000,000.

What I am trying to illustrate here is exactly what my friend from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] suggested, later on repeated by my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh]that the important thing is not the volume of money but the volume of business; and business represents the velocity of the circulation of money. If we do not have the business we are not going to have the employment of money, no matter how much we issue, whether it be gold, silver, greenbacks, or whatever it may be.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield right there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I agree with the Senator that the important thing is velocity, but the way to get velocity is to increase purchasing power. I ask the Senator if he knows of any other method by which the velocity of money can be increased except increasing the purchasing power of the people of the United States and of the world.

Mr. FESS. What is purchasing power?

Mr. WHEELER. Purchasing power is putting money in the hands of the people, particularly in the hands of those who produce raw materials.

Mr. FESS. Is money purchasing power?

Mr. WHEELER. Not at all. I am talking about increasing the purchasing power of the producers of wealth.

Mr. FESS. And that must be done by increasing busi-

Mr. WHEELER. No; I disagree with the Senator. It can not be done by increasing business. It has to be done by increasing the purchasing power, first, of those who produce the wealth of the country; and all the wealth of this Nation and every other nation comes from the soil, the water, and the air.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the Senator from Montana introduced and tried to put through the Senate a bill for the coinage of silver at a ratio fixed by law, and assumed that that could be done without any loss of purchasing power. Price may be arbitrarily fixed by Government decree, but value must depend upon law, just as inevitable as the law of gravitation. When a person can not see the difference between price and value, I do not want to take any time to discuss the matter. The Senator and I are poles apart when he says that increasing business is not increasing purchasing power. That is the only thing that is purchasing power.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one more question?

Mr. FESS. No; I regret I can not yield further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, purchasing power is not money; but it is the thing for which money is paid. The thing for which money is paid is either a commodity or a service. It can not be anything else. If it is buying in the market something that is bought and sold to be delivered, that is a commodity; and as we increase the sales of commodities we increase purchasing power in the producer as well as the consumer. The other item of purchasing power is service. Eighty-five per cent of all the adult people of the United States sell service. Only 15 per cent of the adult population of this country sell commodities. When we deal in service we are dealing with something for which money is paid, just as the Senators here are rendering service to the public and they are paid a salary for it; just as the men who are working over here on these buildings are delivering their service and producing wealth. They are paid money for that, and it is the thing they do that is the purchasing power. It measures the purchasing power. It is business, and if we do not have business we do not have purchasing

I am not going to take any more time on that subject. Now I am ready to go to the subject about which my friends from Florida and Montana have been asking. I really think. however, that I ought to take a little time on the question raised by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Long]—that is, the question of debt. It appeals to all of us. The debt situation is simply terrible, especially with the farmer; and his side of the issue must be considered.

Why do we say that we are going to devalue the dollar in order to pay the debt in an honest dollar? Because it is said that a debt that was incurred 10 years ago was incurred in a dollar that would purchase only half what the dollar will purchase to-day. Since the debt incurred 10 years ago is on that basis, it is contended that we ought to reduce the dollar one-half.

That is one claim. Here is the difficulty in that: If that could be limited to the farmer it would be justified, because the farmer's product to-day does not command more than one-half, if that much, of what it commanded in 1913; but labor commands twice what it commanded in 1913, and there is a ratio of 4 to 1. The price of the dollar in 1913 was a unit, we will say, of 100 cents. In 1920 it was only 46 cents. In 1929 it was only 59 cents as compared to what it was in 1913. In 1933 it is only 70 cents. We talk about the average purchasing power of the dollar to-day being so high, but it is only 70 per cent of what it was in 1913, according to the figures given by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. That is not true when applied to the farm.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. The Senator might just as well be arguing about the purchasing power of 1813 as 1913. The facts are, dealing with a course of 8, 10, or 12 years, that the dollar has slipped from 60 cents up to $1, and then to $1.60.

Mr. FESS. That is, measured only in farm products. Mr. LONG. In everything.

Mr. FESS. No.

Mr. LONG. So far as values are concerned, commodities to-day bear about the same ratio to one another as they did at almost any other time.

Mr. FESS. No; the Senator is not right there. In manufactured articles the disparity is not anything like what it is in farm products.

Mr. LONG. That is true.
Mr. FESS. The farm product has not been reduced in amount of production but is almost double the needs of consumption, while the manufactured product has been reduced in amount of production, so that the merchant's shelves to-day are not crowded with manufactured articles. Therefore we have a price on the farm that is too low, and we must increase it in some way, or at least find some relief in his debt situation. The point I want to make is that we can not make a law devaluing the dollar in the payment of the farmer's debt without its going to the payment of other debts that are on a wholly different basis from the debt of the farmer. That is the thing to which I desire to call attention. If we could limit it to the farmer's situation it would be an easy problem; and that is the reason why I claim that we are under obligation here to do something in the way of relieving the indebtedness of the farmer if it possibly can be done, and I am ready to go along with any legitimate course open under the Constitution.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Assuming that we relieved the farmer of his indebtedness to-morrow, how long would he stay out of debt at the present commodity prices? As a matter of fact, would he not go farther in debt next year than he did this year if we relieved him of his indebtedness to-day, because he can not get cost of production?

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, nobody is going to dispute the bad situation of the farmer; but we do dispute the method of relieving the situation that the Senator suggested the other day.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator means bimetallism?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me ask the Senator another question. I do not think the Senator and I are so far apart, except in this respect: He says, as I understand him, that in order to speed up the velocity we must speed up our manufacturers, or turn out more manufactured goods. The Senator, however, will agree with me I am sure—because I know his views, and I have great respect for them—that all wealth must come from the soil, or from the air, or from the water of the earth. It does not come from manufacturing. I am not speaking of wealth as money. I am speaking of it as natural wealth.

Mr. FESS. The Senator is talking about the raw material. Mr. WHEELER. The raw material. That is the natural wealth of the world, as contradistinguished from money.

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. My contention is, may I say to the Senator, that in order to correct this situation we must bring up the commodity price level of the raw materials that are produced, such as cotton and wheat, and before we can start the wheels of industry going we must put purchasing power in the hands of the farmer and the miner.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I want to pay attention to that after I get through with the mortgage question. I will come to that.

I have in my hand a statement of the debt structure.

In 1922 the principal of the farmers' mortgages was $9,100,000,000. The annual interest was $568,000,000.

In 1929 the principal of those mortgages had jumped from $9,100,000,000 to $9,241,000,000, and the interest was just slightly below what it had been. Other debts in 1922 amounted to thirteen billion and a fraction, with the interest $825,000,000. In 1929 the other debts had fallen from thirteen billion to twelve billion. They fell about a billion dollars, and the interest fell nearly a hundred million.

The funded debt of the railroads in 1922 was $11,000,-000,000, and that had increased in 1929 to $12,459,000,000.

The unfunded debt was very much less.

The principal of the indebtedness of the Federal Government in 1922 was $22,906,000,000, and the interest was $990,-000,000. In 1929 that indebtedness had fallen from $22,000,-000,000 to $16,000,000,000 and a fraction, and the interest was $680,000,000.

Note the State and local indebtedness. It will be noted that the Federal indebtedness from 1922 to 1929 had fallen over $6,000,000,000, but the State and local debts jumped from $7,154,000,000 in 1922 to $13,452,000,000 in 1929. While the Federal debt was fairly substantially reduced, the State debts more than doubled. The same thing might be said of the corporations, also.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Since 1929 the Federal debt has gone back to the figures of 1922, and it is now probably more than $23,000,000,000, while the State debts have gone along about the same.

Mr. FESS. That is wholly due to the fact of the Government debt remaining the same, with the income out of which we pay it falling off. It is due to the loss of income, which is the measure of the decline in business; and the Senator has been, in season and out of season, using every ounce of his influence to have governmental expenditures cut.

We have two ways of balancing the Budget. One is cut expenditures, and the other is to stimulate business to increase the income, if we can. That is a difficult problem.

Mr. McKELLAR. If we can, but I do not believe there is any other way in the world by which we will ever make the Budget balance except to reduce expenditures.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, that brings me immediately to the subject about which the Senator from Florida spoke a while ago. It is revived by the remark of the Senator from Tennessee.

We are asked, in the face of a rather gloomy picture, what we are going to do. I can not think there can be any sound contention whatever that we need more money. The only sound contention is that we should better use what we have. I do not care how much money we try to pump, unless there is business to take it up and employ labor, it is going to do nobody any good. The question now is, since the one thing that is of importance is business, in order to employ the money, how we are going to revive business? That is the question.

Mr. President, what I am about to say will probably be impossible of accomplishment, but we can make a gesture along the line. I will probably be called a demagogue after I get through. No man or woman is going to take any risk in investing borrowed money in any enterprise employing labor unless he has some sort of assurance that there will be some profit in the business. No man, even with the prospect of a profit, will take a risk unless he has some assurance that the Government will not by taxation absorb all the profit he makes.

If we could proceed now to balance the Budget—and I dislike to use that phrase—if we could proceed now to live within our income, business would start at once. But as long as the saber is hanging over the head of business, the threat that if men go into business and make money taxes will be imposed to absorb what they make in order to balance the Budget, no man will enter business. It may be said that people are foolish, it may be charged that they are unpatriotic, but they will not embark on business ventures under such circumstances.

Our problem is to find the means of cutting the expenses of the Government to such a degree that we may balance the Budget by a taxation system which will not dry up the resources of industry. If there is any way by which we can do that, business will start. I warn the American Congress that business will not start until there is some assurance that we are to make an effort to live within our incomes, to balance our Budget, and give assurance to the man who employs labor that all the profit he makes is not to be absorbed by a system of taxation.

Mr. President, there is another thing. No manufacturer is going to increase his expenses in expanding his business and employing labor unless he knows that there is reasonable ground for him to believe that what he produces will be purchased, that he can sell it. If he can not sell what he makes, what is the use taking the risk?

One of America's greatest business men, whose name is a household word to every man in this body, not so very long ago took over a great industry. He thought he could reorganize it and put it on its feet. I talked with that man in August, and I have never spoken with a more stimulating, inspiring, hopeful man than he. He told me that he was going to build a product that would cost less in first-purchase price, that would not sacrifice the scale of wages of labor, that could be operated at less cost than other products of a similar nature, and yet would not mean a loss in efficiency. He spent an enormous amount of money, in the absolute confidence that he could pull that business through. Last week that man and his business went into the hands of a receiver.

Mr. President, what is the matter? Did not that man make a better product, which could be sold for less money.

without a sacrifice of the wages of labor? He did. Then what is the matter? There were no purchasers, and that man's business is now in the hands of a receiver, and he is one of the forward-looking, outstanding captains of industry, who had the patriotism to undertake a great risk, in the investment of a large amount of money, in order, as he thought, to pull this institution through this period of gloom, but the lack of business for want of confidence prevented purchasing with the bitter consequences.

Talk as we will, no man will take the risk of the danger of additional loss in expending an enormous amount of money without some assurance that he can sell his product when it is once made. No man is going to be willing to risk the purchase of raw material to go into a manufactured product unless he knows that he is not to be forced to sell at a declining price instead of a rising price.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator that if he will examine the pages of the Congressional Record of the time when the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act was under consideration, and when the Glass-Steagall bill was being considered, he will find that I used the identical statement which the Senator is using at the present time. I said then—and I agree with the Senator entirely—that no manufacturer is going into business, no matter what we may call him and no matter what we may say, and turn out materials and employ labor unless he knows that he can sell the manufactured articles for more than he paid to produce them.

Mr. FESS. He would be foolish if he did.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; he would be foolish if he did. No banker is going to lend money to a new enterprise unless he knows that that enterprise is to be successful enough to enable him to get his money back. So I say to the Senator that when a certain individual connected with the Federal Reserve Board, and one of the largest financiers of this country, told me that they could end this depression in 60 days by having the Federal Reserve Board go in and buy Government bonds, and more Government bonds and more Government bonds, I said then, to him that it could not be done, for the very reason that they could not lend the money, because when commodity prices are falling, as they are falling, it is not possible to lend money or get credit out.

I do not want to intrude upon the Senator's time, but let me say to him that I have given this subject some consideration, and I submit to the Senator that with the present world distribution of gold, with the United States and France controlling 70 per cent of the gold—hoarding it, which is what they are doing with it—will the Senator tell me how it is possible to put the countries which are off the gold standard back onto the gold standard, and keep them there, so that they will be able to expand their currencies and their credit to meet the demands of their various business enterprises, internal and external? That is the great problem before the world.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I will attend to the answer of the question in a moment. Let me repeat what I stated a moment ago; the plain duty of the Congress is to cut the expenses of the Government, without fear or favor, everywhere it can be done. I recognize the difficulty in the case of the fixed charges, like the interest on the public debt. We can not avoid paying those charges; and I rather think we ought to continue the sinking-fund provision, though it might be that we could let it go for a time. I am afraid greatly to reduce the Army and Navy appropriations at this time, with the world's mind in the state in which it is. The Japanese situation is not pleasing. The German situation is somewhat disturbing. The world is ill at ease. I do not think there is any likelihood of the Congress reducing the appropriations for the Veterans' Administration. I frankly state that I would vote to repeal for a time that provision of the law allowing compensation for disabilities not due to service origin. The situation is so grave that I would be inclined to take that step. There are some things we can do, however.

Mr. President, my one suggestion upon the matter of living within our income is that we must proceed to cut Government expenses. I am going along with the party that soon is to be responsible for the Government in its efforts to accomplish that purpose. On the other hand, when we come to adding new taxes, we simply must avoid taking the position that we are merely going to "soak the rich"; that we intend to absorb the income which in the end is necesary for the employment of labor. We must find a better plan. That is a thing which many public men will run away from; but, Mr. President, we have simply got to face it if we intend to have a revival of business. So much for that question.

The suggestion has been seriously referred to often by the Senator from Montana [Mr. Wheeler] that we must increase the commodity price level, and his suggestion is more money. If we go on an inflated basis, whether it be along the line of the Senator's suggestion or whether it be along the line of the devaluation of gold or whether it be along the line of flat money, for a time it might be that there would be an increase in the price level; but the Senator knows that that time would be very brief indeed, and that the price level, started upward by a depreciated currency, would in due time start downward and in a very short time would go below what it was when we were on a gold basis.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Chio yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I agree with the Senator in his reference to fiat money. I would dread to see the day come, as a matter of fact, when we would issue fiat money in this country, because I am as much opposed to it as anybody else unless we would be actually driven to it. Likewise, I am not in favor of devaluing gold. But I want to invite the Senator's attention seriously to the fact that as a matter of fact the remonetization of silver is not an inflationary measure except to the extent that it would put purchasing power in the hands of untold millions of the people of the world. To that extent it would increase the purchasing power of the world and to that extent would bring up commodity prices.

Mr. FESS. I think the Senator may not have been in the Chamber when I spoke about the bill introduced by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]. There are some features of that bill which meet with my approval.

Mr. President, on the matter of the price level being lowered rather than elevated through a depreciated currency. everyone who is claiming that we must devalue the gold says it is in order to make a commodity such as wheat, that sells now too low, sell for a reasonable price. They argue that if wheat to-day sells for 40 cents a bushel and we devalue gold to the amount of one-half, the wheat then would sell for at least 80 cents. If that be true-it may not be true, and I do not believe it is true, but conceding it to be true for the sake of argument, what would it do? If it is true of wheat, it is likewise true of every commodity. That is the purpose of devaluation, whether it be devaluing the gold or inflating the currency. It is to increase the price level. If we do it in a commodity for the seller or the producer, we do it in the commodity for the consumer. If we increase the price of wheat for the farmer, we increase the price of bread to the consumer. If we increase the price of clothing for the manufacturer, we increase the price of clothing to the man who buys the clothing.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I fear my question may divert the Senator into another line of argument. I have listened with a great deal of interest to his very able presentation of his views as to what might be done to resuscitate business in this country. I would like to invite his attention to what I consider of even more importance and of more immediate concern than the rehabilitation of business, namely, What can we do in this Congress to restore immediately confidence of the American people in our banking system?

The problem to-day and to-morrow and next week is what we can do to prevent a further loss of confidence, a diminution of deposits, in the banking structure of the country. It seems to me that unless action is taken quickly we are going to be confronted with a very serious situation, and we need not be talking about resuscitating business unless we can handle that problem. I would like to have the Senator's views on that matter.

Mr. FESS. The Senator from Massachusetts raises a question that was raised awhile ago by another of our colleagues as to what can be done to avoid the banks continuing to hoard and refusing to loan. It was stated at that time that the banker is entitled to some sympathy in that he is loaning that which does not belong to him, but is loaning his depositors' money. While there is criticism of the bankers, while I think I am justified in stating it here on the floor of the Senate that the bankers have been subject to some criticism, I do not want to make that broad statement. But it seems to me they have been somewhat overcautious in their refusal to loan on the basis that they may not get the loan repaid. They have become in a way the greatest hoarders we have, and yet we must regard the situation that where they are loaning money that belongs to somebody else they must have some reasonable assurance that they are not going to lose the money. I discussed this phase earlier in my remarks.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I assume from what the Senator said that he would say the first way of restoring the people's confidence in the banking structure of the country is to give some assurance we are still going to maintain sound money.

Mr. FESS. Absolutely. That is the most important feature of the problem.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I assume the argument against the suggested inflation is directed toward indicating that the Senator wants to give that assurance. It has also been suggested that we ought to take some action toward guaranteeing the deposits in the banks.

Mr. FESS. That idea is growing in favor throughout the country. It may be adverse to sane banking to limit the right of withdrawal. If so then it may become necessary to give depositors a guaranty that their funds will not be lost.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I know that the Senator does agree with me that now, to-day, to-morrow, next week, next month, the problem in the United States of America is what can we do to save the sweep from one end of the country to the other of a condition that may undermine every financial institution in the United States.

Mr. FESS. I appreciate the situation. While the Senator from Massachusetts was interrupting me I was thinking what would happen to the country provided we should decide suddenly that we were going to devalue the gold dollar 50 or 25 per cent. What would happen? Every foundation stone underlying the credit and confidence of the country, including the credit of the Government and the banking structure in every city of the land, would go to smash because the Government would have agreed to violate a contract which the Constitution as written says may not be violated; yet we would do it by changing the purchasing unit or the basis in the purchasing standard.

If we do that, how would the Government redeem its $600,000,000 of obligations that fall due next month? What will it do with the $6,000,000,000 that falls due within a short time, and with the $11,000,000,000 that falls due at not a distant date? The whole financial structure would totter like a house of cards.

We can not afford to tamper with that situation. As long as such suggestions are made in the legislative forum of the United States with honest sincerity, no business is going to take one step of risk until it knows that thing is not going to take place. We could not do anything more definite to give impetus to investment to-day, to the employment of labor in business, than to say once for all that we are not going to tamper with the credit and the obligations and good faith of the United States Government and the banks, as it has been proposed here in the Senate to do, and has been acted upon favorably by another body of Congress.

If I were permitted to say-and it would not be said in criticism, because I know that the man who is soon to take on all the obligations of government with full responsibility and power for administration does not want unnecessarily to commit himself until the power comes with the responsibility. But there could be no statement issued that would have such an ameliorating effect, that would register such wholesome confidence, and produce such a salutory result as a statement from the incoming President now, to-day, that there will be no tampering with sound money in his administration. That would stimulate business at once. It would remove uncertainty in what is meant by the "new deal." Until there is a certainty, and until the present un-certainty is removed, there will be no effort toward revival of business, simply because the existing uncertainty of policy destroys all venture and all risk, without which there can be no revival of business.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I have heard the expression used a good many times by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh] and by the Senator from Ohio himself, and it is used in both platforms, with reference to "sound money." I have been able to find in no dictionary a definition of "sound money." I have been able to find no definition of "sound money" by any economic writer or by any political philosopher anywhere. The trouble with the banks to-day is that they are loaded up with securities, that the commodity price level has gone down to such an extent that the value of those securities has become practically worthless, and the banks are a mere shell. They have gone that way under what the Senator from Ohio and others have termed "sound money."

I say to the Senator from Ohio and I say to the country that what we need is stable money, money that has the same purchasing power to-day that it will have to-morrow, the same purchasing power in 1933 that it had in 1926. What we have not got and what has brought us to this chaos is the lack of stable money. We have been harping and talking about "sound money" when I assume what is meant is stable money; but we have not got it. What I propose to do is to try to provide something that will stabilize the currencies of the world so as to put the various countries back upon a basis where, instead of dumping their surplus upon the United States, they will be in a position to buy from American manufacturers, and thus put people to work in our factories and take them off the streets and away from the bread lines. Yet, Mr. President, upon the floor of the Senate it is impossible to get anybody to do that because, it is said, "We are afraid to adopt the method that was given us by our forefathers, by Hamilton, by Jefferson, and by Washington."

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I would much prefer, if my colleague will not regard it as discourteous, to be permitted to say what I want to say without further interruption. I permit these interruptions, for they always afford a better opportunity for the different viewpoints to be understood, and this is a body where that freedom ought to be exercised, but I have been speaking longer than I had anticipated, and I have one or two other points that I want to press home before I take my seat.

I was just entering upon one of those subjects when the Senator from Montana interrupted me. I was saying that if the price of commodities be increased to the seller, it is also going to be increased to the buyer; in other words, to the degree that the profit of the producer is increased, the cost of living of the consumer is going also to be increased, and, in the end, if it is done through the medium of depreciating the currency, the whole price level topples. That is the business axiom that I wish to discuss at this time.

As I have previously stated, 85 per cent of our population deal in service; they do not sell commodities; they sell their ability to work. They are the men and women who are paid wages, the men and women who are paid salaries, who, constituting, as I have said, 85 per cent of our population, receive 56 per cent of the income of the United States of America. The other 15 per cent deal in commodities. For example, a department store is owned by 12 citizens whose profit is in the sale of commodities. They employ 100 citizens, whose pay is in salaries and wages, for which they sell their service. If it is proposed to increase the price received by the producer or the 12 owners who deal in commodities and at the same time increase the price paid the 100 laborers who deal in service, then there would be some equity in the proposal; but that is the difficulty. It does not work that way.

For example, here is a clerk who receives $2,400 a year. He pays about $70 a month rental and probably $360 for other things aside from the purchase of commodities, making about $1,200 in the way of buying things that are not commodities. It takes $1,200 remaining of his $2,400 salary to buy the things he lives on, such as groceries, clothing, and so on.

If the price of the commodity to the seller be increased, to that degree the price is likewise increased to the clerk who represents, as I have said, 85 per cent of our population; and, instead of paying $1,200 for the cost of necessaries of life for a year, he will pay an additional amount commensurate with the increase in the price of commodities. If that increase is doubled, then his cost of living is increased to $2,400.

Now, what will be the effect? It means that by depreciating the currency, in order to increase the price of commodities, it has been made impossible for 85 per cent of the population to live according to the same standards, and it becomes necessary for them to cut their consumption to the degree by which prices are increased. What will that do? If we reduce the consuming power of 85 per cent of our people, we break prices instead of increasing prices; so that, instead of the farmer getting the accretion, ultimately what he will receive will be reduced because of the failure of a great part of the population to consume, due to the destruction by the amount indicated of their purchasing power. That has been the history of every effort to depreciate currency; that is the history of 26 countries to-day that have gone off the gold standard.

Mr. President, of the many civilized countries of the world there are only nine, all told, including the United States and France and including also the Philippine Islands as an individual country, that are on the gold standard to-day. They are the United States, France, Belgium, Netherlands, Switzerland, Algeria, Cuba, and Netherland East Indies. Those nine do 31 per cent of the business of the world. There are 26 nations that have gone off the gold standard, led by the United Kingdom of Great Britain, and those 26 nations do but 43 per cent of the business of the world. There are two nations that are on a silver basis and they do about 3 per cent of the business of the world. Then there are seven or eight, such as Germany and Italy, that do not maintain the gold standard, but in a degree they have not joined the 26 led by Great Britain. They do about 18 per cent of the business of the world, leaving to smaller countries the remaining 6 per cent of the world's business.

Great Britain went off the gold standard, not because it was her choice, but she had no alternative. You, Mr. President, know why it was. Great Britain had a new government headed by MacDonald. He came back into power following the most remarkable election of which I have any knowledge in the history of Great Britain. After his own party had expelled him from their ranks he went back to his own bailiwick—when many other constituencies were asking him to stand for them—and was not only reelected from that bailiwick, but there were elected only 55 members in a parliament of over 600 who were not with him. I know of no such vindication in the history of Great Britain.

Then he announced that the election had given him a mandate to balance the budget by reducing the expenses of the government, including the dole. The British Government under MacDonald then proceeded, as we all know, to balance the budget not by increasing taxes, because Great Britain had reached the limit of taxation, but by the reduction of the expenses of the government, including the dole, and the Presiding Officer and every Member of this body knows that when that decision was reached the British Navy mutinied. With the main arm of the national defense of Great Britain in mutiny, the cabinet was summoned instantly and recommended a reversal of the policy of reducing expenditures, including the navy, the abandonment of the gold standard, and a consequent depreciation of the currency that would enable Great Britain to operate on a lower level of cost, because, while she would get more for the commodities she sells she would pay less in wages, and would balance the budget in that way. The cabinet met on the 15th day of September, and the day after it met the program was indorsed by the government then in power, and Great Britain officially abandoned the gold standard. Who is the man of any sense who says that Britain did that of her own choice? She did it because there was no other way for her. Any other course would have meant disaster.

Then what happened? England went on a basis of depreciated currency. It was for the moment an advantage, especially in her exports, but because she reduced the amount paid the laborer, and thus reduced the purchasing power, prices at once began to decline on account of the lack of consumption broken by the decline of real wages.

What then happened? In 26 countries where the gold standard was abandoned—abandoned for the purpose of elevating commodity prices-commodity prices after a temporary rise started down and are now below what they were when those nations were on the gold standard. Such a result is inevitable; it is the economic aftermath that can not be avoided. That is what would happen to us if we would begin officially to depreciate our currency either by devaluing the gold dollar or by inflating the currency. There would be for a little while an impetus that would cause an increase in commodity prices, but that increase would soon be retarded, and the result would be that in a very short time we would be selling at a lower price than we are selling at the present time. Such an outcome is not only the history of the countries which have abandoned the gold standard but it is the inevitable result of economic law.

Mr. President, a great many people have claimed that if we should inflate the currency we would not only increase commodity prices but would increase the wages paid labor: that we would increase the price of labor. That is folderol. The fact is, some business, believing wages in the United States are too high, urge inflation as the one and only method to reduce wages. Away back, when I was a university student, one of the outstanding statesmen of America came from Kentucky. He attracted me by his remarkable administration of the office of Speaker of the House of Representatives and also by the great number of his famous utterances epitomizing sound economic thought. When Grover Cleveland was elected President he was about the only one who was considered for the position of Secretary of the Treasury, and he was chosen as Secretary of the Treasury by President Cleveland. It was under President Cleveland's administration that there was an effort to go on a "soft money" basis, to inflate our currency. President Cleveland won the profound devotion of a great number of people because he resisted it, but he also won very bitter opposition from another type of person who did not see the matter as President Cleveland saw it.

It was on an occasion of that sort that John G. Carlisle, the great Democratic Secretary of the Treasury under Cleveland, made this statement:

The evils of a fluctuating and depreciated currency must always fall most heavily upon the poor, who do not produce for themselves but for others, and who are therefore compelled to purchase with their wages everything they eat, drink, and wear. Their wages will remain stationary, or at best they will rise slowly and at long intervals, while the price of the necessities of life are liable to rise suddenly from day to day as the value of the currency changes, and consequently what would appear to be a fair rate of compensation at the time a labor contract is made may prove to be grossly inadequate long before the labor is performed. The laborer can not protect himself against fluctuation in the prices of commodities for he can not purchase at wholesale when prices are low and keep out of the market when prices are high. He must buy day by day, and he must pay out of his earnings whether their purchasing power be great or small. The employer can not afford to promise higher wages in advance because with a depreciated and fluctuating currency he can not possibly foretell what the price of his product will be at any time in the future. Thus the laborer is the victim of two influences, neither of which can be successfully resisted by him. He must accept whatever wages are offered by employers or go without work, and he must pay whatever prices are demanded in the market or go without food.

That is a classic statement of the famous financial authority, once a distinguished Speaker of the House, and later one of the country's greatest Secretaries of the Treasury; and it was the effort to adopt a depreciated currency that brought this famous statement from the great statesman.

That is my position. Senators, that statement is incontrovertible. The laborer, representing 85 per cent of our population, is going to be harmed to the extent that the price of necessities increases, because his wages do not increase. That is axiomatic; and what else would it mean?

Here is $104,000,000,000 of life insurance taken out by 70,000,000 of our people. A devaluation, either by reducing the ounce content of the gold dollar or inflation, would to that degree destroy the value of $104,000,000,000 of life insurance outstanding to-day.

Here are $24,000,000,000 of American savings in the savings banks of this country. That is cash. That represents the hard-earned savings of a frugal and industrious people. It is proposed to destroy that to the degree that the dollar is inflated by the issuance of unsecured currency or the devaluation of gold. It is dangerous. It is unwise. It is erroneous. It is dishonest. It will not do what its proponents propose to do; but, on the other hand, there is no end to the harm that would come to us if we took such a course. When once you enter upon it there is no end but disaster, because it will be beyond control.

First, Mr. President, there is enough gold, as suggested by the gold committee of the League of Nations when they reported that there was no inadequacy of gold.

Second, there is enough currency; or, if there is not, we can resort to the issuance of more currency under the Federal reserve system; but if we issue it beyond the amount of business that is done, it will go into idleness, because there is no work for it to do. So the amount of currency is not insufficient.

Third, there are the reserves of the Federal reserve banks in abundance. There is no need for any increase there.

All the basic elements are here for business built upon a sound currency. We have the farms, we have the transportation agencies, we have the manufacturing plants, we have the managerial ability, we have the skilled labor, and we have the banking resources, all intact, awaiting the one factor, that of confidence.

The only thing that is lacking is that confidence—credit that represents the business of the country. That credit is represented by the deposits in banks, and those deposits are more or less frozen. How are we going to unfreeze them?

Here is my suggestion:

First, we must move to a rational balancing of the Federal Budget, and we ought to do it in the States also. That is the first thing. We must cut, no matter how much it hurts. We must adopt a taxing system that does not dry up our resources.

Second, we ought negatively to stop the constant agitation of matters tending to destroy the stability of our currency. As long as that sword of Damocles hangs over the head of American business, no forward step will be taken. That, I believe, could be very greatly assisted if the incoming President would make an announcement as to what is to be the policy of his administration. It is not for me to say what the President elect should do. I am only giving my opinion, that until some definite statement is made of what is going to be done under what the President elect once spoke of as a "new deal," until we know whether the fundamentals are going to be tampered with, and nostrums are to be substituted for sound principles, there will not be one step toward the recovery of business, but business and other things will continue to grow worse and worse.

Mr. President, we can not stimulate business by passing laws such as have been passed in one body of this Congress, where it is proposed to inflate the currency so much here and so much there; nor can it be done by straining the bond market, as we are doing here in the Senate. Business must be given some assurance that it will be left alone to the point where it is safe in making its ventures; otherwise we have very little promise of immediate recovery. Yet, I hold that there is sufficient ability in a wise statesmanship and in the structure of American business that we will come out of this era if no mistakes are made.

Speaking as I do, facing rather a disheartening picture, I want to say to the country and to my Democratic friends that as far as in me lies I will go along first in attempting to balance the Budget, to live within our income; and secondly, to do any other constructive thing that will help business instead of frightening it. But I must resist with all the energy I possess all these threatening proposals looking to undermining sound principles of government. Let us see the danger of this constant utterance to the effect that we are going to abandon our system of sound money on the claim that we have not enough of it. It is a dangerous nostrum to offer and only adds to our confusion. Even though we are denounced as reactionary by the advocates of abandonment of our system on behalf of some new experiment, whose only attraction is that it is new and sounds progressive, I am willing to accept the challenge and fight to maintain the principles upon which this Republic has builded for 150 years.

During the delivery of Mr. FESS's speech-

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the resolution of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Barkley] goes to the calendar, and the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The bill (H. R. 14359) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bank-ruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for the consideration of the independent offices appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Chair lays before the Senate the appropriation bill.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 14458) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

After the conclusion of Mr. Fess's speech-

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14363) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. OLIVER of Alabama, Mr. GRIFFIN, Mr. CANNON, Mr. Blanton, Mr. Shreve, and Mr. Tinkham were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 4065. An act authorizing the packing of oleomargarine and adulterated butter in tin and other suitable packages;

S. 4589. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to make payment of part of the expenses incurred in securing improvements in drainage project of drainage district No. 1, Richardson County, Nebr., and for other purposes;

S. 4756. An act to authorize the Veterans' Administration or other Federal agencies to turn over to superintendents of the Indian Service amounts due Indians who are under legal disability, or to estates of such deceased Indians;

S. 5339. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to convey certain properties to the county of Arlington. State of Virginia, in order to connect Lee Boulevard with the Arlington Memorial Bridge, and for other purposes;

S. 5370. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Farnam Street, Omaha, Nebr.;

S. 5588. An act authorizing the acceptance of title to sites for public-building projects subject to the reservation of ore and mineral rights;

REMONETIZATION OF SILVER

Mr. LONG obtained the floor.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield for a moment to the Senator from Montana, without yielding the floor.

Mr. WHEELER. I desire to have inserted in the Con-GRESSIONAL RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance a resolution that was just sent to me by the Toledo (Ohio) Central Labor Union indorsing my bill. It reads as follows:

Toledo, Ohio, February 20, 1933.

CLERK OF UNITED STATES SENATE,

CLERK OF UNITED STATES SENATE,

Washington, D. C.:

The Toledo Central Labor Union, on Thursday, February 16, discussed at length Senate bill 2487, Mr. Wheeler.

It is the thought of this body that the above-named legislation will be of great benefit to labor, capital, and to all classes of society in this country. It will, we believe, increase purchasing power to millions of our people as well as the world, giving employment to our unemployed.

Our opinion is that remonetization of silver will increase the ployment to our unemployed.

Our opinion is that remonetization of silver will increase the pulse of industries greatly. It will establish the exchange on a basis which would enable silver-using countries to purchase our farm products and manufactured goods. It would increase the value and purchasing power of their money in the American market. It would flood the United States not with silver but with orders for American-manufactured goods and the product from American forms. American farms

Your consideration will be appreciated, and hope you can encourage us with your support of the above measure

Respectfully yours,

OTTO W. BRACH, Secretary Toledo Central Labor Union.

I desire to say further, if I may, that at an early opportunity I intend to answer some of the arguments which have been made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. As soon as I can get the floor to-morrow I propose to use some time in answering some of the most amazing suggestions made by the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS]. It will be reassuring to the country that the incoming President is to have the benefit of his continued advice, especially in view of the fact that after having had his advice for 12 years the country finds itself in the worst condition in history.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KENDRICK in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Couzens	Kendrick	Sheppard
Austin	Cutting	King	Shipstead
Bailey	Dale	La Follette	Shortridge
Bankhead	Dickinson	Logan	Smith
Barbour	Dill	Long	Smoot

Carey	Hatfield	Reed	Walsh, Mont.
Clark	Hayden	Reynolds	Watson
Coolidge	Howell	Robinson, Ark.	Wheeler
Copeland	Johnson	Russell	White
Costigan	Kean	Schuyler

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Robinson] is unavoidably absent from the city. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. Connally] is necessarily detained from the Senate by

I also wish to announce that the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis] is necessarily out of the city on governmental business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Long] has the floor.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield to me for a short statement?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. LONG. I yield, if I do not lose the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the Senator from Louisiana's yielding for a short statement? The Chair hears none.

INFLATION OF THE CURRENCY

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I regret very much that the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] is not in the Chamber. He has made a very earnest presentation on the subject of balancing the Budget and on the subject of sound money and has given us some views, according to his information, of the economic condition in countries off the gold standard.

I shall not impose upon the time and the courtesy of the Senator from Louisiana this afternoon to discuss the subject of balancing the Budget and the subject of sound money. I simply want to call attention to the fact that a controversy took place here between the Senator from Montana [Mr. Wheeler] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Fess] on the question of sound money, as to what the expression "sound money" means. "Sound money" seems to be as indefinite a term here in the United States as is the term 'our best minds." The American people always want the best, and they are willing to pay for the best. They selected the best leadership to lead us to prosperity, but those leaders led us into a depression, and we are paying for it now.

I hope we can come to a better understanding and a better agreement as to what constitutes the best currency and the best public policy than we were able to agree upon as to what constituted the best minds.

As to Great Britain, I just want to read a speech made by the Right Hon. Reginald McKenna, former Chancel-lor of the Exchequer, and now the president of the Midland Bank, of London. I read this and quote from Mr. McKenna rather than make statements of my own, because the Senator from Ohio told the Senator from Montana this afternoon that he did not take stock in statements made by Senators on the floor of the Senate—that he preferred to read authorities. So I hope that the Senator from Ohio and other Senators when they read this will at least accept Reginald McKenna as an authority on the question of gold and sterling and as an authority on economic conditions in Great Britain and countries on the continent of Europe, and on the question of banking.

Before I read I want to observe that it is hard to come to an understanding and mutual agreement on the question of currency and banking because we seem to discuss these things from different points of view. Some people discuss them from the standpoint of science. I prefer to discuss the question of currency from the standpoint of it being an art. The juggler, the prestidigitator who juggles with a ball, depends upon what is called speed or velocity, and we talk about the same thing when we speak of the velocity of bank deposits. But to refrain from expressing my own opinion, I will read from this address delivered by Mr. McKenna to the stockholders of the Midland Bank, of London. He said:

Conditions to-day are distinctly better than a year ago, notwith-standing the persistence of a deplorably high level of unemploy-ment. Our national finances are sounder, a marked reduction has been made in the balance of imports over exports, the volume of business has been fairly maintained, new industries have been established, and, though exchange and other restrictions are stifling trade with foreign countries, there are signs of steady development of interimperial trade.

unmistakable improvement at home has certainly not been helped by events abroad. The hopes arising from the Lausanne conference have vanished in the face of disappointment regarding conference have vanished in the face of disappointment regarding the war debts to America. Political uncertainty in many countries has clouded the prospect of recovery, and the gloom of trade depression has shown no sign of lifting. The impoverished debtor countries, one after another, have all but closed their doors against imports. In these circumstances it is the more remarkable that this country, deeply involved as it is in international trade and investments, should have shown any improvement at all.

STERLING AND GOLD

Foreign commentators on the general trade depression usually ascribe it mainly to currency disorder, of which we had such painful experience after the war. But it is only superficially that we ful experience after the war. But it is only superficially that we are back in the early postwar years, for there is this vital difference: That whereas currencies had then run away from gold, now gold has run away from currencies. From long habit many of us continue to think and talk of gold currencies as stable and currencies off gold as unstable. But if we give any true meaning to currency stability we shall find that sterling, which is by far the most important of the currencies detached from gold, has shown since it acquired independence much greater stability than the dollar. On balance the pound, measured by its purchasing power over commodities other than gold, has remained fairly constant. Gold, on the other hand, has almost continuously increased its purchasing power and buys, roughly, 15 per cent more goods and purchasing power and buys, roughly, 15 per cent more goods and services now than in September, 1931. The true standard of stability is what currency will buy, not of gold but of all commodities which enter into daily use in production and consumption. I agree that the general trade depression is largely due to currency discrete, but the disturbing factor has been found not least in the disorder, but the disturbing factor has been found not least in the

We have had experience now of sterling divorced from gold for over 16 months, and nothing catastrophic has happened. A numover 16 months, and nothing catastrophic has happened. A number of other countries are using sterling as their standard, and it is still the medium of a large amount of trade throughout the world. How have the groups of countries using gold or sterling, respectively, fared during this period? The clear evidence of improvement in a number of countries off the gold standard has no counterpart in those still on gold, whose position, generally speaking, has become worse. In the first half of the year just expired, according to an analysis by the board of trade, "the countries no longer on the gold standard increased their share of the import and export trade of the world, * * * this increase applying to exports to a greater extent than imports." There can be little doubt that this disparity of experience has become more pronounced since that time, not only in international trade but in respect of internal conditions as well. To take a particular example, the level of business activity in the United States is officially declared as considerably lower in 1932 than a year earlier, whereas in Great Britain the level has been practically maintained.

Again in national finances we find a similar distinction. The countries still using gold are all faced with budget deficits. In the United States the Federal finances show a deficit officially estimated at more than $1,100,000,000 for the current fiscal year. The French Legislature is struggling with proposals to cover a shortage of perhaps 10,000,000,000 francs. Similarly in the Netherlands, Switzerland, Italy, and Belgium, the national accounts show larger or smaller deficits. The probability is that if recent tendencies continue, the governments of all these countries will find that their task is one of extraordinary difficulty. With a steadily appreciating currency, the real burden of budget charges, particularly in respect of debts, is constantly increasing, while the revenue-yielding capacity of the people is just as constantly decreasing. It becomes more and more doubtful, unless there is a speedy reversal of the movement of prices, whether stringent economies, reversal of the movement of prices, whether stringent economies, elastic definitions of charges properly to be financed out of loans, and the utmost ingenuity in respect of new taxation will succeed in balancing the budgets of the countries still adhering to gold.

I am not suggesting that countries off the gold standard are finding it easy to balance their budgets, or that they have all yet finding it easy to balance their budgets, or that they have all yet succeeded in doing so; but at least it is true that they have made far more progress in that direction than the other group. The national finances are certainly better in countries where the persistent fall in internal prices has been arrested than in those where, through adherence to gold, it is still continuing. The condition of the earlier postwar years has been precisely reversed. Separation from gold is no longer a sign of budgetary disorder; adherence to it is no longer a distinguishing mark of sound national finance. national finance.

NECESSITY OF A RISE IN PRICES

These facts, however briefly summarized, demonstrate afresh the ravaging effects of falling prices and the benefits to be obtained by relief from the downward movement. A rise in comobtained by relief from the downward movement. A rise in commodity prices has indeed become much more essential for the gold-standard countries, whose plight is growing worse, than for other countries, whose position is improving. Yet we can not rely upon the so-called "natural" action of gold for such a movement. The pre-war gold standard, so far as its control over the level of prices is concerned, is no longer operative: the misnamed "immutable law" of supply and demand, which was thought to apply to gold as to any other commodity, is of no effect. The enlarged output of the mines and the unloading of hoarded gold from India and Great Britain on the one hand, and on the other the reduced demand for gold involved in widespread departure from its use, have in no way checked its unceasing appreciation.

It is sometimes alleged, however, that our departure from gold

It is sometimes alleged, however, that our departure from gold was itself responsible, for the continued downward movement of gold prices, and that a fall in the gold exchange value of sterling provokes a further decline in gold prices. There is no foundation, I believe, either in logic or in the record of the facts, for this assertion, which seems to arise from confusion of facts, for this assertion, which seems to arise from confusion of cause and effect. The price level in each country is governed by the quantity of money available for immediate spending and the goods and services available to be bought. It follows that the exchange rate between any two of the dominant currencies tends to move in accord with the fluctuations in their respective purchasing powers, though the movement may be temporarily deflected from its course by disturbing transfers of capital and short-term funds. Price levels affect exchange rates, but exchange rates have little effect on price levels as distinguished from the rates have little effect on price levels as distinguished from the prices of individual commodities.

The price level in Great Britain is of the first importance to the world at large, not because of its effect upon exchange rates, but because of our predominance as a consumer of primary commodities produced abroad. If sterling prices move upward, the ultimate result is to stimulate demand throughout the wide area on a sterling basis for the products of countries not within area on a sterling basis for the products of countries not within the group. The increased demand for such commodities as cotton, wheat, copper, and coffee tends to harden their quotations in the countries producing them, whether these countries are on a gold basis or not. Thus a rise in the sterling price level tends to a strengthening of prices even in the gold-standard area. But is it possible for us to raise our internal price level; in particular can we do so by monetary management; and if we can and do, will it not be evidence of that abhorrent thing, inflation? In the actual circumstances we have so much ground to recover that I confess the thought of inflation, so long as it is controlled, does not alarm me. In these days the word is no longer a term that I confess the thought of inflation, so long as it is controlled, does not alarm me. In these days the word is no longer a term of reproach, though some tender consciences find ease in using the innocent substitute "reflation." Almost everyone now recognizes that a rise in primary commodity prices is essential to world recovery, and most would agree with Mr. Hawtrey when he argues, in his recent book, that the evil consequences even of uncontrolled inflation "are definitely surpassed by the evils of deflation." Controlled inflation, from being the remedy of fools or knaves, has become widely regarded as the best available solution of our troubles, particularly since it has become realized that a substantial rise in wholesale prices need have no more than slight effect upon the cost of living.

ALLEGED FAILURE OF REFLATION

It is, I believe, possible to achieve a rise in the internal price level by monetary management, and I am unshaken in this opinion by the frequent charge that reflation has already been tried and found wanting, both in Great Britain and the United States. If we examine the course of affairs in these two countries we shall find that deliberate monetary management specifically designed to raise the price level has not been tested in either. In our own country, it is true, an expansion of credit has been effected, but only under conditions which could give it but partial success in raising the price level; and partially successful it has been, for our price level has not accompanied the downward movement of gold prices. In the United States, notwithstanding the current talk of vast new credit having been pumped ineffectively into the banking system, the experiment has not been tried at all. Reflation means the expansion of bank deposits, and therefore, of potential purchasing power, to such an extent as will restore the potential purchasing power, to such an extent as will restore the price level to the point at which it stood before the present great slump began. Let me recall briefly the salient features of the recent monetary experience of the two countries before we give judgment on the question whether reflation has had any real

I will take our own case first. In February of last year the deposits of the London clearing banks were 9 per cent below the figure of a year earlier. From the preceding September, when we figure of a year earlier. From the preceding September, when we went off the gold standard, a deflationary policy with a 6 per cent bank rate had been resolutely pursued, and commodity prices, which had been steady after an initial rise, began to fall. In February a complete change of policy occurred. Bank rate was successively and rapidly reduced, and in May and June the Bank of England, by heavy purchases of gold and securities, created a large addition to bank cash, which set in motion a marked expansion of bank deposits. The additional purchasing power arising from an increase in bank deposits can not, however, get into use in trade for a considerable time. Why this is so, an example will readily show.

The Bank of England takes the initial step by buying, say, £1,000,000 of Government securities. The seller of the securities pays the Bank of England's check for £1,000,000 into his own bank, which we may call the clearing bank, and this bank in due course pays it to the credit of its account with the Bank of England. Thus the first result of the transaction is that the seller of the securities has a deposit of £1,000,000 with his own bank, which in turn has a deposit of £1,000,000 with the Bank of England. The turn has a deposit of £1,000,000 with the Bank of England. The clearing bank pays interest on its deposits but receives none from the Bank of England; if then it is not to make a loss over the transaction it must use the new £1,000,000 without delay. The only immediate uses to which the money can be put are to lend it in the bill market, or to buy bills or to invest it, generally in Government securities. In any event two results follow: The additional demands force down the bill rate and force up the price of tional demands force down the bill rate and force up the price of Government securities. As the process continues the sellers of the securities have funds to invest and look about for something which will give them a higher yield than is obtainable on Government stocks. Gradually, as the sums involved become larger the demand extends through every class of fixed interest stock and overlaps into the market for industrial securities. The opportunity has now come for new issues the proceeds of which will be spent in the purchase of materials and the payment of wages, and the newly created money will at length have found its way into trade. But the whole process in any circumstances takes time; when the circumstances are unpropitious the time may be very considerable. very considerable.

In the case of our own monetary expansion we have to remember that the sudden abundance of money was a preliminary to the war loan conversion scheme, which in the view of the responsible war loan conversion scheme, which in the view of the responsible authorities necessitated complete closure of the market for new capital. Ordinarily new issues provide a ready channel for the flow of new money into consumers' hands and, had the abundance of money been created for the purpose of testing its effect upon commodity prices and trade generally, the last thing we should have done would have been to close the market for capital issues. This is not said in criticism of the policy, for once the conversion was launched it was of vital importance to make it a success. It may be observed incidentally, however, that now the operation has been completed there seems no sufficient reason for continuing the han even in its present comparatively slight form. The expansive been completed there seems no sufficient reason for continuing the ban even in its present comparatively slight form. The expansive monetary policy in Great Britain has been in fact no more than half a policy so far as its effect upon trade is concerned, and it was only to be expected that it should up till now have yielded no marked and sustained rise in commodity prices.

When we turn to the United States I believe we shall find that not even a partial trial has been given to the policy of reflation. I speak on the subject, it is needless to say, with complete readiness to accept correction by American authorities on questions relating to their own monetary policy, but it has seemed to me that the current description of a continuous pumping of new credit into the banking system of the United States through the open-market operations of the Federal reserve banks does not convey, at any the banking system of the United States through the open-market operations of the Federal reserve banks does not convey, at any rate in its implications, a true impression of the facts. If we take a full view of recent American monetary policy we shall see that there has been no demonstration one way or the other of the effectiveness of a steady policy of reflation.

I will relate the facts as concisely as I can. Immediately following the suspension of gold payments in Great Britain a heavy outflow of gold took place from the United States, accompanied by large withdrawals of currency in consequence of widespread banking failures. Both of these movements tended to reduce the cash basis for the deposits of the commercial banks, and reinforcement was possible only by borrowing heavily from the Federal reserve banks. Little or no attempt was made at this time by the reserve banks, through open-market purchases of securities, to offset the acute stringency. The result was that bank deposits, which hitherto had declined only slowly, fell abruptly in the last few months of 1931. The deposits of all banks in the United States were no less than 11½ per cent lower on December 31 of that year than on the preceding June 30, but even then the decline had not spent itself.

It was in circumstances such as these that in March of last year the first steps were taken in what is cited as the great experiment in reflation. The reserve banks, aided by legislation to widen their the first steps were taken in what is dited as the global and in reflation. The reserve banks, aided by legislation to widen their powers, began to buy Government securities, first in small quantities and later in large volume. The express objects of this procedure were to ease a critical banking situation by enabling the banks to reduce their indebtedness to the central institutions and to add to the cash resources of the member banks. A reduction of member bank borrowings was achieved; but the addition to of member-bank borrowings was achieved; but the addition to cash reserves was small, owing to a renewed and heavy outflow of gold, and even the reduction of indebtedness was later checked by a fresh absorption of currency by the public. During the period of open-market buying bank deposits continued to decline, period of open-market buying bank deposits continued to decline, though only slightly. The steps taken to arrest the deterioration of the banking position had succeeded, but up to July no recovery had taken place in bank deposits, partly because the addition to bank cash had been relatively small and partly because this addition had been used merely to strengthen the ratio between cash and deposits. At this date—that is, July of last year—bank deposits were 19 per cent lower than a year earlier and actually 26 per cent below the figure for the end of 1928. By contrast British bank deposits at that date had responded to the increase of cash furnished by the operations of the Bank of England to such a degree that they were only 2 per cent below the total at the end of 1928.

Since the beginning of August the reserve banks have again pur-

Since the beginning of August the reserve banks have again pursued a passive policy, so far as open-market operations are concerned. Their holdings of investments have remained stable, but the gold stock has increased, while currency has returned from the public. As a result the member banks have been able further to reduce their indebtedness to the reserve banks to a low level, while at the same time their reserve balances have grown substantially, quite independently of central banking policy. Bank deposits have expanded on this fortuitously increased basis, but by no means to the full extent possible—actually, up to December, by only about 7 per cent. Whereas member-bank reserves have been brought back to a higher level than in September, 1931, their deposits are still far below. Meanwhile over the same period British bank deposits have grown by 11 per cent. The American banks have allowed their reserve balances to pile up in excess of legal requirements; the pressure of surplus cash has not yet been heavy enough or sufficiently long in operation to induce such large heavy enough or sufficiently long in operation to induce such large purchases of investments as will restore the volume of bank

In conditions of deep trade depression such as exist now in the United States a revival of some degree of confidence, which is indispensable for any embarking of new money in industry, seems to be obtainable only through a steady rise in the bond market. The initiative in such a rise apparently must come from the banks, and the movement will attain full strength when they feel themselves free to use their surplus cash. In the present uncertain temper of American depositors the banks continue to hold an excessive amount of cash, though the practice materially reduces their profits. Sooner or later, however, they will invest the surplus cash in securities, provided the surplus is kept large enough by the continued open-market operations of the reserve banks. High-class investments will then rise in price, and lowergrade stocks will slowly return to favor with a gradual strength-ening of confidence. The new capital market will revive, and in this way new money can eventually be brought into use by in-dustry in the United States. Although the method is less direct and less immediate and certain in its operation than the method in this country, in essentials the two are the same.

PROSPECTS FOR AN EXPANSIVE POLICY

There is nothing then in recent experience to give ground for There is nothing then in recent experience to give ground for discouragement or scepticism regarding the benefits to be derived from an expansive monetary policy. We are free to regulate in great measure our own price level by increasing or diminishing the quantity of money. But we must not allow ourselves to be disturbed by the fact that if gold continues to appreciate while our price level remains steady or rises the inevitable effect is a fall in our exchange. If we become alarmed by the fall and counteract it by a renewal of deflation, our exchange, it is true, will recover, but only at the expense of our trade. Internal prosperity with a balanced budget, lower taxation, and reduced unemployment is far more important to us than the rate of exchange. ployment is far more important to us than the rate of exchange. ployment is far more important to us than the rate of exchange. Sooner or later, even if no voluntary measures are adopted, budget deficits in gold-using countries will themselves produce a remedy for falling price levels, and we ought meanwhile to allow nothing to deter us from the policy of restoring our internal price level to a higher standard.

Two conditions, however, are essential for the success of this rollow. First, it must be pursued wholeheartedly; the mainte-

Two conditions, however, are essential for the success of this policy. First, it must be pursued wholeheartedly; the maintenance of an abundant supply of cheap money must be accompanied by full facilities for its use. And secondly, we should set aside, at least for the time being, all thought of returning to gold, either at the old or any new parity. There should be no attempt to govern our monetary conditions by reference either to the gold value of sterling or to the size of our gold stocks.

There is no reason whatshever, for example, for suggesting that There is no reason whatshever, for example, for suggesting that money should be dearer and scarcer here because gold has been sent to America in payment of an installment of war debt. In one respect at least the reported attitude of the British delegates to the preparatory commission of the World Economic Conference is cordially to be welcomed; it is worse than useless to consider returning to gold unless and until it shows some reasonable prospect of becoming a stable standard.

If under such conditions as I have mentioned an expansive monetary policy is consistently and strenuously pursued, I have little doubt that the enlarged supplies of money will lead to a higher level of commodity values. This result would have every prospect of paying the way to prosperity. Our national finances have been brought under better control; the spirit of our people, notwithstanding grave sufferings and disappointments at home and incessant difficulties abroad, is still firm and progressive; and the basic position of most of our industries is healthy. I believe, too, that many firms are paying great attention to scientific research, the value of which can hardly be overstated, though there is still large room for further advance in this direction. The fasearch, the value of which can hardly be overstated, though there is still large room for further advance in this direction. The facilities for such research, through Government establishments, trade organizations, and university institutions, are greater than ever before, and should be availed of to the full. Our traditional enterprise and inventiveness have by no means been extinguished. If then we match industrial and trading potentialities with a liberal and enlightened monetary policy we can ensure the fullest enjoyment of our own economic resources and at the same time contribute to the restoration of world-wide prosperity. contribute to the restoration of world-wide prosperity.

THE FALL IN BANK ADVANCES

The decline is evidence of the restricted field for accommodation The decline is evidence of the restricted field for accommodation to industry and trade, though it is sometimes interpreted as betraying pressure by the banks for repayment and reluctance in granting fresh facilities. In order to make the position clear I propose to quote a few figures. An analysis has been made of the advances on June 30, 1932, the latest practicable date, and the results have been compared with those for the end of 1929, when the more recent slump in trade was only in its early stages.

Between these two dates our advances fell by £23,500,000. Of this sum however, the drop in advances for financial purposes—this sum, however, the drop in advances for financial purposes— chiefly for investment in stocks and shares—accounted for £10,-500,000, a movement paralleled by the heavy fall in stock-exchange loans included in money at call and short notice. Thus little more than one-half of the decrease remains to be accounted for under than one-half of the decrease remains to be accounted for under the general heading of accommodation to industry and trade.

When the detailed figures are examined it becomes clear that the decline in business advances is not traceable to undue pressure on the smaller borrower, but to shrinkage in the demand. Our advances to agriculture, for example, which number more than 18,000, were actually higher by nearly 5 per cent than at the end of 1929. Similarly, advances to over 20,000 small retailers, as distinct from stores, multiple-shop organizations, and cooperative societies, show a rise of 9 per cent. The only other increase of note is in advances for building and the related trades, and these again are small on the average. Almost every other group shows a decline, in some instances very slight. The total number of advances, as opposed to the amount, is slightly increased.

The downward movement in the total amount is readily explained by two main tendencies. First, temporary accommodation has been largely replaced either by new issues of capital or debentures or by fixed, long-term loans from insurance complaned by two main tendencies. First, temporary accommodation has been largely replaced either by new issues of capital or debentures or by fixed, long-term loans from insurance companies, savings banks, and similar institutions. As an example, advances to local authorities and public-utility companies declined over the period by £2,000,000, while a number of new issues among industrial and trading companies account for a much larger sum. Secondly, the rise in prices of gilt-edged securities, more especially since the end of 1931, has induced many trade borrowers to realize investments for the purpose of repaying, in part or in whole, their obligations to the bank. These two tendencies together would seem to have resulted in a reduction in the total advances even larger than that actually recorded under the heading of trade and industry. It may be concluded, therefore, that ample facilities have been accorded to meet all reasonable requirements of industry and trade in these times of exceptional difficulty. I should add that, notwithstanding the quietude in the new capital market, the influences mentioned have operated with increased force during the past six months. six months.

For these reasons our advances now stand at the lowest level in relation to deposits recorded since 1919. We are consequently in an extremely liquid position. If the present level of deposits is maintained in pursuit of a wise monetary policy, we shall be able to meet all reasonable demands upon us for fresh business accommodations

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE DEPARTMENTS OF STATE, JUSTICE, ETC.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Fess in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14363) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. Hale, Mr. Keyes, Mr. Moses, Mr. McKellar, and Mr. HAYDEN conferees on the part of the Senate.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1933

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Hear us, Blessed Lord, as we pray that each day we may grow increasingly appreciative of the treasures of the immortal soul. We ask for the enrichment and the enlargement of our deepest spiritual natures. Here let us realize our faith and hope in an everlasting inheritance; we thank Thee for the prospect. It is written on the brow of the morning, it is colored on the face of the sky, it is emblazoned in the radiance of the sunlight, and we praise Thee that it is the master light of Thy revealed word. O God, how glorious it is for us to be faithful to our privileges and opportunities. O let our fidelity mean bending our whole soul to our tasks. By industry, patience, and perseverance may we meet Thy approval. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 5125. An act to amend the emergency relief and reconstruction act of 1932.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL, FISCAL YEAR 1934

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 13520) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13520) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 4, and 12.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 5, 6, 10, 11, and 13, and agree to the same.

The committee of conference report a disagreement on amendments numbered 1, 7, 8, 9, 14, 15, 16, 17, and 18.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13520) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

On Nos. 2 and 3, relating to the Customs Service: Makes a technical correction in the text of the appropriation and appropriates $19,900,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $17,500,000, as proposed by the Senate, for collecting the revenue from customs.

On No. 4: Appropriates $30,800,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $29,800,000, as proposed by the Senate, for expenses of collecting internal revenue.

On No. 5: Makes a technical correction in the text of the appropriation for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

On No. 6: Makes a technical correction in the text of the appropriation for freight, etc., under the Public Health Service.

On No. 10: Strikes out, as proposed by the Senate, the authority in the House bill for "acquisition of sites or of additional land," in connection with the appropriation for public-building construction.

On No. 11: Provides, as proposed by the Senate, that the American Red Cross Building may be served with heat from the Government central heating plant, if the Red Cross agrees to bear the expense of connecting the building with Government mains and to pay for heat furnished at rates to be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, but not less than cost.

On No. 12: Restores the appropriation of $19,000,000 for inland transportation of mail by aircraft, all of which had been stricken out by the Senate.

On No. 13: Exempts, as proposed by the Senate, the use of automobiles by the President from the general restriction on use of Government automobiles.

The committee of conference report in disagreement the following amendments:

On No. 1: Relating to the price and the making of awards for the purchase of distinctive paper for United States securities.

On Nos. 7, 8, and 9, relating to mints and assay offices: Restoring to the bill the sum of $25,000 to provide for the continuance of the assay offices at Boise, Idaho, Salt Lake City, Utah, Helena, Mont., and Carson City, Nev.; these offices were omitted from the House bill.

On No. 14: Amending the House provisions relative to the continuance, during the fiscal year 1934, of certain temporary sections of the economy act in effect during the present fiscal year; amending certain permanent sections of the economy act; and proposing other new legislation upon a number of other subjects. As to this amendment the managers on the part of the House expect to offer a motion to recede and concur with an amendment striking out all of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment and inserting in lieu thereof other matter. The matter to be proposed will be separately printed for the information of Members in advance of its presentation to the House.

On No. 15: Making a change in a section number.

On No. 16: Authorizing the Court of Claims to charge and collect certain fees for the filing of petitions, certifying transcripts of records, furnishing certified copies of opinions, etc.

On No. 17: Comprising Title III of the bill and known as the "Buy American" amendment.

On No. 18: Providing that if any provision of the entire act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application thereof to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman withhold that for just a moment?

Mr. SNELL. We would like to ask a question or two.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to ask one question, especially in view of the adoption by the House on yesterday of the resolution submitting the repeal of the eighteenth amendment, whether the conferees, in view of that prospective action, took into consideration the reduction by $1,000,000 of the amount for the enforcement of the Volstead Act?

Mr. BYRNS. We did not. We agreed on the report last Saturday, and prohibition is not involved in this proposition at all. There was nothing in conference between the two committees with reference to the appropriation for enforcement of the prohibition act.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, I understood the Senate had cut down the appropriation as passed by the House $1,000,000.

Mr. BYRNS. That is in another bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Bureau of Internal Revenue-

Mr. BYRNS. That has no relation to prohibition.

Mr. BLANTON. The committee's foresight is better than the gentleman's hindsight.

Mr. STAFFORD. My hindsight has always been good as far as the eighteenth amendment is concerned, because I have been unalterably opposed to it from the very beginning, from the very time these blatant fanatics tried to enforce the views of their individual constituencies upon the Nation.

Mr. BLANTON. Those of the gentleman just now certainly are not fanatical remarks.

Mr. BYRNS. May I say this, that some of us at least, and this applies to the drys as well as the wets, will have some relief in the fact that Congress has at last disposed of this question of submission of the repeal of the eighteenth amendment, and perhaps we can have some measure come up before the House in which somebody will not raise that Mr. BLANTON. And where and when we can have sane action.

Mr. STAFFORD. I hope the gentleman will bear that in mind in cutting down the amount of appropriation for enforcement, where we can save millions and millions of Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman tell the House why the conferees yielded on 7, 8, and 9, restoring the same for the continuance of the various assay offices?

Mr. BYRNS. We did not yield. That is still in disagreement. I expect to ask the House to further insist.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield. Mr. RANKIN. May I ask the gentleman from Tennessee what disposition was made of what is known as the Bratton amendment?

Mr. BYRNS. That is not included in this report, but I will say that we do not recommend it, but that will come up later.

Mr. SNELL. One more question. As I understand, when it comes to the amendment which the gentleman proposes to offer, it will be read section by section, and the gentleman will explain to the House what has been done, and what he proposes to do?

Mr. BYRNS. We have not come to that yet.

Mr. SNELL. I say the gentleman intends to do that?

Mr. BYRNS. No. I will say to the gentleman frankly that I think that can come up later, but I may as well say now frankly that I had hoped that would not be necessary. I think everybody is familiar with the amendment. It would take two or three days if we took it up section by section, but I think we can agree upon ample time which will protect every Member of this House who has a genuine and germane amendment to offer, and allow sufficient time for him to discuss it and for others to discuss the various provisions.

Mr. REED of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. Do I understand the amendment will be read so that we will have an opportunity to offer amendments?

Mr. BYRNS. Oh, yes. It will be offered, but I may say it is not up now, and it is not a part of my motion at the present time. I offered it yesterday, as the gentleman knows. It was published in the RECORD this morning. In addition to that, separate copies were made, which are available to all the Members this morning and were available yesterday afternoon. So I can not see any object in reading it and taking up the time of the House, but, of course, the gentleman has the right to insist upon that.

Mr. REED of New York. What I am anxious about is to have an opportunity to offer an amendment.

Mr. BYRNS. There will be plenty of opportunity af-

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman yield right there on offering amendments? The gentleman will be in control of the time?

Mr. BYRNS. Half of it.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The question I wanted to ask is, Will the person who will be in control of the other half of the time be in control of the time for debate, or could he yield five minutes to some Member to offer an amendment?

Mr. BYRNS. Of course, I will submit the request later, when it will be explained what I have in mind, but it is my idea to agree upon a time, and yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] or the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THATCHER] control of the time upon that side, with the idea that in the time yielded to that side any gentleman can offer amendments.

The time yielded on that side will take care of those both pro and con on that side, and the time yielded on this side will be used in the same way.

Mr. RAMSPECK. And as amendments are offered I presume they will be disposed of?

Mr. BYRNS. I hope they will be disposed of promptly.

Mr. RANKIN. Several of us are very much interested in what is called the Bratton amendment that will probably affect the present set-up of the Veterans' Administration with reference to hospitals, regional offices, and so forth. We want to know just when this Bratton amendment will come up for consideration, whether or not the House will vote first on the recommendation of the House conferees and then vote on the Bratton amendment.

Mr. BYRNS. I may say to the gentleman that if it comes up at all it will not come up under the motion which I will offer later. Under the present state of the record it will not come up at all unless somebody offers it.

Mr. RANKIN. I thank the gentleman from Tennessee. The gentleman does not intend to offer it?

Mr. BYRNS. No.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. RAMSPECK. With reference to amendment No. 10, on which the report states the House conferees recede, does that affect sites authorized to be acquired under the emergency act last year?

Mr. BYRNS. It does not. I may say to the gentleman: it will not have any effect on the regular program.

The SPEAKER. The question is one the conference report. The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 1, page 10, line 5: Insert the following: "35 cents: Provided further, That in order to foster competition in the manufacture of distinctive paper for United States securities, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized, in his discretion, to split the award for such paper for the fiscal year 1934 between the fiscal year 1934 between the fiscal year 1934 between the fiscal years 1934 between the fiscal year 1934 be two bidders whose prices per pound are the lowest received after advertisement, but not in excess of the price fixed herein."

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 1, and agree to the same with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Byrns moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 1 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the figures "35" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "32"."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that amendments Nos. 7, 8, and 9 be considered together.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 7, page 34, line 4, after the word "Colorado," insert the words "Carson City."

Amendment No. 9, page 34, line 16, strike out the figures "$1,250,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,275,000."

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendments.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Byrns) there were-ayes 218, noes 0.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I think the Members of the House are fully familiar with this amendment and I am going to present a motion to concur with an amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of this amendment be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. REED of New York. I will withhold it for a moment. Mr. BYRNS. This is the amendment of the Senate. Of course, if the gentleman insists, it will have to be read, but I shall offer a motion which will strike out this amendment and concur with an amendment which I will offer. So I think we are just wasting the time of the House in the reading of a very voluminous amendment.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 14: On page 65, beginning with line 18, strike out the remainder of the page and down to line 22, page 68, and insert:

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to concur with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Byrns moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 14 and agree to the same with the following amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it. Mr. STAFFORD. As the proposed amendment was incorporated in the Record of yesterday, is it necessary to have it read at this time?

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of this amendment be dispensed with and that it be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The motion is as follows:

Mr. Byrns moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14 and agree to the same with the following amendment: Strike out all of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment and insert the following:

"Sec. 13. The act entitled 'An act to provide for deducting any debt due the United States from any judgment recovered against the United States by such debtor,' approved March 3, 1875 (U.S. C., title 31, sec. 227), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'That when any final judgment recovered against the United States duly allowed by legal authority shall be presented to the Comptroller General of the United States for payment, and the plaintiff therein shall be indebted to the United States in any manner, whether as principal or surety, it shall be the duty of the Comptroller General of the United States to withhold payment of an amount of such judgment equal to the debt thus due to the United States; and if such plaintiff assents to such set-off, and discharges his judgment or an amount thereof equal to said debt, an amount of such judgment equal to the debt thus due to the United States; and if such plaintiff assents to such set-off, and discharges his judgment or an amount thereof equal to said debt, the Comptroller General of the United States shall execute a discharge of the debt due from the plaintiff to the United States. But if such plaintiff denies his indebtedness to the United States, or refuses to consent to the set-off, then the Comptroller General of the United States shall withhold payment of such further amount of such judgment, as in his opinion will be sufficient to cover all legal charges and costs in prosecuting the debt of the United States to final judgment. And if such debt is not already in suit, it shall be the duty of the Comptroller General of the United States to cause legal proceedings to be immediately commenced to enforce the same, and to cause the same to be prosecuted to final judgment with all reasonable dispatch. And if in such action judgment shall be rendered against the United States, or the amount recovered for debt and costs shall be less than the amount so withheld as before provided, the balance shall then be paid over to such plaintiff by such Comptroller General of the United States with 6 per cent interest thereon for the time it has been withheld from the plaintiff."

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit the following unanimous-consent request with reference to the time to be had on this amendment, and I will say it is the desire of the House conferees that every Member who has an amendment pending that he wishes to offer will have that opportunity, and also that Members who want to discuss my amendment may have the opportunity.

So I am going to ask unanimous consent that on this motion and all amendments to the motion the time be limited to three hours, to be equally divided and controlled by myself upon this side of the aisle and by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] or the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THATCHER] on the opposite side of the aisle; that during this time amendments may be proposed to the motion, which I have sent to the Clerk's desk, by gentlemen who are yielded time; that the time consumed in voting on said amendments shall be excluded from the time fixed for debate, and at the conclusion of the time fixed for debate the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon the motion and all motions made thereto.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That debate on the motion of Mr. Byrns to recede with an amendment in Senate amendment 14 to the bill H. R. 13520 and all amendments to that motion be limited to three hours, the time to be equally divided and controlled between Mr. Byrns and Mr. Wood of Indiana; that during that time amendments may be proposed to the motion of Mr. Byrns by gentlemen that are yielded time; that the time consumed in voting on said amendments shall be excluded from the time fixed for debate, and at the conclusion of the time fixed for debate the revious question shall be considered as ordered on the motion of Mr. Byrns and all motions thereto.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, to ask the gentleman a question. I did not understand who could offer amendments.

Mr. BYRNS. Those to whom time is yielded. Mr. SNELL. The time is given to the gentleman from Tennessee and to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THATCHER], and any man who is yielded time by them can offer amendments.

Mr. BYRNS. That is what the request is intended to cover.

Mr. SNELL. I wanted to be sure about that.

Mr. MICHENER. If the gentleman will yield, if a man does not get time, then he can not offer an amendment.

Mr. BYRNS. Not under the unanimous-consent request. Mr. MICHENER. Would it not be well to modify the request so that any Member may offer amendments?

Mr. BYRNS. I am going to issue an invitation on this side to every man who has an amendment to offer to let me know, and I think the same thing will be done on the other side.

Mr. SNELL. So far as the time is concerned, I think we ought to consider the motion in the time proposed, but I rather dislike to be bound at this time. It seems to me it would be a good proposition for the gentleman from Tennessee to explain the effect of this motion and let us go along for a little while and see if it will not work out all right. I think the amendment ought to be considered in three hours, but I really would not like to bind myself now by unanimous-consent agreement about the amendments.

Mr. BYRNS. I will say to the gentleman that I was under the impression after the brief statement I made yesterday and with the insertion of this motion in the RECORD that it would be entirely clear to Members as to just what the committee is proposing.

Mr. SNELL. I may say to the gentleman that we could not hear him yesterday because there was so much confusion in the House.

Mr. BYRNS. I made no statement yesterday except to say what I was going to do.

Mr. SNELL. I think the gentleman from Tennessee should make a careful explanation of what he is proposing to do here. I have read this over pretty carefully, and I am frank to say that I do not understand it. Maybe I am not up to the average, but I think the gentleman should explain his amendment as carefully as possible to the entire House and take whatever time is necessary to do this. I do not want to delay the matter and I do not want to object, but I wish the gentleman would go along for a little while and then later, if it is necessary, I am willing to agree as to time.

Mr. RAMSEYER. If the gentleman will permit, let me see if I understand the gentlemen. I think the gentleman from New York wants the gentleman from Tennessee to take up this amendment paragraph by paragraph and explain its meaning.

Mr. BYRNS. We would never get through. Mr. SNELL. I think we ought to know what it is. The average man of this House knows nothing about what the first 11 pages of this amendment mean.

Mr. BYRNS. I certainly want the House to know what the amendment means, and I will say to the gentleman that my proposition was not made with a view of depriving the House of such knowledge, but rather to give to the membership the right to offer amendments, either adding to or taking from the motion, and then having an expression from the House upon any germane amendment.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman, of course, knows what the motion means, but the rest of us do not.

Mr. BYRNS. There is only one hour, unless we can come to some agreement.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman said yesterday he was going to give us sufficient time to offer amendments.

Mr. BYRNS. I want to do that, and that is the reason I am proposing three hours.

The SPEAKER. May the Chair suggest to the gentleman that under the rules of the House the gentleman from Tennessee would have one hour. The Chair does not presume the gentleman would want to let some one have the floor and forego the right to move the previous question. As the Chair understands it, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns] is trying to have three hours of general debate so there may be full opportunity to explain the motion. The gentleman also wants to give the House full opportunity to amend his motion if it desires to do so, and the gentleman proposes, in order to accomplish that, to yield time to gentlemen on the Democratic side who desire to offer amendments, and suggests that the same thing be done on the Republican side.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the statement of the gentleman yesterday, as it appears in the Record, is that every Member of the House would have the right to offer any germane amendment to the amendment which the gentleman has now proposed.

Mr. BYRNS. That is my expectation if this request is granted.

Mr. MAPES. But the unanimous-consent request which the gentleman has submitted seems to put a very material limitation on that, if the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from Kentucky see fit to limit it. Members, in order to offer amendments, according to the gentleman's request, must first get permission from one or the other of those gentlemen in general debate.

Mr. BYRNS. I may say to the gentleman and to the House-

Mr. MAPES. Was there any purpose in the gentleman putting on that limitation?

Mr. BYRNS. None in the world.

Mr. MICHENER. The purpose is clear.

Mr. BYRNS. I have just said to the gentleman and to the House that if this unanimous-consent request is granted, it is my hope that any Member upon the Democratic side of the Chamber will come to me at once and tell me whether he has an amendment which he expects to offer, or if later on it should develop he wants to do so, he will let me know, and I will see to it that, out of the time I have, he is given an opportunity to offer his amendment.

Mr. MAPES. In other words, if any Member who has an amendment does not get time in general debate, he will be given time to offer the amendment and have it read at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. BYRNS. Yes. But let me say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], who asks if there will be an explanation, that there will be. He should not expect me to take the floor and occupy 30 or 40 minutes' time to the exclusion of gentlemen who want to be heard; that is what I am trying to avoid

Mr. MAPES. I do not know whether the gentleman from Tennessee answered my question definitely. There was so much confusion in the Chamber I could not hear his answer. I think we ought to understand it before we agree to the unanimous-consent request. Every Member, whether he gets time or not, will be given time to have his amendment read from the Clerk's desk.

Mr. BYRNS. For the third time I will say to the gentleman—and I think I speak for the gentleman from Kentucky, who will control the time in the absence of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood]—that they will be given that opportunity.

Mr. MAPES. I think this is the first time, if the gentleman will permit, that he has so stated definitely.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. The real purpose of this provision in the unanimous-consent agreement, so far as amendments are concerned, is that the gentleman from Tennessee shall retain the floor.

Mr. BYRNS. That is one reason.

Mr. MICHENER. If the gentleman from Tennessee yielded for an amendment without this agreement, the gentleman from Tennessee would lose the floor; and that, I suppose, is the reason the Parliamentarian so worded the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. BYRNS. That is one reason.

Mr. STAFFORD. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. I take it that in the interpretation of the unanimous-consent request voting on the amendments will be deferred until the conclusion of the three hours' debate. Am I in error?

The SPEAKER. The amendments can be disposed of in the time of the general debate, but the time for voting will not be taken out of the time for debate.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee if he intends to dispose of the amendments as they are offered?

Mr. BYRNS. I hoped that that would be done, because it will avoid confusion.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I am asking this question in good faith—the provisions in this proposed amendment are so complicated that I think the gentleman from Tennessee should make some explanation to the House.

Mr. BYRNS. I am sure everything in the amendment will be made entirely clear.

Mr. SNELL. I have no doubt we can dispose of it within the three hours.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I called attention to the fact that to-morrow is Washington's Birthday, and that for several years we have failed to have read his Farewell Address on that day. I want to know what the legislative program is for to-morrow, if the Chair knows?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not advised.

Mr. RANKIN. I want to say to the House now that I am going to insist, as I have constantly insisted for the last 10 years, on the reading of Washington's Farewell Address in this House every time his birthday rolls around, especially at this time, when the international bankers are trying to wreck American institutions. [Applause.]

One of the main troubles with this country to-day is that we have departed from the teachings of Washington and Jefferson and yielded too much to the influences of those international elements who profit at the expense of the American people and by the destruction of American institutions.

To use the words of the immortal Washington himself, "How many opportunities do they afford to tamper with domestic factions, to practice the arts of seduction, to mislead public opinion, to influence or awe the public councils."

What a striking manifestation of this warning we have to-day, when these international financiers who have $16,-000,000,000 loaned abroad are attempting to secure the cancellation of $9,000,000,000 of Europe's debts to the United States in order to strengthen the securities of their private loans abroad. They know, and everyone else knows, that these debts can not be canceled. Every dollar that is taken off of them is thereby transferred to the backs of the already overburdened taxpayers of America, for the suffering people of the present generation, their children, and their children's children to pay, throughout the decades that are to come.

They are telling us that if this is done they can force the rest of the world back onto the gold standard, and such was even intimated, if not boldly stated, in the President's message of yesterday. Having accomplished that purpose at our expense they then propose to stabilize us on the present low-price levels of 5-cent cotton and 20-cent wheat, that would mean eternal slavery for the agricultural peoples of the country as well as for all the other toilers throughout the land.

Washington in that short statement warns us that yielding to these alien influences affords them opportunities to "mislead public opinion" and to "influence or awe the public councils."

Here we are to-day in the midst of the greatest money panic of all history, with misery and suffering, poverty, failures, foreclosures, hunger, and suicide on every hand—conditions that could be cured in 30 days if Congress would only respond to the wishes of the American people and give us the necessary currency expansion to bring back commodity prices. But these international bankers, through a subsidized press and through their subservient minions throughout the country, are misleading public opinion and, as Washington said, influencing or overawing our public councils.

They are even using their insidious influences to try to control, dictate, or influence the organization of the next Congress so as to block the passage of legislation for such currency expansion as would bring relief to all the American people.

They are bending every effort, through the press and otherwise, to influence the selection of the Cabinet of the incoming administration and to alienate the incoming President from those progressive influences that are responsible for his nomination and election. In this they are reckoning without their host. Mr. Roosevelt knows them too well to fall into their trap.

I hope you will all join me in my demand for the reading of this immortal message.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee, which has been read at the desk? There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to myself. As I said yesterday, the motion which I have presented here on the part of the House conferees does not in every respect represent the views of every particular conferee of the House. What I mean by that is that there are some of the conferees who probably differ from some of the provisions contained in the motion, but the motion which I have presented does represent, I think I can fairly say, the views of the majority of the conferees and in most instances of all of them. I feel that I should except particularly from that statement the reorganization plan of which one or two of the conferees did not express approval. At the present time, however, I have no recollection of any other action taken by the House conferees which does not meet with unanimous approval, and the conferees present on the floor can correct me if I am mistaken as to that.

We have eliminated certain provisions in the Senate amendment. One of the main controlling reasons which has prompted the House conferees to present this motion is the fact that we did not want to include any matter that had been suggested from the outside, even though there were some of the conferees who agreed to it, and thus provoke a discussion, possibly, at the other end of the Capitol on new matters which might delay and jeopardize the passage of this bill, or to place in the bill any provision which we felt might possibly provoke a veto, because we all feel that these appropriation bills ought to be passed between now and the adjournment of Congress. If there are any amendments which may be deemed advisable to this amendment later on, I am sure they can be brought to the attention of the next Congress at its extra session, where they can be given full consideration, and that will be in a very short time. The all-important thing, it seems to me, is that we dispose of these appropriation bills, because we are going to be called into extra session for the purpose of considering a number of major and all-important economic problems, and certainly there ought to be time given to a full deliberation and consideration of those questions unhampered by any necessity to pass some appropriation bill between now and July 1. That matter had its influence upon your conferees.

These matters will come up later, because I take it there will be some amendments offered, and I would not like to take up the time allotted on this side in discussing them and cutting out some Member over here who wants to be heard.

In the motion which I have presented we have eliminated a provision in the Senate amendment which proposed to levy an 8½ per cent reduction upon the pay of enlisted personnel, active and retired. We did that because for the first time this year we are taking from the enlisted personnel the bonus privilege which they receive upon reenlistment, and in that way we are saving to the Treasury for the next year over $5,000,000. That means something like between 4 and 5 per cent reduction in the pay of those who reenlist of this enlisted personnel, and in view of their small salaries, entering as they do at $21 per month and having to work themselves up, we felt that that was fair.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. How does the proposed amendment affect the pay of officers, particularly of retired officers?

Mr. BYRNS. Oh, it applies to their pay.

So far as the officers are concerned, there is no change. As to the provision in respect to automatic promotions, we have not included that in our motion because we felt, as the Economy Committee did and as Congress did last year, that in a bill which sought to bring about economies it was inconsistent to provide for increases.

The McKellar amendment, as all know, had reference to tax refunds. We did not see fit to include in our motion that amendment for the simple reason we felt it ought to be put upon another bill and ought not to jeopardize the final approval of this bill, as his amendment once received a veto, as we all remember.

The Bureau of Efficiency was abolished by the Senate. This motion does not include that, because it was the judgment of all five of the conferees on the part of the House that that bureau ought to be continued, particularly at this time.

As to the Bratton amendment, which sought to make a 5 per cent general reduction, your conferees felt that the President to-day has that authority, as was shown when President Coolidge set apart a 2 per cent reserve a few years ago, and since the President has that authority, and since some of these bureaus have already been carved to the bone, we thought it better to leave it to the President, who could exercise some discretion when he comes to apply it, provided he thinks some of those bureaus ought to be cut. It may be that some of them ought to be cut 10 or even 15 per cent, I do not know. In addition to that also was the suggestion that was made to us that it meant the discharge of a number of employees, including some 8,000 postal employees, and would also affect our national defense.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I hope the gentleman will take more time and take up these amendments one after the other. There are many Members who do not understand them in detail, and we would like to know the effect of the changes made. I would like to ask the gentleman to go a little further and go into the question of the Bureau of Efficiency. This is a small item, it is true, but, having a little knowledge of that subject myself, I think the members of the Economy Committee felt that the Congress or the Government could dispense with the Bureau of Efficiency because we have the Budget officer and other agencies supposedly doing the same kind of work for the Government, the very work this bureau is supposed to do.

The SPEAKER. This is all taken out of the time of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BYRNS. I understood that some one would probably offer a motion to amend the motion I have submitted, by including the Bureau of Efficiency. If that be true, the whole matter will be discussed then, and I felt it would be threshing over old straw at this time.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The gentleman from Tennessee knows more about this subject than the average man sitting on this floor, and we are anxious to hear the gentleman, in his inimitable way, explain the various provisions of the amendment. The gentleman is so familiar with this subject that the Members desire to hear him. I do appeal to the gentleman that he take more time and give the House the benefit of his knowledge. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has used 12 minutes.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself five additional minutes.

Mr. SNELL. I think it is more important that the gentleman from Tennessee explain the first 10 pages of this bill, and we would rather hear the gentleman from Tennessee talk about things in the bill than to hear various members who do not know about it. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee has control of one and one-half hours, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Thatcher] has control of one and one-half hours

Mr. BYRNS. Frankly, I would rather give some of these gentlemen an opportunity to offer amendments.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to take 10 additional minutes, and, if the House will bear with me, I think I can quickly run over this. [Applause.]

We heard the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. McDuffie] a few minutes ago raise the question as to the Bureau of Efficiency. That bureau was created a great many years ago. Your conferees felt that particularly at this time it was not feasible or proper to eliminate that bureau, which costs $159,000 a year. They came to that conclusion for this reason: If this bill becomes law, we are undertaking to give the President of the United States wide and broad powers in the consolidation of bureaus and other activities in the Government, in the executive departments. The President will need all of the available help he can get in order to obtain all the facts necessary to come to a wise and proper conclusion. Of course, he will have his Bureau of the Budget, but the Bureau of the Budget will be engaged in other duties as well as that. He will have his departments, but they will likewise be otherwise engaged. He will have the General Accounting Office, but it has important duties; but here is one agency upon which he can put his finger, and he can tell that agency, "Go and get me this information and go and make this investigation and come back and report to me and those with whom I am advising, relative to these consolidations."

Particularly we felt at this time it would not be proper to take from the President of the United States that agency upon which he can call. I am not speaking for the head of the bureau or any man connected with it, because the President can to-morrow remove him, and if he is not satisfied with him he can put somebody else in his place. He has no term of office. He can be removed at any minute or any hour; but I am speaking for the agency which is in a position to furnish this information.

Permit me to tell you this. It is no secret. Already investigations are being made to see just what can be done by way of consolidation. I do not suppose I am disclosing any secret when I say that the Hon. Swagar Sherley, once a very influential and prominent Member of this House, is now engaged in making an investigation with reference to the consolidation of bureaus and other activities of the Government with a view to having a report ready for the President very soon after his inauguration. Mr. Sherley is using this very bureau in his work.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Of course, I do not have in mind any personality. Mr. Brown is a very splendid gentleman, and this is a small matter as compared with the whole, when we come to consider the question of retrenchment in Government. The gentleman will recall, however, that Mr. Brown was before the Economy Committee last year, and when he was asked whether or not he had ever gone over the various departments of this Government to determine whether or not there was duplication of service, whether or not there were useless employees and general efficiency, he answered in the negative.

Mr. BYRNS. But this is not a fight on Mr. Brown. I just said it was not of so much concern as to whether Mr. Brown held his job or not as it was to give the President the agencies with which to secure the information necessary for this very important work.

Mr. McDUFFIE. And neither do I.

Mr. BYRNS. The President can remove him if he is not doing his duty. I am talking about the agency and not about the individual who holds the position as chairman.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The gentleman knows that the gentleman sitting on my right, Mr. Marcellus Sheild, can get that information as quickly as the Bureau of Efficiency, and probably do it in a much better way.

Mr. BYRNS. Oh, there is not a man connected with the Congress, and I say this with all due deliberation, who does as much work to-day as Mark Sheild [applause], and I think it would be an imposition upon him to ask him, under the circumstances, to go into this voluminous amount of work, which is much greater than my friend anticipates, and get all the information with reference to bureaus. There is a limit as to what a man can do.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The so-called Bratton amendment is section 18 on page 8, estimated to provide for economies amounting to $140,000,000?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes, sir.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. That has been eliminated. The Bratton amendment, as amended by the Costigan amendment, has been eliminated in the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. And, as I understand now, the reason for the elimination is that the President of the United States has the authority to make the 5 per cent reduction.

Mr. BYRNS. That is one reason.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. If that be the reason, why not make it perfectly clear by retaining the Bratton amendment?

Mr. BYRNS. That is one reason. The other reason is, as I tried to say a moment ago, that many of these departments have been pared to the bone. I happen to know that. Many bureaus have been pared to the bone in the House bill. If not, I am the worst-fooled man in Congress. Possibly other bureaus have escaped us. Subsequent things may occur which will bring about a 5 per cent, 10 per cent, or possibly 20 per cent reduction, and maybe more; but there are bureaus in here to which if you seek to apply a 5 per cent cut as the Bratton amendment provides, you will destroy.

Therefore, since the President has the authority to do this, since it has once before been exercised by a President of the United States, we felt it was vastly better to give to the President of the United States the opportunity to look into these various appropriations and then to exercise his discretion as to where he should make a cut and where he should not make it.

There is another reason. I may say to the gentleman from Mississippi I may not voice his views or the views of many upon this floor, but I am convinced, so far as I am concerned, without regard to what the position of any Member of this House may be on the subject of national defense, that now is not the time to cripple our Navy. [Applause.]

Under the Bratton amendment, I am told by reputable officers of the Navy that at least 33 ships will be laid up. The Navy will be greatly crippled and handicapped. They say that if this Bratton amendment goes through we will find ourselves in the position where our Navy will not be the equal of the navy of Japan and we will no longer find ourselves in the 5-5-3 position.

There is a third position, I may say to the gentleman. The Postmaster General, Mr. Brown, says that it will require 7,000 or 8,000 dismissals in the Postal Department, in the field service. I do not know whether this is true or not. It may be that more ought to be let out; I do not know; but when a retiring Post Office official tells us that and tells us that in his opinion it will greatly cripple that department and embarrass his successor of an opposite political faith, I am much inclined, outside of the individual—I have a great respect for him—to give full credence to his statement. Therefore I felt the next Postmaster General ought to have an opportunity to look into this. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WOODRUM). The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the situation in which we find ourselves with reference to economizing in the expenses of government. I wish I had time to lay the responsibility for our present condition where it belongs.

The Constitution of the United States very definitely prescribed three distinct attributes of government—the legislative, the executive, and the judicial. If this Government is to endure these three distinctions must be maintained.

I appreciate the fact that the Government is expending to-day more money than it should be expending for the conduct of its affairs. I appreciate the fact that there is duplication and overlapping in almost every department. I appreciate the fact that it is a great trial to destroy and undo these things. I appreciate the fact that this Congress is now confronted, as perhaps it never before has been confronted, with the responsibility of undoing that for which it is responsible.

There is not a waste in this Government but that for which the Congress of the United States is responsible; there is not a duplication in government but that for which the Congress of the United States is responsible; there is not an overlapping of jurisdiction but that for which the Congress of the United States is responsible. Not one of these things ever could have existed but for the action of Congress.

There is not a waste in this Government but what the Congress of the United States is responsible for. There is not a duplication in government but what the Congress of the United States is responsible for. There is not an overlapping of jurisdiction but what the Congress of the United States is responsible for. Not one of these things ever could have existed but for the action of Congress.

Time and again I have inveighed against the practice of Congress in creating bureaus or commissions and giving them the right to adopt rules and regulations for their conduct. This practice has gone on to such an extent that we find ourselves to-day not a democratic form of government, but a bureaucratic form of government; and we can not deny our responsibility or the responsibility of the Congresses that have gone before us.

It occurs to me that by reason of this responsibility it is the part of cowardice for this Congress now to say that we are not capable of undoing, or able to undo, the evil that Congress has created. [Applause.] To do so is to confess that this branch of the Government founded by the fathers has become impotent. If it be so, how long in the future will it be until this branch of Government may say that the judicial part of it likewise has become impotent? How long in the future will it be until we acknowledge the statement made by an English writer 40 years ago to the effect that this Government could not maintain itself for a long period of time by reason of the liberties granted within our Constitution and would fall of its own weight? This is one of the tests of a democratic form of government.

Mr. Speaker, even in this time of distress we must stop and reflect whether or not the cure we are trying to administer is not fallacious, whether or not it will not be poison in the veins of the Republic.

Away back yonder when the first trial, when the first battle for democracy was made in the English Parliament between the members of Parliament and the King with reference to who should control the purse strings of the Government, it was decided that representatives of the people should control those purse strings. The Congress until this hour has maintained this prerogative.

Has the time come when we are going to surrender that right that was established by the English-speaking people and handed down to us through the centuries and say to-day that we are incapable of doing the things that was then the right and duty of a democratic form of government to do? I am not willing to subscribe that this is true.

It may be that if we had a dictator to-day to say to the farmer, "You are only to raise so much wheat, so much corn, and so much rye," and to say to the industries of this country, "You are only to produce this, that, and the other," it might be a solution for the present emergency, but our people would not submit to it.

There have been inflictions upon the Constitution here before. They were had during a period of stress far greater than that in which we now find ourselves. Some of them were had within the memory of many now living, within the knowledge of all of you who have read the history of the Civil War. The Constitution of the United States was then violated, violated, and violated again and again because of the necessity of war. Does that necessity now exist? Are we to confess that we are in a state of war? We are possibly in a condition incident to the necessities of war, but we are not in a position to give ourselves the right to take advantage of the necessities of war, unless we confess our utter inability to solve this peace-time problem.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; I do not yield. We are not in a position to give ourselves the right to take advantage of the necessities of war unless we confess we are not any longer enabled by the legislative branch of this Government to do for the interests of the Government that which we are bound to do under the Constitution of the United States.

I think one of the greatest ravages that was ever perpetrated upon the Constitution was taking away West Virginia from the great Commonwealth of Virginia. When you read how it was done you will see that it was absolutely unjustified but for the necessities of war.

Now, are we to say that by reason of the distress in which we find ourselves we are going to abdicate the duties imposed upon the Congress of the United States in controlling the purse strings of this Government, which are the greatest guarantee of the people in security of a democratic government, and say that we are unable to longer control the expenditures of government or longer control the functions of government, and that we are going to abdicate and put all these things in the hands and power of one man?

I say to confess that is to confess that this form of government of ours is a failure, and to confess that we have started upon the period of our decadence.

I wish to call your attention to something that was said by the Supreme Court of the United States some years ago which is just as patent now as it was at the time when the utterance was made.

The Constitution of the United States is a law for rulers and people, equally in war and in peace, and covers with the shield of its protection all classes of men at all times and under all circumstances. No doctrine involving more pernicious consequences was ever invented by the wit of man than that any of its provisions can be suspended during any of the great exigencies of government. Such a doctrine leads directly to anarchy or despotism, but the theory of necessity on which it is based is false; for the Government within the Constitution has all the powers granted to it which are necessary to preserve its existence as has been happily proved by the result of the great effort to overthrow its just authority.

There has been trial after trial to overthrow the authority of this Government. There has been attempt after attempt to overthrow the duties imposed upon the three divisions of our Government. Happily, up to this time, with here and there an exception, we have maintained these three distinct attributes of our Government that have made us what we are. If they are to be destroyed now or if we are to attempt to undermine them now, we will be responsible for the consequences that are sure to come.

This was said by Mr. Bryce 40 years ago when he wrote his wonderful book, and I wish every right-thinking man would read it and ponder its provisions now. What was said then seemed to be merely conjectural, but now seems to be prophecy ripening into fulfillment.

He thought then, as I believe now, that if this Government is to endure it will be because of our adherence to our three fundamental principles and divisions of government. I implore each Member of the House to read and ponder this statement from Mr. Bryce:

To expect any form of words, however weightily conceived, with whatever sanctions enacted, permanently to restrain the passions and interests of men is to expect the impossible. Beyond a certain point, you can not protect the people against themselves any more than you can, to use a familiar American expression, lift yourself from the ground by your own boot straps. Laws sanctioned by the overwhelming physical power of a despot, laws sanctioned by supernatural terrors whose reality no one doubted, have failed to restrain those passions in ages of slavery and superstition. The world is not so much advanced that in this age laws, even the best and most venerable laws, will of themselves command obedience. Constitutions which in quiet times change gradually, peacefully, almost imperceptibly, must in times of revolution be changed more boldly, some provisions being sacrificed for the sake of the rest, as mariners throw overboard part of the cargo in a storm in order to save the other part with the ship herself. To cling to the letter of a Constitution when the welfare of the country for whose sake the Constitution exists is at stake would be to seek to preserve life at the cost of all that makes life worth having—propter vitam vivendi perdre causas. (Bryce's American Commonwealth, p. 396, vol. 1.)

I also invite your attention to the following citation from the American Commonwealth, by Bryce, volume 2, pages 711, 712, and 713:

The next question to be asked relates to the component parts of the National Government itself. Its equilibrium stands now as stable as at any former epoch. Yet it has twice experienced violent oscillations. In the days of Jackson, and again in those of Lincoln, the Executive seemed to outweigh Congress. In the days of Tyler Congress threatened the Executive, while in those of Andrew Johnson it reduced the Executive to impotence. That no permanent disturbance of the balance followed the latter of these oscillations shows how well the balance had been adjusted at starting. At this moment there is nothing to show that any one department is gaining on any other. The judiciary, if indeed the judges can be called a political department, would seem to have less discretionary power than 70 years ago, for by their own decisions they have narrowed the scope of their discretion, determining points in which, had they remained open, the personal impulses and views of the bench might have had room to play.

Congress has been the branch of government with the largest facilities for usurping the powers of the other branches, and probably with the most disposition to do so. Congress has constantly tried to encroach both on the Executive and on the States, sometimes, like a wild bull driven into a corral, dashing itself against the imprisoning walls of the Constitution. But although Congress has succeeded in occupying nearly all of the area which the Constitution left vacant and unallotted between the several authorities it established. Congress has not become any more distinctly than in earlier days the dominant power in the State, the organ of national sovereignty, the irresistible exponent of the national will. In a country ruled by public opinion, it could hold this position only in virtue of its capacty for leading opinion, that is to say, of its courage, promptitude, and wisdom. Since it grows in no one of these qualities, it wins no greater ascendancy; indeed its power, as compared with that of public opinion, seems rather to decline. Its division into two coordinate Houses is no doubt a source of weakness as well as of safety. Yet what is true of Congress as a whole is true of each House taken separately. The Senate, to which the eminence of many individual Senators formerly gave a moral ascendancy, has lost as much in the intellectual authority of its Members as it has gained in their wealth. The House, with its far greater numbers and its far greater proportion of inexperienced Members, suffers from the want of internal organizations, and seems unable to keep pace with the increasing demands made on it for constructive legislation. One is sometimes inclined to think that Congress might lose its hold on the respect and confidence of the Nation, and sink into a subordinate position, were there any other authority which could be substituted for it. There is, however, no such authority, for law making can not be given to a person or to a court, while the State

The weakness of Congress is the strength of the President. Though it can not be said that his office has risen in power or dignity since 1789, there are reasons for believing that it may reach a higher point than it has occupied at any time since the Civil War. The tendency everywhere in America to concentrate power and responsibility in one man is unmistakable. There is no danger that the President should become a despot, that is, should attempt to make his will prevail against the will of the majority. But he may have a great part to play as the leader of the majority, and the exponent of its will.

He is in some respects better fitted both to represent and to

He is in some respects better fitted both to represent and to influence public opinion than Congress is. No doubt he suffers from being the nominee of a party, because this draws on every act he does the hostility of zealots of the opposite party. But the number of voters who are not party zealots increases—increases from bad causes as well as from good causes—for as a capable President sways the dispassionately patriotic, so a crafty President can find means of playing upon those who have their own ends to serve. A vigorous personality attracts the multitude, and attracts it the more the huger it grows; while a Chief Magistrate's influence excites little alarm when exerted in leading a majority which acts through the constitutional organs of government. There may, therefore, be still undeveloped possibilities of greatness in store for the Presidents of the future. But as these possibilities depend, like the possibilities of the British and German Crowns—perhaps one may add of the papacy—on the wholly unpredictable element of personal capacity in the men who may fill the office, we need speculate on them no further.

Will we not lose the respect and confidence of the Nation if we make an abject surrender of our right to legislate and confer this authority upon one man?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield myself 20 minutes more. Here is a man, not of our citizenship but of our blood, in sympathy, if you please, with our form of government, who was pointing out to us 40 years ago what might transpire in the future. Heed it, gentlemen. We are in a crisis. It is up to us to-day to say whether or not we are worthy of those who have handed down to us through the generations the responsibility of this Government. While I realize the extremis in which we are placed, while I realize the necessity of retrenchment, do not let us adopt, without due consideration, a temporary cure that will be a disease that will undermine like a cancer and destroy the fabric of the Government that our fathers established—not for us but for the generations yet to come. Let us not adopt something new and untried in the history of government, but let us be sure that our government of the people, by the people, and for the people is to endure.

Mr. McGUGIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. McGUGIN. I am in full sympathy with what the gentleman has to say as a matter of Government principle, but does the gentleman have any idea from his long experience in Congress that Congress will materially reduce the expenses of Government or consolidate any bureaus of Government?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not know whether it will or not. It depends upon the courage of the individual Congressman. [Applause.] It depends largely upon the sentiment of his constituents behind him.

I wish the whole country might know the extremis which we are in. They do not know it. I wish they might know the problems that we are called upon to meet. They do not know them. I wish we might be impressed with the responsibility that is resting upon us. I wish that the incoming President might realize, as I fear he does not, the responsibility that is his, because on his shoulders is going to be placed the greatest responsibility of government that has ever befallen any man that has ever become President of the United States with the possible exception of Lincoln.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman has made the statement that if we, as Congressmen, realized our responsibility, we might be able to reduce Government expenditures. I feel from what we have accomplished during this session of Congress, it is hard to cause Congress to realize its responsibility, and when it is said that taxation is resting so hard upon the shoulders of the people of this country, the only thing to do is to reduce expenses, and how are we going to do this if Congressmen will not assume their responsibility?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Well, that is the fault of the Congress itself. I am not here for the purpose of defending anybody's proposal, but I am here to charge this Congress with the responsibility of meeting the problem that is before it, and we are not doing it. We are putting it off to another day, we are putting it off to the next session of the Congress of the United States. We are shirking our responsibility.

Now I wish to call your attention to a few more details. February 21, 1932, one year ago to-day, the Democratic National Committee issued a statement by John N. Garner, Speaker of this House, criticizing President Hoover for his economic program. The closing paragraphs of that statement contain the following:

Now he [Hoover] has sent us a recommendation for the reorganization of the Government. Briefly, it consists in a suggestion that Congress abdicate its prerogatives and give him blanket power to appoint a lot of new officers and make the Government anything he pleases. Why did he not send us his actual program? * * * Why has he not told us what he proposes doing, so that we could accurately judge of the value of his suggestions, instead of adopting his proposal that we leave it all to him. Well, we are not going to grant any such unlimited charter. We, too, have our ideas as to how to effect improvements and economies in the national administration. If the President is sincerely desirous of such improvement, there is no reason why we should not get together. If he did that, we could cooperate. What he seeks, instead, is to dictate, and nobody can dictate to the Democratic group in Congress.

Think of it! The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Garner] was criticizing the President's asking to leave it all to him.

Now what are you doing? The President of the United States never asked to destroy a single function of the Government; he never asked for the power now asked to destroy a single attribute of the Government. All he asked was the power to consolidate and amalgamate by preventing overlapping and preventing duplication, and thus save expense to the Government.

You are asked to give power to your President, and he is my President as well; you are asking that he be given authority, not only to do these things which the present President asked, but also that he be given power to destroy.

That is not and should not be a function under the Constitution lodged in the President. If you give him the power to destroy, you must give him the power to create. If he has the right to destroy any given department of the Government, he has the right to create some other department of that Government.

That we deny. The Constitution denies it, and to admit it is to abdicate the functions of the Constitution imposed upon us.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; I do not yield. I have not the time.

Not only is the proposal now before the House a reversal of the attitude maintained by the leaders of this House, including the Speaker, but it is a reversal of the traditional attitude of the Democratic Party. As far back as 1880, when the Democratic National Convention nominated Hancock for President and William English, of Indiana, for Vice President, it drafted a platform, the second paragraph of which was as follows:

The Democrats of the United States in convention assembled declare opposition to centralization and to that dangerous spirit of encroachment which tends to consolidate the bureaus of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever be the name or form of the government, a real despotism.

I appeal to you Republicans that in order to save the honor of this Government, the honor of its traditions established by our fathers, we should save these men on the other side from their folly.

The position to-day held by the Speaker and the Democratic leaders is an exact reversal and a flat repudiation of the position held a year ago. They are now asking not only that Congress tacitly abdicate its functions but that it do so by legislative act. In order that this characterization of the attitude of the Democratic leadership to-day may not be charged up to Republican partisanship, permit me to quote from an article in the Baltimore Sun of February 15 last, written by Frank R. Kent. The simon-pure Democracy of neither the Baltimore Sun nor Mr. Kent can be disputed. In fact, the Baltimore Sun is the only outstanding Democratic paper in this section of the United States, and opinions are quoted in Democratic councils throughout the country. Mr. Kent says:

It is a more or less amazing spectacle to see Democratic leaders, on the eve of their party's coming into control of the Congress, throwing up their hands and publicly saying in effect: "We can not be trusted to do what we were elected to do. Despite our control of both branches of the Congress, we will never be able to function. The only thing to do is to take away the power the Constitution of the United States gives us and put it in the hands of the President. We can't be trusted. We can't even trust ourselves. We have control, but we can't use it."

Mr. Kent continues:

If ever there was a more extraordinary confession by public leaders of their own incapacity than this, it can not be recalled. Yet the facts as made plain at this session amply justify it, and if an abdication does not take place by March 4, it will only be because of Republican opposition.

That was the Democratic attitude in 1880. Now they turn about and advocate your giving the President more power than it ever gave a king, except in the days of absolute kingdoms. No democracy was ever confronted with such a proposition that we are now confronted with.

For years the Democratic Party has gone before the public in each national campaign with the catchy slogan, "Let the People Rule," and pretended it was a party which was opposed to anything but the most simon-pure democratic form of government. In your platform of 1912, which nominated Woodrow Wilson, of New Jersey, for President and Thomas R. Marshall, of Indiana, for Vice President, you opened that platform with this preamble:

We the representatives of the Democratic Party of the United States in national convention assembled reaffirm our devotion to the principles of democratic government formulated by Thomas Jefferson.

Shades of Thomas Jefferson! Think of the attitude you are now occupying in taking away from the people the democracy which he advocated and establishing not autocracy, but despotism, if it is followed to its final analysis. You closed that same platform with this statement:

We direct attention to the fact that the Democratic Party's demand for a return to the rule of the people, as expressed in our national platform four years ago, has now become the accepted doctrine of a large majority of the electors. We again remind the country that only by a larger exercise of the power of the people can they protect themselves from the misuse of delegated power.

And now you are not only misusing your delegated power but you are delegating the power that the people gave to you. You are abdicating your responsibility and the duties imposed upon you by the Constitution under the provisions of the bill now before us.

Dare any Democrat in this body rise to his feet and seriously argue that the action advocated to-day is consistent with the principles of the Democratic Government formulated by Thomas Jefferson? Does any Democrat dare arise and contend that Thomas Jefferson himself, if here, would support such a proposition? Does any Democrat dare contend that this is not a centralization of government in its most odious form and that the Democratic Party since the day it was created has not been proclaiming its opposition to the doctrine and the practice of centralized government?

The reason for this action to-day is not that which is offered in explanation for it or in extenuation of it. It is offered not for the purpose of increasing the efficiency of the Federal Government. The real explanation is that given by Mr. Kent, namely, that the Democratic Party as it exists to-day in Congress finds itself utterly unable to legislate along the lines it pledged the people it would legislate. Its membership finds itself totally incapacitated to perform the legitimate functions that the legislative branch of this Government is, under the Constitution, mandated to perform. Again I do not desire this severe stricture to be charged up against Republican partisanship. I make this charge upon the authority of no less a distinguished Democrat than John N. Garner, present Speaker of the House and Vice President elect. On the 8th day of this month the public press carried a statement issued by Mr. GARNER, in which he said:

It has been actually demonstrated that Congress can not reduce Government expenses as it should be done. There are three or four outstanding organized minorities in this country which work to prevent Congress from effecting reorganization and economy.

And right here let me say that Mr. Garner expressed the truth when he said that this Congress is controlled by minority representation in this country, and it is one of the curses of this country. There is no organization representing the people, but we have minority organizations representing every kind of selfish interests constantly prevailing upon each individual Member of this Congress by every means possible to do their bidding.

Mr. Speaker, in the language I have quoted from Mr. Garner we find an admission by the leader of the Democratic Party in this House that the Democratic Congress can not perform the duties it was elected to perform, can not redeem its promises made to the people, can not perform those functions that the Constitution vests in it, because a few minorities will not permit it to do so. The Speaker admits that this Congress can not economize, will not economize, and therefore the power of Congress must be abdi- Because, as Speaker Garner stated on the 8th day of this cated.

But that is not what you Democrats wrote in your last national platform. Here is what you said:

We advocate an immediate and drastic reduction of governmental expenditures by abolishing useless commissions and offices, consolidating departments and bureaus and elliminating extravagance, to accomplish a saving of not less than 25 per cent in the cost of the Federal Government.

The President elect did not write that platform, although he did accept it and indorse it 100 per cent. You gentlemen controlled the committee on resolutions at Chicago which drafted that platform, and those within the sound of my voice helped pen the paragraph. There was nothing in there that you advocated a 25 per cent reduction of Federal expenses, provided a few organized minorities would let you. There was nothing in that plank which stated that you intended to pass the buck to the President and make him a dictator in a last desperate attempt to redeem your platform pledges. Quite the contrary, you made the promise directly and you inserted elsewhere in the platform the following:

We believe that a party platform is a covenant with the people, to be faithfully kept by the party when intrusted with power.

Here you are in this body, intrusted with power, and you have been intrusted with power for two years. Now, when the acid test comes you frankly admit that you can not function. You frankly admit that you can not redeem your party platform. You frankly admit that you can not do the things that a year ago and two years ago you said you could and would do. Let me quote a few statements made by the Democratic leaders in this body within the past 15 months.

January 17, 1932, Speaker Garner told the Associated Press, upon leaving the White House, that the Democrats had determined to do the job of economy. "We are really going to practice what the President has been preaching," said the Speaker. A month later, February 16, 1932, a few days over just a year ago, the news associations of the country printed the statement that Chairman Byrns, of the Appropriations Committee, following a conference with Speaker Garner, introduced a resolution calling for an Economy Committee to survey the Federal establishment and decide where bureaus may be abolished, consolidated, or restricted without permanent impairment of orderly government. Coincident with this statement Speaker Garner was quoted as follows:

We are now going to give the country a demonstration in real economy. The administration has been making gestures for three years. Now we are going to do the job.

On April 5 the press associations carried an authorized statement from Representative Crisp, of Georgia, then the acting chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, in which he said:

The newest Congressman in Washington must be aware of the utter waste in all branches of the Government. The whole governmental system has long needed the reorganization the President has vaguely suggested. It only remains to be done. If the President can not discover a way, certainly a joint committee from the House and Senate should, as a national duty, undertake the job for him. A child in Washington could see ways to reduce expenditures.

The Democrats at that time controlled this body. They have controlled it every minute since that time. They control it now. The things which they said could easily be done by the Congress have not been done. They have not even been commenced. The duty of making a study and recommending a reorganization of the governmental agencies. for which the special Economy Committee was appointed by Speaker Garner last February, a year ago last week, has not been performed. The failure of that performance is not attributable to the Republican President or to the Republican administration or to the Republican membership of this House. The failure of that committee to perform the duties it was advertised to perform lies at the door of the majority of that committee and the Democratic leadership in this House. The extravangances and waste which Representative Crisp said that even the newest Congressman or the merest child could see remain untouched. Why? Because, as Speaker Garner stated on the 8th day of this month, this Congress finds itself incapacitated to perform its sworn duty as representatives of the American people, and then, to make a bad matter worse, it proposes by legislative enactment to do just exactly as Mr. Kent said:

Vote the powers given it by the Constitution back to the President and abdicate as the legislative branch of the Government.

[Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Ludlow].

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the able gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] that the proposal before the House to give to the President great powers to reorganize the Government, including the power "to abolish the whole or part of any executive agency," is of epochal significance. It does indeed involve the delegation of vast power to the President, but it is the first real approach to an accomplishment for which the whole country is crying in no uncertain terms, namely, the elimination of bureaucracy and its despotic interference with the rights of business and individuals and the stoppage of the astounding wastes and extravagances that are incident to and inseparable from bureaucratic activities. It is the first effort in that direction that promises any results of real value.

It is of vital importance not only to economic recovery in this country, but to the perpetuity of American institutions in the form and design that guarantees freedom and individual rights that this conference agreement delegating broad reorganizing powers to the President shall be adopted by the House and crystallized into a legal enactment.

This is not a time to halt or quibble. This is a time to go forward. The whole country is demanding, not asking, that the Federal Government shall be reorganized by cutting out at the roots bureaus that have no right to exist and whose meddlesome activities span a continent. It is demanding, not asking, that commissions of varied and fantastic forms, whose personnel are leeches on the taxpayers, shall be wiped out of existence. It is demanding, not asking, that all of the ridiculous overlapping of activities, all of the multiplied overheads for services that are similar, if not identical, shall come under a microscopic examination and that wherever the pruning knife can be inserted to simplify government and remove parasites from the pay rolls it shall be used unsparingly.

Do not be mistaken. The citizenship of this country is a seething mass of discontent. Everyday conversation has taken on a sinister and revolutionary tone. The people have a well-defined impression that the Federal bureaucracy is in no small degree to blame for their ills. They want useless personnel stricken off of padded pay rolls. They want the President given the power that is sought to be conveyed to him in this conference agreement to abolish nonessential activities, and they will hold the President and the Congress jointly responsible if the next few years do not witness the sharpest retrenchment in Government expenditures of any like period in the history of the country.

The average American has more wisdom and knowledge in connection with governmental affairs than he is generally credited with possessing. He knows that the beautiful structure of government handed down to us as a priceless heritage by the founding fathers has become covered with bureaucratic and extraconstitutional malformations until it can no longer function simply and economically and with direct benefit to the people as it was intended to do, and they want these excrescences stricken off of it. I hold in my hand a most interesting book, which I obtained from the Library of Congress. It is a volume entitled "List of Federal Commissions, Committees, Boards, and Similar Bodies Created During the Period September 14, 1901, to March 4, 1929." This book is not up to date and does not include any commissions created since March 4, 1929. four years not covered by the book mark an era notable for paternalistic expansion, and necessarily there are many commissions, boards, and so forth, in existence that were born too late to be included in it. Nevertheless, it is amazing to know that the mere cataloguing of the partial and incomplete list of boards and commissions whose names are printed in this volume makes a book of 147 pages.

The people of America expect President-elect Roosevelt to deflate this enormous bureaucratic balloon, and the conference agreement now before the House gives him the tools to do this important job. I know it has been said by very able gentlemen that the delegation of such enormous power to the executive head of the Government is not in keeping with the democratic philosophy on which this Nation was founded, and I have a great deal of sympathy with that point of view. But neither is this great, all-powerful, ultrapaternalistic bureaucracy that has grown up in Washington in keeping with the democratic philosophy of government on which this Nation was founded. The founding fathers had the wise idea that all of the administrative functions of government should be transacted through the Executive and the departments. There are now 10 great departments, each with a Cabinet official at its head; but added to and superimposed upon this fundamental structure of Government are bureaucracy's contributions throughout the years, consisting of more than 500 commissions, boards, independent establishments, and whatnot that reach out into every field of paternalistic activity, comprising the most stupendous and costly bureaucracy in history. So, since the ill is extraordinary, it requires an extraordinary cure, and that cure is provided in the pending conference report.

One thing that is absolutely certain is that the Federal Government will never be reorganized adequately and thoroughly except by the delegation of ample authority to the President, as provided in the language of this bill. The history of all similar attempts proves this to be true. Three Presidents of the United States in modern times have ventured into the field of governmental reorganization, each time with disastrous results because in no instance did Congress give to the Executive the authority he must have to perform the task. It was a dream of President Taft, whose well-meant efforts registered absolutely nil. The most far-reaching attempt in that direction was made by President Harding, who chose Walter F. Brown, now the Postmaster General, to draft the plan. The problem was studied with extreme pains and care and a report was submitted to Congress, but a thousand special interests and individuals swooped down upon Congress to protest the demobilization of the bureaus, and in the end nothing was

The fate of President Hoover's recent reorganization plan is still fresh in the minds of all of us. It failed, as it was bound from the start to fail, because of a lack of authority. I have no criticism of President Hoover on this account. It seems to me that Congress did not play fair with him. It was the same as if Congress had said to him: "We give you an order to build a new temple of Government in this country but we will not give you a single tool to do it with."

The order given to President Hoover was no such proposal as the one now before us. It did not grant him authority to abolish one solitary governmental agency of any kind. About all his plan amounted to, therefore, and about all it could amount to, was to play solitaire with the bureaus and commissions, moving them from one place to another, regrouping and rearranging them; but it did not abolish a bureau, fire a bureaucrat, or save a dollar. The House wisely followed the advice of Colonel Roop, the Director of the Budget, and put the matter over until the Congress could vest in the President broader powers that would enable him to do the job as it should be done.

The result of a further consideration of the problem by the Congress is the proposition now before us which gives to the President-to-be plenary powers to reorganize the Government, stopping only short of the power to abolish entire departments, with certain reservations which will enable Congress, by the two-thirds required to override a veto, to defeat any reorganization plan the President may present pursuant to the terms of the act. My only objection to the plan is that it does not go quite far enough. I would give the President power also to abolish departments. I believe the departments could well be reduced from 10 to 8 by combining the War and Navy Departments and merging the Department of Interior with either the Department of Agriculture or the Department of Commerce, but when I broached the question of broadening the delegated power to include departments I was stopped by the suggestion that this probably would provoke a veto by President Hoover. I am too anxious that the legislation shall pass and too well satisfied with the broad powers contained in the proposal as it now stands to insist further on the inclusion of departments.

There are those who claim the delegation of so much power to the President is dangerous and who raise the bogey cry of "dictator," but I am not scared by such hobgoblins. President Wilson was given tremendous war-time power, but it did not make dictators out of his successors in office. When the emergency ended, the powers expired. The Congress that confers this authority on the President elect can take it away and by the explicit terms of this act it will expire automatically in two years. We are not creating a dictator in the White House. We are giving the President authority to do a very definite job and when that job is completed the authority will cease.

President-elect Roosevelt, who will execute the order of Congress, is coming into office with the unanimous good will of the American people. He has given abundant evidence of his high character and resolution. In volunteering to undertake the gigantic assignment of reorganizing the Government as it should be reorganized, if Congress will give him legal authority sufficient unto the task, he is displaying courage and initiative that are perfectly admirable.

As so much is wrapped up in this proposal that is for the good of America now and in the future, let us not hesitate to grant him that authority. [Applause.]

THE AIR MAIL SERVICE

Mr. Speaker, no man in the House is more in favor of abolishing air mail subsidy than I am, but I want to see the subsidy abolished without wrecking air mail.

If it were a question of continuing the present highly subsidized air mail service throughout the years to come or its abolishment, I would favor its immediate abolishment and I believe many other Members of the House feel the same way about it.

Luckily that is not the question that is here presented. There is a clear and open way before us pointing to a non-subsidized air mail service to take the place of the present service which is subsidized at the rate of about $10,000,000 a year from the taxpayers' money. That is to say, we are appropriating around $19,000,000 a year for air mail and the air mail receipts are around $9,000,000, leaving $10,-000,000 of pure subsidy.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Kelly] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. Mead], the distinguished chairman of the Post Office Committee, to both of whom the country is indebted for a most careful and intelligent study of the air mail problem, have brought forth a plan to revise the financing of the air mail service that will squeeze every drop of subsidy out of that service by the end of five years. By the end of one year it will reduce the subsidy to $4,000,000, and the reduction will go progressively forward until there will be no subsidy at the end of five years. The new basis of compensation is to be 2 mills per pound per mile.

Why do I say this plan will suceed in eliminating the subsidy? Because the air mail contractors themselves see that the subsidy can not go on and three of the leading contractors, representing I believe one-third of the total air mail operation, have already voluntarily come forward and agreed to surrender their present contracts and go in under the new arrangement. The Postmaster General has power under existing law to revise existing air mail contracts downward, and the right kind of a Postmaster General during the next few years by applying the right sort of persuasion can without the least difficulty induce the plan has been prepared and introduced in the form of a bill and will be reintroduced and pressed at the opening of the special session in April.

This being the case, I submit to the House that this is no time to wreck the air mail service. Let us continue this facility, and as rapidly as can be done let us put it on its own through the operation of the Kelly-Mead plan, so that it will pay for itself. We should not overlook the fact that many contractors have gone into this enterprise in good faith, investing large sums in equipment. They are entitled to consideration. Many cities have shown a most commendable public spirit by providing airports at great cost, relying on the benefits of air mail as a compensatory return. My home city of Indianapolis, which we proudly call the "air crossroads of America," is one of these. We have an airport second to none. I would not be true to the district I represent if I were to vote to strike air mail out of existence at the very time when it is about to be placed on a self-sustaining basis; but I am no more willing to flout such communities as Columbus, Ohio, Denver, Los Angeles, and a hundred other progressive cities which have provided modern airports at great cost to themselves. Mr. Speaker, there is but one wise course before Congress in reference to air mail, and the Senate conferees recognized that course when they receded on the air-mail item. Air mail is too important to commerce and business and as an auxiliary of national defense to be wiped out. Let us take the subsidy out of air mail, but let us not wreck it.

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the difficulty I have with supporting the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns] is that it does not go far enough.

I may be exceptional in my views, but if the Republicans had control of this House I would be fighting to the last any proposal to commit the next Congress to a determination of the financial policy, as far as the purse-strings of the Government are concerned. I have been defeated, with many others, and you are calling upon us here to determine the policy that my successor and the successors of others were commanded to determine as to the amount of expenditures of our Government. No appropriation bills, if the policy of the gentleman from Tennessee is followed, will be passed until more than a year hence. The incoming Congress will say, "You have hamstrung us. You have determined the amounts to be expended." And the only excuse and apology of the gentleman from Tennessee for this milk-and-water proposal is that perhaps the present Executive will veto it if we go farther. That is no defense whatsoever upon the part of those charged with responsibility. Far better for the Democratic majority to come here with some live, real proposal, with guts in it, that will cut and save, and meet the demands of the people, rather than this abortive proposal that is only seeking to merge bureaus and independent establishments. This will not accomplish a saving of $50 .-000,000, no matter how sincere the incoming administration may be. It is necessary to use the knife and use it generally. Not only generally, but after you have stuck it in the back, give it several more twists, so as to cut down the expenditures to the minimum.

I have been surprised, if not amazed, at the policy of the gentleman having charge of the appropriation bills in this Congress bringing in bills that do not seek in any instance to cut down in any large amount that recom-mended by the last Congress. We leave it to the Senate, and when the Senate adopts a proposal we run from it for fear it will be too drastic. If this were submitted to the next Congress—the Democratic Congress fresh from the people-not for a moment would they accept any such mild proposal as this. It would be far better for the welfare of the people if we would not pass any appropriation bills at this session of Congress. We have passed them through the House. Let them be brought up under suspension of the rules when the next Congress comes and then send them to the Senate to determine the policy rather than to commit other contractors to come under the tent. The Kelly-Mead | the next Congress to a policy as to which they have no voice at all. I absolutely dissent from this policy. I will go to any extreme to cut down expenditures. Adopt this program, you who have been returned to the next Congress. and what will it mean? It will mean higher and higher taxes during the incoming administration. The President elect is sincere in his position that he wants expenditures cut down. This proposal will not cut down expenditures to any extent by the merging of this agency or that agency.

Under the provisions of this bill, no person in the employ of the Government shall be staggered for longer than 90 days. It does not provide for getting rid of any employees of the Government. How can I conscientiously vote for this milk-and-water proposal that seeks to commit the next Congress, which is charged with cutting expenses, when this is offered as a policy because perchance the President, who was defeated with many other Republicans, renounced by the voters, might veto something that is more drastic. It is opposed to the fundamental principle of our Government. We have been renounced; we have been rejected; and yet you are asking us to adopt a program of expenditures that hogties the next Congress because, perchance, the next Congress might be delayed a little longer in session. It is absolutely opposed to our representative form of government. This House, this Congress, should not bind the incoming administration as to its expenditures merely on the issue of convenience.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD].

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MEAD: Page 1, section 4, line 12, after the figures "112," strike out the figures "201," and on page 2, line 20, add the following:

"3. Section 201 is amended by striking out the period at the end, inserting a semicolon and the following: nor shall this section apply to employees whose automatic increase does not exceed $150 per annum."

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, it is difficult, in my judgment, for any Member to find fault with or criticize the Members of the House conferees. On the other hand, they are to be congratulated and commended for under the able leadership of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations they have accomplished a very difficult task. They improved the economy act by eliminating a number of discriminations. There are one or two more, however, that should be eliminated. One of these I have included in the amendment which I have just offered.

I voted for the furlough plan in the economy act as it was finally passed in the last Congress, but since that time I have been seeking to correct certain discriminations which are leveled against the lower-paid employees in the various Federal services.

In the report the Committee on Appropriations provides for uniform pay deductions; they have restored disciplinary promotions. This offsets a decision made by the comptroller which held that employees who were reduced to a lower grade as a means of discipline are now, under the provisions of this act, to be restored when the period of disciplinary service has expired.

The Bratton amendment, which would, in my judgment, do violence to postal appropriations, has been reported unfavorably by the committee.

Substitutes are protected in so far as the economy act applies to those whose annual salaries are less than $1,000. Special-delivery messengers heretofore reduced by the economy act 8% per cent now are allowed $400 a year for equipment. All of these provisions are meritorious.

The amendment which I offer would restore automatic promotions only to those in the minor grades whose automatic promotion in no case exceeds $150 a year. Let me illustrate this unfairness in the economy act which we passed a year ago: There are five automatic grades in the Postal Service, An apprentice starts in at $1,700 per annum and receives an automatic increase of $100 a year for a period of five years. Under the terms of the economy act he loses that $100 annual increase and also loses an additional $150 annually because of the 81/3 per cent reduction. So that in the course of five years he loses $500 as the result of the deprivation of automatic promotions, and he loses $750 in addition to that by reason of the 81/3 per cent deductions of the economy act. So, an apprentice in five years loses $1,250, while those in the upper grades lose $750 in the same period of time. By reason of the discrimination in this particular feature of the law, there is, in my judgment, levied an unjust percentage against the apprentices in this department.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. As I understand, the gentleman's amendment limits these automatic promotions to those who would receive less than $150 increase per year.

Mr. MEAD. Yes; it only takes care of those in the minor

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. And that applies, of course, to District firemen and policemen.

Mr. MEAD. It applies to firemen and policemen in the District of Columbia, apprentices in the Postal Service, as well as to minor grades in other departments.

Mr. STAFFORD. The postal employees I suppose are the main ones.

Mr. MEAD. They are included in my amendment, I may say to the gentleman.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McKeown].

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to discuss this

Mr. Speaker, the present time of trouble and distress is no time to be discriminating against officers in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps. These are not good days for such a thing to take place. I believe in economy, but there are two ways to destroy this Government, either by revolution or by denial of sufficient appropriations to enable the Government to function.

What are we doing here? We are just piddling with the spigot instead of going back to repair the reservoir and stop the great waste of water.

Mr. Speaker, if we would put in a good part of our time trying to pass some real constructive legislation which would put business back on its feet and bring revenue to the Treasury, we would be accomplishing a lot more than by just rowing around here trying to cut off a few drops of water leaking out of the spigot.

You can destroy the Government by absolutely denying any appropriation with which to carry on its functions. I am in favor of economy. I voted for every economy bill in this House, but I say here and now this is no time, with the world in the condition it is in, to be breaking the morale of the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps. I stood down in Quantico the other day and saw the leathernecks who came back from Nicaragua. As I looked at those fellows I realized that among them were some who were being discriminated against by reason of this section 201.

What right have we to place an unjust burden on one man because he happens to be in a place where he can not be promoted and then place a lighter burden on some other fellow? Let us do this thing right; let us be fair to all; let us treat every employee of the Government alike. I am in favor of this adjustment, but I would apply it in a way to eliminate all discrimination. The Senate did not put it in. We proposed it.

There is a lot of agitation about cutting taxes, a lot of the talk is coming from fellows who never have paid a dime of Federal taxes, but they realize that the burden rests upon them indirectly. Let us make real economies and not destroy our national defense. Instead of playing the part of real statesmen and giving this country a chance to come back and be the prosperous country it can be, we are whittling around about somebody's small salary.

The President elect has promised the American people to reduce the expenses of the Government 25 per cent. did not say he was going to effect a reduction by taking everybody off the pay roll and kicking everybody out of office. He promised to effect the reduction by giving us an efficient Government. How can we have an efficient Government unless we have efficient employees?

If you are to start this country back on the road to prosperity, if you are going to give the taxpayers of this country some consideration, you must do it in some way other than by high taxes. Give them business.

Give them business. That is what we ought to be doing here, and I say in justice to the Army and the Navy and the Marine Corps we ought to take this section 201 out of this conference report.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to myself five minutes. Mr. Speaker, there may be, and doubtless is, a great deal in what the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McKeown] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD] have said on this subject, but we all understand in this crisis and at this time there may be some injustice done some one in the effort to save a little money for the taxpayers and balance the Budget.

All of us have to make sacrifices. Of course we do not want to discriminate in favor of one against another; but here is what you are asked to do. You are asked to promote by an increase of salary quite a number, possibly thousands, of employees of the Government; while in the same breath and in the same bill you are taking from others to the extent of 81/3 per cent.

I do not think this is the time to increase salaries, gentlemen, and that is all this amounts to, and it will cost the Government $4,000,000 next year if these amendments

Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to modify the amendment that I sent to the desk.

the following:
"Section 201 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: 'This section shall not apply to employees whose automatic increase does not exceed $150 per annum.'"

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Goss].

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I want to confine my remarks to this particular amendment, as it affects the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps.

The statement has been made that the elimination of section 201 would permit large increases to the highly paid officers of the Army and Navy, and that statement is not

By far the major portion of individuals affected are postal employees drawing small salaries-$1,700, clerks and letter carriers; $1,600, driver mechanics; $1,500, messengers, watchmen, laborers—and so forth.

To these the postal law promises an annual automatic increase, for from one to five years, of $100 for "efficiency and faithfulness" during the preceding year. Think of it, a pittance of $8.33 per month denied to each of them in the name of economy, in addition to the 81/3 per cent cut.

These contributions make up more than half of the savings from section 201.

Another poorly paid group that suffer a like discrimination includes the policemen, firemen, and school teachers of the District of Columbia, and this in addition to the 81/3 per

The statement that the elimination of section 201 would permit large increases to highly paid officers of the Army and Navy is not true.

Much has been made of the fact that Admiral McLean's pay would be increased about $2,000, as he has passed from the lower half to the upper half of his grade.

The facts are that Admiral McLean is the only highranking officer of the Navy or Army affected by section 201. No general has been or will be affected, for none has any automatic increase.

No other admiral will be affected unless some admiral of the upper half dies or retires.

The junior officers of the uniformed services carry most of the burden.

In the Army, for example, captains, lieutenants, warrant officers, and nurses stand more than 75 per cent of the loss. Generals lose not a single cent.

The total loss in the grade of colonel is only $6,088.

During the fiscal year, 838 officers will be denied advancement to higher pay periods. Of these 122 are captains and 501 are lieutenants. Two hundred and fifty, of whom 208 are captains and lieutenants, will be denied pay increases due to promotion.

Actually less than 7 per cent of the officers of the Army stand the entire loss resulting from suspension of advances into higher pay periods, and captains and lieutenants stand 70 per cent of this loss.

The entire saving on commissioned officers is $582,336. Of this amount captains and lieutenants, and only a portion of them, stand $431,612, or more than 75 per cent.

One hundred and thirty-three nurses lose $14,870.

Pure chance determines the individuals affected. For example, the 1927 military academy class were commissioned June 14, 1927, completed five years' service and entered the second pay period June 14, 1932, while one commissioned after June 30, 1927, from civil life or the ranks is denied this pay increase.

Section 201 alone penalizes this second lieutenant a greater amount than the economy act reduces a salary of $10,000. And, in addition to this, he suffers a cut of more than 8\%3 per cent, made up as follows:

Eight and one-third per cent cut on pay.

Ten per cent cut on rental allowance.

Thirteen and one-third per cent cut on subsistence allowance.

A total cut of 9½ per cent, and in the next fiscal year this cut will be more than 14 per cent, which, coupled with the cut imposed by section 201, makes a total cut of almost 40 per cent, or $106 per month.

His obligations have not been reduced, but instead increased. Even the premiums on his life insurance, including his Government insurance, are graduated on the pay readjustment act, and accordingly have increased considerably, while instead of receiving the expected increase in income he suffers a considerable reduction. He has reached the age when it is natural and normal for him to marry, and relying on what he believed was the safest security in the world, the written promise of his Government, he has assumed the additional responsibilities of a family. But with his increased responsibilities and obligations he finds the promise broken, and his income reduced below that which he received when he first entered the Army.

In the case of captains, many are now in that grade due to the promotion hump. Formerly this promotion injustice was somewhat mitigated by the increase of pay due to length of service. But section 201 now denies even this mitigation, and on top of the promotion injustice imposes another and more serious injustice.

In the Navy there are many cases of officers who entered the Naval Academy prior to July 1, who are receiving considerably more pay than their classmates, senior to them, who happened to enter the academy on or after July 1 of the same year, solely due to the operation of section 201.

A concrete example, the class of 1913. Forty entered prior to July 1, 1909, and 34 subsequent to that date. In the summer of 1932, June and July, these officers were entitled to a pay increase due to completion of 23 years of service. Forty received the increase, but section 201 denied it to the 34.

The officer who stood at the top of this class is one of the 34. He has been selected for promotion to the grade of commander. Section 201 prevents him receiving the increase the law promised him both on length of service and promotion. But the man who stood fourth from the bottom of the class and who has not been selected for promotion received the increase merely because he happened to enter the academy in June.

There are many cases of similar discrimination in all the services, Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service.

And the striking and sad feature of the whole situation is that a comparatively few of the junior officers carry the load while the senior officers escape almost entirely. A most glowing example of a violation of the principle of imposing the economy burden in proportion to ability to pay.

And in every case the right to the increase has been earned by the individual through faithful fulfillment on his or her part of the provisions of law which grant the increase.

In these times it is sound policy not to initiate any pay increases, and, of course, the services expect no such action. It is, however, an entirely different matter when the Government writes a definite promise in the law and the individual faithfully performs all the conditions on his part only to have his Government break that promise. The injustice, the unfairness, and the discrimination in its application marks section 201 as the most vicious piece of legislation placed on our statute books in many a day.

During this entire period of stress the officers of the uniformed services have uncomplainingly stood ready and willing to make any proportionate contribution the Congress saw fit to require from all Government personnel. At no time have those officers opposed in any manner any proportionate reduction proposed in Congress. All they ask is fair play. Let each contribute in proportion to what he receives. In that spirit of fairness they ask that the unjust and inequitable burden which section 201 imposes be not continued.

The accusation that officers have traded the 8½ per cent cut on enlisted men for the elimination of section 201 is a false, vicious, and groundless attack, and known to be such by its sponsors. The enlisted pay cut was put in the economy bill by the Senate committee in secret session, and passed the Senate over the strongest opposition of the Army and Navy. The only suggestion ever made by the Army or Navy was that if the Congress feels that the Army and Navy must make a greater proportionate contribution than the great majority of Government personnel, including the Members of Congress themselves, then in the name of justice let the contribution of each officer be in proportion to the amount he receives—and do not put this unjust additional burden on a small group of junior officers.

This matter has never been considered on the floor of the House. It has passed both times without discussion or explanation and without the Members of the House knowing of the great injustices resulting from its application. In the Senate committee was the first time it was fully considered with the facts at hand, and that committee unhesitatingly eliminated the section. Those affected believe the fairness of the Members of the House will cause them to take the same action when they know the facts.

jected. Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON].

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amend-

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WHITTINGTON: On page 10, follow-

Amendment offered by Mr. Whittington: On page 10, following line 25, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"Sec. 16. (a) The head of each executive department and independent establishment is authorized and directed to make such reductions in the expenditures from the appropriations made by the regular annual appropriations act for the several purposes of his department or establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, except in the case of the Treasury Department appropriations for acquisition of sites for and construction of public buildings and the appropriation for addition to the cumulative sinking fund pursuant to section 308 of the emergency relief and construction act of 1932, as will in the aggregate equal at least 5 per cent of the total amount so appropriated for his department or establishment for such year, excluding, in the case of the Treasury Department, the appropriations specified above. Such reductions shall be made in a manner calculated to bring about the greatest economy in expenditures consistent with the effithe greatest economy in expenditures consistent with the efficiency of the service: Provided, That in the Veterans' Administration such reductions of 5 per cent shall apply only to the appropriation for operating expenses.'

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, the amendment just read which I propose is in substance the original Bratton amendment with the Costigan amendment eliminated, and with the proviso that the operation of the Bratton amendment in the Veterans' Bureau will affect only the appropriations for operating expenses.

The so-called Bratton amendment is section 18, page 80, of H. R. 13520, the pending bill, as it passed the Senate. It provides that the head of each executive department and independent establishment is authorized and directed to make reductions that will aggregate at least 5 per cent of the amount appropriated for the department or establishment during the fiscal year 1934. The so-called Costigan amendment to the Bratton amendment provides that in making any reductions no wage cuts, other reduced compensation, or furloughs shall be ordered. Under the Bratton amendment, there would have been reductions of approximately $143,000,000 in the expenditures for 1934, with no reductions in wages or compensation.

Under the amendment that I propose, the Costigan amendment as to wages and compensation is eliminated. Moreover, in an effort to secure favorable consideration, the amendment I propose provides that in the Veterans' Administration the reduction of 5 per cent shall apply only to the appropriation for operating expenses. The operating expenses for the current year are approximately $115,688,-000. The proviso in my amendment would therefore limit the reductions in the Veterans' Administration to approximately $5,750,000. Personally, I know of no reason why the 5 per cent reduction in the Veterans' Administration should not apply to pensions, salaries, compensations, and allowances. But I am informed that it would be difficult to secure approval for any reductions in pensions or compensations. Under the amendment which I propose, there would be reductions for the next current year of approximately $100,000,000. As I have stated, the amendment is substantially the Bratton amendment as it passed the

REORGANIZATION

While the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns] contains 16 pages, only two substantial provisions are embraced therein. They are the elimination of the so-called Bratton amendment and the provision for the reorganization of executive departments. Title IV, which provides for the reorganization of executive departments, is substantially in the language of the Senate amendment. The power in both the Senate amendment and the proposed House amendment to be conferred upon the President in reorganizing is identically the same. In fact, the language is substantially the same. The provision as to reorganization therefore might have been eliminated from the pending amendment. There is no substantial disagreement between the House and the Senate on the proposition for reorganization. By adopting the reorganization provision of the pending amendment the House will merely be agreeing to the Senate provision.

I favor the reorganization provisions. The President will be given the power and authority to group, coordinate, and consolidate executive and administrative agencies, to reduce the number of such agencies by consolidation, those having similar functions under a single head, to eliminate overlapping, and to segregate regulatory agencies and functions from those of executive and administrative agencies.

The President would be given the power to transfer, consolidate, or abolish executive agencies or the functions thereof, with the further power to designate and fix the names and functions of any consolidated agencies.

The economy act of 1932 conferred substantially the same power upon the President. That act did not give the President the power to abolish any statutory agency. He was requested to make recommendations to Congress relating to the abolition of any agency or bureau of statutory origin. On December 9, 1932, President Hoover made recommendations for certain transfers and consolidations. It is worthy of note that he merely recommended the abolition of some three or four insignificant statutory agencies. Among all the 58 consolidations he recommended the abolition of 3 or 4 statutory agencies, to wit, the Office of Public Buildings and Parks, the Employees' Compensation Commission, and the board of trustees of National Training School for Boys.

The President is given power respecting executive agencies. Under the provisions of the amendment the President has no authority to abolish or transfer any executive department or the functions thereof.

Executive departments are established by law. Executive agencies and departmental bureaus are generally established by Executive orders. The power thus conferred by the President is very largely the power to consolidate, eliminate, or abolish the agencies established by the Executive, rather than by Congress. If the President has the inherent power to establish an agency within a bureau or an executive department, it must follow that he has the power to eliminate or abolish. There is no good reason why he should not have the power to transfer, regroup, consolidate, and redistribute, given him under the provisions of the pending amendment. Something has been said about the President being a dictator. There is no occasion for the statement. No dictatorial powers are conferred upon the President in the pending amendment. Congress has failed to eliminate and abolish. The Executive established most of the agencies. He is now given the power to eliminate, abolish, or consolidate.

The power thus conferred upon the President will be conducive to economy. It depends upon whether he merely transfers, or eliminates, or abolishes. There will be no economy unless useless agencies are abolished and unnecessary employees are eliminated. The total appropriations for the maintenance of all the executive agencies amount to but a small part of the annual Federal appropriations. It has been estimated that they constitute less than $50,000,000 of the total annual appropriations aggregating $4,000,000,000. I warn those, therefore, who expect large economies from the power conferred upon the President that they are destined to be disappointed. Real economies can only result from decreased appropriations, and that means reduced salaries and compensations.

REDUCTION

The pending amendment by Mr. Byrns, the chairman of the committee, is conspicuous because the so-called Bratton amendment in the Senate is eliminated and there is no substitute therefor. The Bratton amendment contemplates a saving of $143,000,000. The Committee on Appropriations in the House offers no substitute for the elimination of the Bratton amendment. For the $143,000,000 in economy proposed by the Senate, the House makes no provisions whatever. If the amendment of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee is adopted, it means the economies will be indefinite. They will be largely economies that result from | treat all departments alike. There is no better way to econoconsolidations

My amendment will provide for the reduction of 5 per cent on total appropriations aggregating $2,000,000,000. It is substantially the Bratton amendment, I repeat, with the Costigan amendment eliminated.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns], the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, has advanced several objections to the Bratton amendment. I believe they are all without merit. First, he stated that the President of the United States has the power to reduce appropriations under the law. The fact is that the President has no power under the law to reduce any appropriation or salary. The President has exercised his power for indirect reductions. He has ordered that certain works, constructions, or projects be delayed or continued. He has encouraged economy. He is to be commended therefor. I recall that Gen. H. M. Lord. the Director of the Budget under President Coolidge, emphasized the reductions for which the Executive was responsible. These reductions consisted in purchasing fewer pencils, in the elimination of small items here and there; but in the aggregate all of the reductions ever accomplished or ever made by a President amounted to a comparatively small amount. I repeat that under the law the Executive has no power to reduce appropriations, salaries, or allowances. No one ever asserted that any President made anything except small reductions as compared with reductions guaranteed by the Bratton amendment. Again, if the President has the power to make reductions, no harm can be done by adopting the amendment specifically directing that $100,000,000 be saved, which I propose.

The second objection to the Bratton amendment is that it will endanger the national defense. If adopted, the amendment would reduce the total Army appropriations about $13,000,000 and the Navy about $17,000,000. The annual appropriations for the Army and the Navy are around $600,000,000. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns] championed a bill to combine the Army and the Navy. He repeatedly asserted that $100,000,000 could be saved. Those who opposed combining stated that no evidence was submitted that a saving of $100,000,000 would result. It was said that the principal reductions would be in the purchase of supplies. Under the economy act, the President now has the power to coordinate the purchasing activities of the Army and the Navy. He could provide for saving at least $30,000,000 under the provisions given him in the economy act of 1932. The gentleman from Tennessee, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, can not be consistently heard to deny that there should be a reduction of practically $30,000,000 in the Army and Navy, when he himself has advocated combining the two departments and thus providing for an alleged economy of $100,000,000.

It is also said that this is no time to economize in the Army and Navy. Commodity prices the world over are cheaper than they have ever been. It is unreasonable to assert that the Army and the Navy can not get along with approximately $30,000,000 less than in normal times. efficiency should be just as great and the facilities just as adequate with a 5 per cent reduction, when governments generally and people universally are reducing far more than 5 per cent their annual expenditures. I know of no better way for the Army and the Navy to foster a sentiment for combining the two departments than by opposing reasonable reductions in the crisis that confronts the country.

In the third place, it is said that some departments have already been reduced. Name them. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations neglected to point out a single department where adequate economies had already been made. The fact is that the annual Army bill is larger than it was last year, and the current report is that the Navy bill, which will be considered in a few days, will be as large as it was last year. It is easy for every department to say that it has been cut to the bone. Opposition by the departments was expected. Congress should rise to its responsibility and mize than to provide for a general reduction in all departments.

Again, it was urged in opposition to the Bratton amendment that the Veterans' Administration would be crippled. The annual appropriation for the Veterans' Bureau is approximately $950,000,000. The appropriations for operating expenses are approximately $115,688,000. I have undertaken to remove the objections urged by the Veterans' Administration by providing in the pending amendment that the 5 per cent reduction in the Veterans' Administration shall apply only to the appropriations for operating expenses. If the 5 per cent applied, as personally I think it should, to the total appropriation for the Veterans' Administration in the sum of $950,000,000, there would be a saving of $47,000,000. In an effort to secure real economy and with the information that I have, it will be difficult, if not impossible, to pass my amendment with the 5 per cent applicable to the entire appropriation. I have therefore limited it to the operating expenses. Under the terms of my amendment the deductions for the Veterans' Administration will not exceed $5,750,000, and to secure economy I would be agreeable to a further amendment so stating.

I am aware of some of the difficulties in the Bratton amendment. It is said that a direction to reduce is not authority for reducing salaries. Where there is a will there is a way. In the legislative situation there is nothing for those who favor reduction of expenses to do except to undertake to reinstate the Bratton amendment. It will thus be in conference. With the Costigan amendment eliminated, the conferees can adopt definite language that will authorize at least 5 per cent for the reduction in the appropriation for salaries, compensation, and other purposes.

I favor further reduction in governmental expenses. In further extending my remarks, under leave granted, permit me to say that I will continue to urge economy in every way that I can. Unless there is a further reduction in Federal salaries and compensation there will be no further economies.

The House has not measured up to its responsibility. When the economy act was passed by the House in 1932 it provided for reductions of only $12,000,000 or $13,000,000. In the other body the material reductions were made. The House missed an opportunity to aid in economic recovery. The Senate really provided for the reductions of the economy bill in 1932. In the pending bill as it passed the House the Committee on Appropriations merely continued the reductions of the current year. No additional economies were provided. In the Senate the Bratton amendment provided for $143,000,000 in further reductions. If the pending amendment sponsored by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in the House is adopted, it means that the economies in the Senate are eliminated, with no substitute by the House. The amendment that I propose will provide for substantial economies amounting to $100,000,000. If the amendment which I foster is not agreed to, and if no other amendments to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee are adopted, it means that there will be practically no economy or further economy in governmental expenses in the present session.

It is said that 5 per cent reductions will result in employees being dismissed. I know of no way to provide for Government economy by consolidating executive agencies or by reductions that will not result in reduced salaries, compensations, or dismissal of some employees. It is a question of whether Congress will continue to levy additional burdensome taxes when the people are least able to pay, or whether Congress will balance the Budget by reducing expenditures rather than levying new and additional taxes. The Senate has provided for reductions. Will the House eliminate the Senate reductions without any substitute therefor? If it does, I repeat, it means that practically no reduction in the expenditures of Government will be made during the present session. I know of no way to economize except to reduce. We can reduce as well as appropriate.

We may evade reductions by proposing other remedies. Some would expand the currency. I believe in sound expansion; but it takes time. Others advocate the removal of tariff barriers, and propose international trade conferences and agreements. So do I. Still others urge agricultural relief, including the refinancing of farm and home mortgages, with reductions and extensions. So do I. Yet others champion measures for the restoration of commodities to reasonable values. I gladly join them. These and other remedies are all right, but they can not supplant reductions in the cost of government; they supplement. To oppose reductions by advocating these and similar policies is to sidestep the real issue confronting the country.

Others maintain certain allowances and compensations should be withdrawn, and they thus oppose general reduc-I advocate withdrawals and the removal of inequalities. Meantime the sensible, the wise thing, is to reduce all, pending the revision of laws. All who receive Government money should share in promoting Government economy. We are in a crisis more serious than war. All should do their bit and bear their share of the economy that must come in government.

The Democratic Party promised reductions. Whether elected or defeated, the Members of Congress promised economy. The country now demands that we make good our promises. We may satisfy or, rather, delude ourselves with excuses or evasions for opposing economy, but we can only satisfy the country by further reductions in all Government salaries, compensations, and appropriations. If my amendment is defeated, the country will again be disappointed in the House of Representatives. There is no way to economize except to reduce, eliminate, and abolish.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE].

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi has this proviso:

Provided, That in the Veterans' Administration such reduction of 5 per cent shall apply only to the appropriation for operating expenses.

No one can tell from that amendment what it means. If it means the total appropriation for the Veterans' Administration, then the reduction in the operating expenses of the Veterans' Bureau is reduced around $50,000,000, and the Veterans' Bureau can not function on that.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Is it not true that, under the advice given by the Administrator of the Veterans' Bureau, that will result in the closing of every regional office in the country and the general hospitals?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes, many of them; and it will affect every man, whether that man is in a hospital for a compensable disease or an injury, compensable or not. This amendment should not pass, and I shall vote against it, not only for the provision affecting veterans but also for the other provisions contained in it.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to myself, and in doing so I ask unanimous consent to include at this point a letter from the Secretary of the Navy with reference to the effect of amendments of this kind on the Navy and national defense.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection. The letter is as follows:

> DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY. OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY, Washington, February 10, 1933.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Navy budget, now in the hands of the Appropriations Committee of the House, provides $308,669,562 modernizing at great loss of time and increase of cost. This would necessitate the discharge of about 4,500 civilians and would save approximately $7,500,000.

2. Restrict reserve activities, at a cut of about $1,500,000; stop now further regular Navy enlistments, reducing Navy enlisted personnel by 9,000 men by the end of the fiscal year 1934, resulting in a cut of approximately $5,000,000. This would result in putting out of active commission additional ships as shown by column 2 in the following table; which refers only to combatant ships:

Column 1	Column 2	Column 3	Column 4
Total number ships in class	Number addi- tional to be placed out of active commis- sion	Ships already out of commis- sion	Total to be kept out of ac- tive commission
15 battleships. 4 aircraft carriers ¹ . 15 heavy cruisers ² . 10 light cruisers. 103 destroyers.	3 2 4 2 13	2 2 2 2 31	5 2 6 4 4
54 submarines 4 light mine layers 2 dirigibles 3	6 2 1	12	18 2 1

This leaves in full commission about 66 per cent of the number of British and 56 per cent of the number of Japanese ships which are in full commission, or fully manned.

3. Reduce Marine Corps by about 1,150 men, resulting in a cut of about $1,000,000.

Our Navy is already 20,000 men short of the number necessary properly to man our ships in commission.

It is evident that this further cut of 10,150 enlisted men would cripple our national defense for years, seriously injure the morale of the service, and, taken together with the discharge of 4,500 civil employees, result in an increase of 14,650 unemployed.

Sincerely.

Hon. Joseph W. Byrns,
Chairman Appropriations Committee,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Whittington) there were 9 ayes and 125 noes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman objects on the ground that there is no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and eighteen Members present-a quorum.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment of Mr. Whittington to the amendment proposed by Mr. Byrns to Senate amendment No. 14, H. R. 13520: On page 10, following line 25, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"Sec. 16a. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, the rate of compensation of any office, position, employment, or enlistment, the incumbent of which is subject to the furlough provisions or the incumbent of which is subject to the furiough provisions of the compensation reductions contained in Title I of Part II of the legislative appropriation act, fiscal year 1933, as continued for the fiscal year 1934 is reduced by 11 per cent of the amount of such compensation in excess of $1,000, and such reduction shall be made prior to the application of and shall be in addition to the reduction provided in such title, as continued."

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the amendment which I proposed for a reduction of 5 per cent in the total appropriations for each executive department and independent establishment with total reductions of approximately $100,000,000, my amendment being substantially the same as the so-called Bratton amendment in the Senate, has been defeated, I know of no practical way in the pending amendment to provide for economy unless the amendment which has just been reported is adopted. The pending bill continues the reduction of salaries and wages in the economy act of 1932, ranging from 81/3 per cent for salaries of $1,000 and more to 15 per cent for salaries in excess of $15,000 and 20 per cent for salaries in excess of $20,000.

The amendment that I now propose makes a further reduction for the fiscal year 1934 of 11 per cent of the amount of all Federal salaries and compensations in excess of $1,000. My amendment is the additional reduction under the so-called furlough plan of 11 per cent recommended by President Hoover. If my amendment is adopted, it will result in the reductions of salaries by 19½ per cent to 26 per cent for all salaries in excess of $1,000 and less than $20,000 per annum. It will result in a total reduction of approximately 31 per cent in the case of salaries in excess of $20,000.

Personally, I prefer the pay-cut plan with no exemptions and with larger percentage of reductions in the larger salaries; but both the House and the Senate have agreed to continue in the pending bill the furlough plan and the reductions of the economy act. The 11 per cent recommended by the President is, therefore, germane and appropriate to the provisions of the economy act brought forward and substantially agreed to. If 11 per cent additional reductions are made in salaries, wages, and compensations, it will result in further savings of $59,000,000, according to the estimate of the Bureau of Efficiency. Under the provisions of the economy act the savings as continued and brought forward in the pending bill for the fiscal year 1934 are $89,000,000.

My amendment will increase the savings and thus provide for a total economy in salaries, wages, and compensations during the fiscal year 1934 of approximately $148,000,000.

In extending my remarks under leave granted, I may say that I advocate the reduction of all pay, wages, salaries, pensions, annuities, disability allowance, and compensation allowance during the year 1934 without exemptions. I favor graduated and progressive decreases in the reductions of salaries. All rates of compensation not in excess of $1,500 might well be reduced 10 per cent; the rate of compensation from $1,500 to $3,000, 15 per cent; from $3,000 to $5,000, 20 per cent; from $5,000 to $10,000, 25 per cent; and in excess of $10,000, 30 per cent. I favor the pay cut and graduated reductions. I have introduced bills to this effect. If a bill embodying the proposals herein suggested is passed as a substitute for and in lieu of the furlough plan, it would result in savings amounting to approximately $200,000,000.

It is evident, however, that it would be impossible to substitute the pay-cut plan for the furlough plan during the present session. It is also evident that it would be difficult to secure further reductions in a larger percentage than suggested by the President of the United States. The Democratic platform advocated reductions of approximately 25 per cent in the expenditures of government. The Republican platform demanded reductions. President Hoover recommends 11 per cent reductions. In the hope, therefore, that both Democrats and Republicans who believe that the really substantial way to reduce expenditures in government is to further reduce all salaries and compensations, I have proposed the amendment which has just been reported for additional reductions of 11 per cent. In the further hope of securing its adoption, I have provided for an exemption of $1,000. If the amendment is adopted, the exemption of $1,000 that obtains in the economy act of 1932 will be continued. While I prefer a larger reduction, if the additional 11 per cent suggested is adopted, it will result in material economies during the next fiscal year. We are making substantially the same appropriations that we made for the last fiscal year. If we can make the appropriations, we can make the reductions.

Under the furlough plan, salaries of $2,000 are reduced to $1,833. Under the amendment that I propose, salaries of $2,000 would be further reduced to $1,733. Under the furlough plan, the salaries of members of Congress were reduced from $10,000 to $9,000. Under the amendment that I propose, the salaries of Members of Congress and others receiving $10,000 would be reduced from $9,000 to $8,109. As I have stated, I prefer a larger percentage of reduction, but, as a compromise and in the effort to continue to secure further reductions of expenditures in government, my amendment provides for exemptions of $1,000 and a smaller percentage of reductions than I think should obtain.

We may delay, we may evade, but the real, substantial reductions in the expenditures of government must ultimately come from wages, salaries, allowances, and compensations of every kind. A dollar now will buy as much in most parts of the United States as a dollar and a half would purchase prior to 1929. The beneficiaries of Government salaries and allowances, by refusing further reductions, are thus receiving larger salaries and compensations than they receive in normal times. The wages, salaries, pensions, annuities, allowances, and compensations aggregate approximately $2,000,000,000. Under bills that I have introduced and amendments that I have fostered at every opportunity, these expenditures can be reduced by approximately $200,000,000. Those who share in the benefits of government would thus share in the distress of the country.

If this amendment is defeated, it means that there will be no additional economies and no further reductions in salaries and compensations during the present session of Congress. Instead of reducing the expenditures of government by 25 per cent, the present session merely continues the small reductions made in the preceding session. There were no reservations in the promise of democracy to reduce expenditures in government. We may conjure up excuses, but there is no valid reason why the amendment should not be enlarged. In fact, the percentage of reduction should be larger.

If the House disagrees to the amendment, it means no economy in the pending bill. The so-called Bratton amendment provides for reductions amounting to $143,000,000. The Senate has thus provided for economies amounting to $143,000,000. The House committee recommends the elimination of the Bratton amendment. Neither economy nor reductions are proposed to take the place of the Bratton amendment. If the amendment that I offer is defeated, the House of Representatives will be in the attitude of making no further economies in salaries, compensations, and appropriations during the present session.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Whittington) there were 14 ayes and 204 noes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the announcement of the vote. I was about to object to it on the ground there was no quorum present, so that a yea-and-nay vote might be had.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The division discloses that a quorum is present.

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. Beedy].

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Beedy: Page 15, line 25, after the word "session," strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That if either branch of Congress within said 60 calendar days shall pass a resolution disapproving of such Executive order, or any part thereof, such Executive order shall become null and void to the extent of such disapproval."

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, if Members who have listened to the reading of the amendment will cast their eyes over the provision of the last economy act to be found on page 36 of that act, you will find that the amendment which I have offered is precisely the proviso which was contained in the original act, whereby the last Congress granted to the President power to consolidate these bureaus. Let us understand each other on both sides of the aisle. This is unquestionably one of the most effective ways in which to promote economy in the administration of this Government. We all want to see economy secured in this way. The last Congress wanted it. We passed the legislation. We gave the present Executive the power to reorganize Government departments, but this Congress wisely reserved to itself the power to reject in whole or in part any such changes as might be suggested which did not meet with the approval of this body. When this session of Congress convened, the recommendations of the President providing for the consolidations, which we now seek to accom- | plish, were promptly reported to this body.

The recommendations were considered by the Congress and rejected. I am not going to complain about that rejection. This great reorganization program ought not to be dealt with in a partisan spirit. We are in too great an emergency. There is too much suffering by both Democrats and Republicans in this country for us to be narrowly partisan in phrasing this grant of power to the Executive. However, I believe that since we reserved a vestige of power in the Congress, and in passing the economy act left it to this House to review and in its wisdom to reject, in whole or in part, the Executive recommendations, I say you who sit on the right of this aisle ought to meet us in a spirit of fairness and help us write into the pending bill the same provision which we allowed you to write into the economy act. Will you do it? We can not abuse this reservation of power. We do not say that you abused it. The fact is that the consolidation recommendations of President Hoover were rejected, else the country would now be enjoying the very economies for which we still seek. You Democrats, of course, must take responsibility for that.

I think this Congress ought always to reserve to itself power to reject any such recommendations as the Executive authority may make in the way of consolidation of bureaus when such power is given the President even in a great emergency.

I make this statement that the record may be clear, and that the country may know that regardless of party we want the economies which may flow from a proper exercise, by the Executive, of this power which we are about to give him. Popular government is too slow in its action to obtain the desired consolidations through the Congress The power ought to be given to the Executive, but we ought to reserve in ourselves the power to disapprove his recommendations if we see fit. [Applause.] I ask you on both sides of the aisle to vote for this amendment. I believe this House ought to go on record before the country now as showing its willingness to delegate this power, but that we should make the reservation set forth in my amendment.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. Yes.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Inasmuch as we are delegating a legislative function, the legislature ought to keep control of it. Mr. BEEDY. Certainly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Maine has expired.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to myself. I hope the House will not adopt this amendment. I could cite many reasons for the position which I take if I thought it was necessary. You gentlemen know, and I know, regardless of what position any one of us may have taken two or three months ago, recent developments have demonstrated that we will never be able to accomplish anything along this line unless we give some one man, with the courage and with the will, the power to do it. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY] in his amendment is inviting a veto. I do not say intentionally, but if that amendment should be adopted, I know that it will invite and will undoubtedly, it seems to me, provoke a veto. The gentleman shakes his head, but I want him to listen to his own Attorney General, a distinguished lawyer, General Mitchell, upon that very subject. He will be the adviser of the President with reference to the legal phases of this bill if it passes both Houses, and upon his advice the President will very properly lean. The President called upon the Attorney General for advice with reference to the McKellar amendment upon the first deficiency appropriation bill, and in the course of the opinion delivered by General Mitchell he used this language, and that is one of the reasons we have left this with the President and not undertaken to retain any control in Congress:

In the act of June 30, 1932, making an appropriation for the In the act of June 30, 1932, making an appropriation for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, and with a view to economy in the operation of the Government the Congress gave authority to the President by Executive order to consolidate, redistribute, and transfer various Government agencies and functions, and establish a general formula for his guidance. By section 407 it was provided that the Executive order should be transmitted to the Congress in session and should not become effective until after the expiration of 60 days from such transmission, and that "if either branch of Congress within such 60 calendar days shall pass a resolution disapproving of such Executive order or any part thereof, such Executive order shall become null and void to the extent of such disapproval." It must be assumed that the func-tions of the President under this act were executive in their nature or they could not have been constitutionally conferred upon him, and so there was set up a method by which one House of Congress might disapprove Executive action. No one would ques-Congress might disapprove Executive action. No one would question the power of Congress to provide for delay in the execution of such an administrative order, or its power to withdraw the authority to make the order, provided the withdrawal takes the form of legislation. The attempt to give to either House of Congress, by action which is not legislation, power to disapprove administrative acts raises a grave question as to the validity of the entire provision in the act of June 30, 1932, for Executive reorganization of governmental functions.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. From what is the gentleman reading? Mr. BYRNS. I am reading from the opinion of Attorney General Mitchell delivered to the President of the United States on tax refunds.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It is not analogous to this at all.

Mr. BYRNS. It is. He spoke in general terms. He says:

The power to disapprove administrative acts.

I submit that that does not apply to tax refunds alone. It applies to any legislation, and I beg this House not to put anything in this bill which may provoke a veto.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. My time has expired.

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns] one short question in my own time. The language which the gentleman from Maine has offered is the exact language in the economy act, and the President signed that bill. Now, why will he veto it this time? Will the gentleman answer that question?

Mr. BYRNS. He did not call upon the Attorney General. Mr. SNELL. That was an entirely different question that the President presented to the Attorney General.

Mr. BYRNS. Will the gentleman guarantee that the President of the United States will sign this bill as it is passed and sent to him?

Mr. SNELL. I have never quoted the President and I can not guarantee anything, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns] can not, either.

Mr. BYRNS. Certainly not; but let us not run any chances of defeating this bill.

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardia].

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns] relies as his authority on an opinion of the Attorney General, based upon an entirely different proposition. The opposition to the Mc-Kellar amendment voiced by the Attorney General was an encroachment on the powers of the Executive. Here we are delegating legislative powers to the Executive and simply seeking to retain control. We might as well talk about the opinion in the Dred Scott case and make it applicable to the proposition before the House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is in times of stress such as we are now experiencing, that the people lose control of their Government. While I will concede, and anyone probably can make an argument in favor of delegating powers, I have so much faith in the Republic, that I believe the Constitution and Congress will exist when the depression is over. At least I want to preserve the Constitution and our form of representative government. But if we delegate the few remaining powers in the legislative branch of the Government, we might as well abolish the Congress, and that is what a few Bourbonites of this country want to do. [Applause]. I am opposed to it.

I may not be here the next session, but let me remind my Democratic friends that when the proposition was before the House a few weeks ago and President Hoover submitted his recommendations, I joined with you in voting down his recommendations, because only a few weeks ago you took the floor and sustained the point that it was an encroachment on the legislative branch of the Government. How can you turn about and offer an amendment of this kind and resist the very provision that was in the original bill, to retain control of a legislative function. Perhaps the Executive has the facilities for making a comprehensive study of reorganization. There is, of course, no objection to that being done and recommendations submitted to the Congress. Permit, if you will, Executive orders to reorganize but by all means retain legislative control. Do not surrender a duty vested in Congress by the Constitution.

Mr. Speaker, if Congress to-day votes this proposition without a saving clause and the protection contained in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. Beedy] it is an admission of the complete failure of representative government, and I for one will not join in such a confession of failure. [Applause].

The proposition is transcending. It is more important than the mere reorganization of a few departments of government. It is begging the question. We are not going to get out of this crisis by the saving of a few paltry dollars. We have to get to the roots of existing evils. We all know that the major portion of our expenditures are fixed charges. The expenditures for the Army, the Navy, the debt service, interest and sinking-fund requirements, and Veterans' Bureau comprise 65 or 70 per cent of the entire appropriation. To surrender a purely legislative function, whether to one President or another, at this time or any other time is highly improper. I submit if it was improper for one President to have that power, it is just as improper for another President to have that power. We are not discussing personalities. We are not discussing economy. We are discussing what our forefathers shed their blood for and that which took centuries to acquire, and that is representative government, with a constitution clearly defining the powers of the executive and legislative branches of government. [Applause.]

Here, because some one is bewildered, because there is timidity in considering real solutions, because some know not where they are going, under the guise of economy a complete abdication of legislative government is offered. The only self-respecting thing to do is to protect the Constitution and assume all of the responsibilities vested in Congress, and uphold the only control that the people have on their Government. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGugin].

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, we have heard much to-day that giving power to the President is an admission of the breakdown of legislative government in meeting responsibility in a crisis. This has been wholly unnecessary. That parliamentary government has broken down in a crisis has been so overwhelmingly demonstrated by the Seventysecond Congress that it is now a self-evident fact generally accepted by the American people. If we have a President coming into power who is willing yet to try to save democracy in America, let us give him the power to do it. Let us give him a chance to do it. Let us have no misunderstanding about it. The very purpose of the Beedy amendment is to destroy any opportunity for President-elect Roosevelt to meet this responsibility. Our experience in this House demonstrates that such limited authority given by the Congress is mere hypocrisy on the part of Congress, because the Congress scuttles it when it comes back to the House. That is what happened to the Hoover consolidation. The House scuttled it, and when we gave him the power it was hypocrisy on our part to do it. The ones who destroyed it when it came back to this House are largely the ones to-day who do want to give this authority to the next President.

Not as a Republican, but just in the interest of America, I hope my party will stand up and serve the country. In this way can we best serve our own political interests. The last one of us knows that Congress will not meet this responsibility. We hope that the next President with responsibility upon his shoulders will meet it. [Applause.]

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Underhill].

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I shall address myself to the statement that Congress is able to take care of this question without giving up any of its prerogatives or its duties, and call your attention to the fact that in the last three years, although Congress has had direct and sole jurisdiction over this branch of the Government, it has not done one single thing to remedy the situation or to save a dollar.

I call your attention to the legislative appropriation. I call your attention to the farcial Capital police force, to which has been added some 13 members only recently, performing a service which could be carried on by less than a quarter of the number of metropolitan officers if a squad of them were assigned to the Capitol Grounds.

I call your attention to the ridiculously large salaries paid the telephone attendants both on the right and the left of the House—$3,500 each for two supervisors, and the Lord knows how much to several unnecessary assistants.

I call your attention to the excessive number of pages and doorkeepers that we find all over this Capitol.

I call your attention to the fact that we have four pairing clerks for the few absentees who want to be paired on a vote.

I call your attention to the fact that we have a House library in addition to the Congressional Library, and that we have a library in the Clerk's office, another in this Chamber, and recently another library has been added on the fourth floor of the House Office Building; an extravagant duplication of facilities to provide jobs under patronage.

I call your attention to the gratuities that are given year after year and year after year to the relatives of deceased employees of this House; men who were brought here from back home; and when an effort is made to get rid of them you say that they have given years of valuable expert service and they can not be let go; that their places can not be filled; yet when there is a change in the administration every one of them goes out and a new supply brought from back home, and if within a week or thereafter one of them dies you vote six months' salary and an additional $250 for funeral expenses.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield me two additional minutes?

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield two additional minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Under-HILL].

Mr. UNDERHILL. I call your attention to the press gallery. We have been criticized by the press all over this country—for what? They say we have free meals and free shaves. They know we do not have any such thing. But the press has splendid quarters furnished free; it has a superintendent, it has an assistant superintendent, it has a messenger, and, I think, a janitor furnished them free. All of their typewriters are furnished to them by the Government free; all of their stationery is given to them free, yet the press crucify us because we run a restaurant—where the busy reporters have a special table—at a small deficit. How about the pot calling the kettle black? [Applause.]

I call your attention to the committee hearings. Do you know that there were 10,000,000,000 pages of committee hearings published in the last session of Congress? The committees go wild. At every committee hearing they have stenographic reports; and although year after year, year after year the same measures are considered in the committees and the same witnesses appear, yet the next year there is a duplication of hearings and publications at a frightful expense.

I call your attention to the House post office. We have recently added a large number to the employees of the post office, and the new House Office Building as yet has no tenants. There are half a dozen or more forwarding clerks. Those of you who leave your secretaries here to forward your mail do not know that there are half a dozen clerks in the post office all the year round just waiting to forward your mail to your home address when Congress is not in session.

Half of the number of clerks, assistant clerks, messengers, and janitors of the standing committees could be wiped out, and same can be dispensed with without detriment to public service.

Has Congress done anything up here on the Hill to effect economy? No. Will it do anything? I doubt it. Stop this bluff about economy and give the power to some one who will do something to reduce Government expenses, bureaus, and personnel.

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Chindblom].

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, when this matter came before the House a few days ago, on the question of sending the bill to conference, I announced that I was in favor of giving the President of the United States plenary power in the matter of reorganizing, consolidating, coordinating, and even eliminating in proper cases the functions and activities of the Federal Government.

I am not fearful of any encroachment upon the powers of Congress by a President having such authority with reference to the executive department, which it is his particular function of government to administer. We legislate, it is true, for all branches of the executive authority, but the President administers them. In the pending proposal we lay down the rules for the Executive to follow, just as we did in the case of the establishment of the Tariff Commission. We there fixed the yardstick, the standard by which the executive officer should be governed in carrying out the policy and the purpose of Congress. The Supreme Court sustained that procedure. So here we are laying down the rules that the President shall apply for the purpose of meeting the present emergency of the general economic depression, and in order to reduce drastically governmental expenditures, and in order that such reduction may be accomplished in great measure by proceeding immediately in the manner prescribed by this legislation.

We therefore give to the President the power and delegate to him the work that Congress might use and perform, if it saw fit, but which we all know Congress never would and never will do, in securing the necessary reduction in the expenditures of the Government. The President is to ascertain certain facts with reference to economy and efficiency in the governmental service and thereafter take certain action to achieve the purposes of Congress in relieving the people from the burdens of taxation by reducing expenditures and securing larger benefits from the moneys appropriated. After all, the duty and responsibility of the President are, in the language of the Constitution, to "take care that the laws be faithfully executed." This legislation gives him additional authority and opportunity to perform this part of his official function.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. Beedy] does not improve the proposal of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns], but, on the contrary, weakens the legislation and is itself of doubtful validity. It in effect delegates to either House the legislative power of the Congress, which, under the Constitution, can be exercised only by both Houses, with the concurrence of the President, or, in the case of his veto, by two-thirds vote of both Houses. On the other hand, the main proposal merely postpones the operation of the President's order for 60 days after the President has submitted a report to Congress. Of course, Congress may at any time by legislation change the President's order if it be a proper subject matter for legislation. It is no novel objection to say that the President may force a two-thirds vote to override his veto. That is always so. Our Democratic friends had some taste of that situation when they sought to change the President's powers in the last session in the matter of the operation of the flexible provisions of the tariff law. The President protected the authority Congress had given him by vetoing the bill, and the Republicans sustained his veto. Both sides of the Chamber can take comfort from that incident in this debate.

Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of the substitute proposed by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, because I am satisfied that in no other way can any substantial reduction of expenditures be secured. We might as well confess that Congress, subject always to the importunities and demands of interested groups and individuals here and there and everywhere, will never succeed effectively in reducing governmental expenditures. This reduction must come. If there is any danger to the future of this Republic to-day it lies in the cost of government which now amounts to at least one-fourth of the entire income of the American people. We must respond to the demand for this reduction in cost of government or we will find that the people will grow impatient and intolerant and even suspicious of their representatives in Congress. We need not worry about usurpations of power. Let us get results. Let us proceed in the only way that has any prospect of success. I criticized the Democratic side a year ago for not giving plenary power to the President. I shall not change my attitude now simply because the administration has fallen into other The task will be difficult and distressing in all events. I am glad the new administration is willing to tackle it, and I wish the President elect and his associates Godspeed in their efforts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. Beedy].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Beedy and Mr. Stafford) there were—ayes 92, noes 116.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 145, nays 227, not voting 54, as follows:

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce that my colleague, Mr. Montague, is absent on account of sickness. If present he would vote "no."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded. Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute to make an announcement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands, I wish to announce that to-morrow evening at 8 o'clock, in the caucus room, the Director of the National Parks, Mr. Albright, will show some very beautiful pictures of the national parks for the benefit of the Members of the House, their friends, and guests.

It was my privilege to see those pictures last week. It is the most remarkable collection of movie pictures that I have ever seen. I hope the House will attend in large numbers and bring their friends and have a great treat.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McCormack: On page 8, line 11, rike out the word "not," and in line 12 and in line 13 strike out strike out the word "not," and in line 12 and in line 13 strike out the words "or its additional compensation therefor," and add after the word "day," in line 12, the following: "or at some other time."

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of my amendment, briefly, is to protect the Saturday half-holiday for those who are employed in hospitals and soldiers' homes under the jurisdiction of the Veterans' Administration.

Under the recommendation of the conferees the Saturday half-holiday is taken away from those who are engaged in certain activities under the Veterans' Administration at the present time. The Saturday half-holiday is reserved to all other employees of the Federal Government. It seems to me this would result in a discrimination.

Furthermore, it seems to me to be unnecessary, in view of the fact that my amendment will result in no increased cost of government. My amendment provides that if an employee affected works on Saturday afternoon, he can be awarded three hours extra for this work on some other day or at some other time. In other words, if the employee can not be given the equivalent of the three hours he worked some time during the following week, then the time can be added up until at some particular time, when, in the judgment of the head of the department, he can be given credit for such work. The Saturday afternoon holiday of these persons can be taken away unless my amendment is adopted.

The amendment will result in no expense to the Federal Government and will eliminate discrimination.

This provision of the conferees' recommendations which I am attempting to amend was eliminated in the Senate and restored by the conferees. It affects only a small group of Federal employees. In all justice and in all fairness, the amendment should be adopted, particularly in view of the fact that it will result in no increased cost to the Government under the language in which I have employed.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself two minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the conferees accepted this language upon the recommendation of General Hines, the Director of Veterans' Affairs. He recommended this particular language which the gentleman from Massachusetts seeks to strike out.

The gentleman from Massachusetts says it will not cost any money. I submit that neither he nor I nor anyone else can determine this. General Hines thinks it would, or that possibly it would. It simply means that if at some time in the future the hospital service of the Veterans' Bureau should get in a pinch and should need the services of employees on Saturday afternoon, he shall have the right to require them to devote such number of hours for this purleague, Mr. GLOVER, who is confined to his bed by illness, to pose as may be necessary, and they will not be entitled next week to come along and say, "I worked two hours last | Saturday and I am going to take that time off this week."

In private business there would be no question about this, and I am sure that the present language will not be opposed. I do not think it amounts to very much, but since the Director of Veterans' Affairs has requested it, I think it ought to be allowed.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. The language I have suggested, "at some other time," was suggested for the purpose of carrying out the intent and purpose of General Hines, so that if an employee worked Saturday afternoon of last week, for example, he could not demand an afternoon off this week, but General Hines, or whoever is in charge, could give him the benefit of such time two or three weeks or a month later.

Mr. BYRNS. But the trouble is General Hines did not recommend that language. He recommended the language that we have reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts. The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Connery].

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Connery to the Byrns amendment: ge 8, line 14, strike out all of section 12, from lines 14 to 22,

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, what I am seeking to do is to strike out of section 12 the language-

Assignments of officers of the Army and Navy or Marine Corps to permanent duty in the Philippines, on the Asiatic Station, or in China, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, or the Panama Canal Zone shall be for not less than three years.

That is what the provision of the present amendment of Mr. Byrns is. I do not see any reason why we should interfere with the regulations of the Army or the War Department, saying that officers must stay in the Philippines, Puerto Rico, and Hawaii for three years without coming home; that they must be obliged to stay there. I think that should be left to the discretion of the War Department.

The climate of the Philippines is entirely different from that of the United States, as everybody knows. They have a saying in the Army that if a man stays too long in the Philippines and something comes over him in his Army career where he is incapacitated, they say he was too long in the Philippines. They claim that the climate affected

There is something in the climate that does not agree with the physique of the American when he goes to the Philippines or to China.

Mr. MANLOVE. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. CONNERY. I yield.
Mr. MANLOVE. And the climate does affect the women and children in the Panama Canal.

Mr. CONNERY. That is true. The wives and children are affected as well. I am trying to strike out this provision. I think the House understands the significance of my amendment.

Mr. BACON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. BACON. The Surgeon General of the Army recommends two years' stay in these countries as the maximum.

Mr. CONNERY. Yes. I hope the House will vote to strike out section 12 and leave it to the discretion of the War Department as to how long officers shall stay in these foreign stations.

Mr. BYRNS. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARNOLD].

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, section 12 was placed in the amendment purely in the interest of economy. We found that the officers and their families were being transferred to and from various points mentioned in this section at intervals that were entirely too frequent. This permits the length of service in the Philippines, Puerto Rico, Hawaii, the Panama Canal Zone, and China three years. The department may direct more frequent transfers if the health of the officers or public interest requires.

We found that under 4-year period transfers the transfer of officers and families cost over $150,000 a year or about $750,000. That seems an unnecessary expenditure. A 3-year transfer will save something like $500,000 during that time. The House should vote down the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts. The 3-year period is not unreasonable in view of the savings to be effected, especially when transfers may be made more frequently when the state of health or public welfare requires.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, my friend from Illinois made my speech. It is absolutely astonishing how much money is spent for the transfer of officers and their families to and from foreign countries. If you talk with some of them they will say, "I have had my trip to such-and-such a place and have still to get a trip here and there to other places." It is traveling around and over the world with their families, all expenses paid. The Government pays for their transportation and for the transportation of their household effects, automobiles, and so forth.

The officers who want to go to China or Puerto Rico or the Philippines ought to be willing to stay there three years. It is not a very long time when their service is for life, and that is what they agree to do when they go in the service.

If we are going to begin to save money, we have got to cut down on these things. My colleague from Illinois says that it costs in the aggregate $150,000 a year. You have got to begin saving these $150,000 items. You have got to adopt the policy of business institutions-when their outgo exceeds their income they cut down on the outgo. That is what good business men do in their private business transactions, and that is what we have to do with the Government business.

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BLANTON. In a minute. It is the aggregate of all these $150,000 items that makes a billion-dollar deficit in the Treasury at the end of the year. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. THATCHER. Many officers do ask for an extension of their tour of duty from two to three years.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and, of course, we want them to know something of the rest of the world. They are sent from place to place, but there is entirely too much traveling around at Government expense in the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Connery) there were—ayes 37, nays 125.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I believe I am as much opposed to a dictatorship, whether it is of the right or the left, if it is based on force and violence, as anybody in the country; but I am sure that the time has come when we should stop haggling and quibbling over this legislation to reorganize the different bureaus and departments of the Government. For more than two years the Congress has had every opportunity to reorganize these different bureaus, and up to date it has failed lamentably. I propose for one to vote for this legislation placing ample power in the hands of the President after March 4 to reorganize the various Federal bureaus, and I do so hoping that he will succeed. This is no time for playing politics but to join hands to combat depression and unemployment and reduce governmental expenditures. I know that there are Members of the House, probably on the Republican side of the aisle, who may vote for this resolution hoping that they will give the President after March 4 ample rope to hang himself, but the question before us is what is best for our country and should be considered free from partisanship. During the World War partisanship was laid aside, and I believe the Members of Congress will agree that we are facing a more serious economic situation in the country to-day, and the best thing we can do in Congress is to declare a political moratorium or armistice from now until the first of the year. Give the President ample power and see if he can, and we should help him, restore prosperity and put this country back where there is confidence among our people. The main thing that should be done in America to-day, and it ought to be done to-morrow, on Washington's Birthday, is for the President elect—and he is the only man in America who can speak for the American people-to come out in a ringing statement and say that he does not propose to favor any legislation or experiment with unsound or depreciated money and that he favors legislation immediately to balance the Budget. If that were done, he would restore confidence not only in the country, but in the Congress of the United States.

The Congress is being maligned and attacked from all sides and is being held responsible for the economic situation in which we find ourselves to-day. I take you back to 1927, 1928, and 1929, when the big business interests of America said to Congress, "Keep your hands off; do not interfere with business; we know our business; we do not want any governmental interference with business." Unfortunately, my friends, that is exactly what we did. We kept our hands off and permitted the inflation to go on and on until it was bound to collapse, and the pendulum swung back, not to normalcy but right on down to the depths we are in to-day. It was not the Congress of the United States that got us into this economic difficulty; it was business itself; and the first thing the business men and big interests did when they found themselves in serious difficulty was to call on the Congress for $4,000,000,000 through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to get them out of the hole they dug for themselves. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KVALE].

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Kvale: Page 2, line 14, after subsection (2), add a new paragraph, to read as follows:
"(3) Section 201 is amended by striking out 'or the municipal government of the District of Columbia."

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, we are to-day reenacting certain provisions of the economy act, which we adopted last year. Earlier in the course of the debate the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD] attempted to revise the language of section 201, which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns], chairman of the committee, is reenacting under the terms of his amendment.

The Senate struck section 201 from the bill, and it is now being reinserted. If it is going to be reinserted, I offer my amendment-and I say frankly I offer it at the request of some of the District employees that are directly affected by it—in the hope that we can correct an injustice to three classes of employees in the District, and three alone. This amendment will affect the pay and the salaries, as near as I can ascertain, of 321 firemen, about 640 policemen, and some 1,200 teachers. Each of these three groups has, as an integral part of its contract, the hope and expectation of having its salary automatically increased after a certain length of time.

Mr. Speaker, the fact that we are devoting our best efforts to correct major economic ills and rectify monstrous injustices as speedily and effectively as we can surely does not warrant dismissal of any opportunity that comes to us from time to time to remedy lesser unfairnesses that creep into legislation. I am convinced that my amendment will correct a situation we consider small and of a minor nature, but to those involved it seems large and important, indeed.

They took these positions under certain agreements, and the automatic increases were just as much a part of their pay as were their monthly checks. They have-and this will refer particularly to the policemen and firemen-conducted themselves in a splendid and commendable manner quently since 1917. The States have built up their eduin most trying times; they have worked long hours overtime and have served the public courageously and gladly. We have all seen firemen within the last months serving as emergency members of the police force in addition to carrying on their usual duties.

Surely, the least we can do to show our appreciation is to permit the original contract with them to stand and let them have their small annual increase as it is called for. All but a small fraction of it will be paid for by the citizens of the District whom they serve—only about 121/2 per cent by the Federal Treasury-and I have heard none of them who have protested the payment of these automatic increases.

The rawest rookie that goes out on the street to patrol his beat, to subject himself to the ordinary and special hazards that a policeman must, runs exactly the same risk to life and health as one who has been on the force a number of years. His only hope of reward is for these small automatic increases as they come along.

If a great conflagration breaks out, the greenest rookie in the fire department takes his place at the nozzle of the hose alongside the oldest fireman on the force. This amendment will affect only the limited number of employees I have mentioned, and no more; it will cost a small additional sum; but I believe in reason and in justice to these people, for the sake of the morale of these departments in the District, it should prevail, and I hope the chairman of the committee can see fit to accept it, even though it does involve a slight additional cost.

I vield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman yields back two minutes.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself two minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KVALE] would simply serve to increase what some have claimed is a discrimination created by what we are doing. Here are the officers in the Army, the officers in the Navy, insisting that they should have the automatic increases. Here are 12,000 postal employees insisting they should have the automatic increases. Here are clerks in the customs-I do not recall how many-insisting they should have the automatic increases. I submit that if we undertake to pick or choose from all that number certain officials in the District of Columbia, those whom I have named are never going to understand just why they were excepted from the general provisions of this law. So I submit that in all fairness and to prevent that discrimination which we are trying to avoid, we ought to vote down the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota IMr. KVALE1.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. REED of New York: Page 10, line 19, after the word "Congress," strike out the period and add the following: "and shall not apply to the permanent annual appropriations for vocational education, colleges for the benefit of agriculture and mechanical arts, or cooperative agricultural extension work.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, every Member of this House has in his or her State a so-called land-grant college. Since 1860, a period of almost three-quarters of a century, these excellent colleges have depended on a permanent Federal appropriation of $50,000 a year to help defray their operating expenses. In 1917 we had the Smith-Hughes Act, dealing with industrial education, and we have had the Reed Act, which provides for agricultural vocational education. It is not proposed by the Byrns amendment to reduce the expenses of Government one iota. It is not It is not intended to be. It is a direct economy at all. attack upon public education, that has been in evidence on this floor from time to time since 1860, and more frecational programs with the assurance of the Federal Government that the permanent appropriations could be depended upon. Some of our legislatures meet every two years; some every four years. Unless the State legislatures know that these appropriations are to be permanent, they can not set up a permanent program in the States. One million one hundred and seventy-eight thousand boys and girls are enrolled in these vocational establishments to-day.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. REED of New York. I can not yield. I only have five minutes.

In order to set up these programs they must know what they can depend upon for a period of years. What is it proposed to do in this bill unless my amendment is adopted? It is proposed that in 1934 the president of every land-grant college and all vocational workers and teachers will have to come to Congress on their knees and beg for appropriations to carry on public education. Up to 1934 our schools will continue to get the appropriation, but after that date they must come here and plead for funds.

In the meantime, without assurance that the appropriations are going to be made, communities are going to find their vocational educational programs demoralized, because the State legislatures will not know what Congress plans to do. The States can not plan their appropriations until it is known what the Federal Government intends to authorize. We owe very much to public education in this time of stress and strain. In the last 20 years 750,000 young men and women, many of them sons and daughters of working men, have gone through our colleges. Many of them have gone through our land-grant colleges. Millions and millions of girls and boys have had some smattering of economics in their vocational courses, and the reason that you are not having bloodshed and riots to-day in this great crisis is because you have millions of people who know something of economics, who have been educated up to the level where they are not going out with bludgeons and bombs to try to cure the depression. They have learned something about depressions and the cause of them. I tell you that the money heretofore appropriated for public education has been a wise investment. I resent this attempt at this time to demoralize this program, simply because there are a few who are opposed to public education.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I do not think there is any money spent by the Federal Government where greater practical benefits and results are obtained than the money authorized and spent under these acts, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. REED of New York. This is not economy in the bill. The amendment which I have offered does not increase the expenditure of the Government one cent. The Byrns amendment does not save one cent.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. REED of New York. I can not yield now.

I want the Members who believe in public education to support this amendment. I want you land-grant college people to realize that many colleges are now depending upon the $50,000 they get from the Federal Government to defray one-fifth of the operating expenses of some of the landgrant colleges.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] has expired.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Is there any language in this provision of any kind that gives the President of the United States the power to reduce the appropriation for vocational education?

Mr. BYRNS. No.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Reed], whose time has just expired, in my opinion, endeavored to convey the impression that there was such language in the bill. I was sure there was nothing of the kind in the bill, but I thought it best to have the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns], chairman of the committee, so inform the Members.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself two minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED], whom I respect very highly, has built up in his own mind quite an argument against this particular proposition, but I submit it is based entirely upon the wrong premise for the reason that this provision does not affect the appropriation.

How many Members in this House to-day know how much money we are appropriating for this purpose? Do you not think you are entitled to know? Do you not think, as representatives of the taxpayers, that you are entitled to know?

All this provision does is simply to say that if this money is being appropriated annually it shall be carried in the regular annual appropriation bill, not necessarily for the purpose of cutting it down but to give Congress and the country some idea as to what is being expended. I dare say not 3 per cent of the people of the United States outside of those directly involved have the least idea how much is being appropriated for this purpose.

This is all it means. It simply proposes the idea of giving Congress this knowledge from year to year and some chance to know how much is being expended and distributed by those to whom it is intrusted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. REED of New York) there were-ayes 77, noes 109.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

The TABER. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: On page 12, line 25, after the word "agency," insert "but no such transfer shall be made unless the President shall find it will result in a saving; "and on page 13, line 2, after the word "agency," insert "but no such consolidation shall be made unless the President shall find it will

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I have offered this amendment because I have seen in my own State so many consolidations where there was simply the imposition of an extra overhead, where there was no saving but an increase in expense. I have seen so many transfers of departments and so much changing around where there was no saving but simply an increase of expense.

I want to protect the next President of the United States from having, because of pressure, to put in that kind of consolidation and that kind of transfer.

I hope the House will adopt this amendment and make this provision for consolidations and transfers effective for savings.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the House to the fact that consolidation has two objects-one to effect savings and another to promote efficiency. amendment of the gentleman would prevent any consolidation, regardless of how much efficiency it might promote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. EATON].

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Earon of Colorado: On page 14, line 18, strike out the words "within 12 months."

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, this subsection (b) of section 405, which provides that no lawsuit shall be abated, also provides that the court, on motion or supplemental petition filed at any time within 12 months after a transfer takes effect, may continue a suit alive.

I think it is a mistake, both in the statute of June 30, 1932-Public, No. 212, of the Seventy-second Congress-and in this bill, to put any limitation at all upon the carrying on of any litigation in which the Government is a party.

These words "within 12 months" ought to come out. If it stays in, it makes an automatic statute of limitation on pending litigation which did not exist when the suit was commenced. I had hoped the chairman of the committee would say, "I consent that they come out"; but it seems he can not. However, a mere statement of the proposition ought to show the reason why the words "within 12 months" should come out. You should not interfere in pending litigation by changing the identity of the parties by statute to such an extent that you abate the suit because there may be no progress in 13 months; the parties as a matter of right should be permitted to come in at any time and advise the court that at a certain time the names of the parties were changed by this presidential order. At all times the principal party is the United States, no matter by what agency designated for the transaction of particular husiness

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. The only effect of the provision now carried in the bill is that they must come into court within the 12-months period. Once they are there they can continue the litigation indefinitely, whether it takes 1 year, 2 years, or 5 years.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. A reading of the section indicates it would automatically stop much litigation already commenced, because for sooth the litigation continued for 13 months without the required order being asked for.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Colorado.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Schafer].

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Schafer: Strike out all of title 5.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, the Democratic Party has had control of this House for two years. In sponsoring and voting for the delegation of power to the President, as embodied in title 4, beginning on page 11, the Democratic majority admits it has been unable to function during this 2-year period. The Democrats also admit that their majority of over 200 in the next Congress is unable properly to perform the legislative duties vested in Congress under the Constitution.

We owe some duty to the new Members of the incoming Congress. We should not shear them of their prerogatives. authority, and power vested in them under the Constitution.

I am opposed to this monstrosity sponsored by the Democratic majority. If it is written into the law of the land, the newspapers of the country in every town and hamlet can properly headline a special edition, "The people's representatives have abdicated! Congress is dead! Long live the king and the commander in chief of his patronage army, Mr. Farley!" [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, ever since this amendment was offered, I have been wondering what had become of the gentleman from Wisconsin. Now that we have heard from him, I ask for a vote. [Laughter.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, in scanning this amendment I do not find any title 5.

Mr. BYRNS. There is not any, but let us vote on the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Williamson].

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Williamson: Page 11, line 12, strike out all of lines 12 to 16, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "accordingly it is declared to be the purpose and policy of Congress," so that the amendment will read:

"DECLARATION OF STANDARD

"SEC. 401. The Congress hereby declares that a serious emergency exists by reason of the general economic depression; that it is imperative to reduce drastically governmental expenditures; and that such reduction may be accomplished in great measure by proceeding immediately under the provisions of this title.

"Accordingly it is declared to be the purpose and policy of

"(a) To reduce expenditures to the fullest extent consistent with the efficient operation of the Government; the efficient operation of the Government;

"(b) To increase the efficiency of the operations of the Government to the fullest extent practicable within the revenues;

"(c) To group, coordinate, and consolidate executive and administrative agencies of the Government, as nearly as may be,

according to major purposes;
"(d) To reduce the number of such agencies by consolidating those having similar functions under a single head and by abolish ing such agencies and/or such functions thereof as may not be necessary for the efficient conduct of the Government;

"(e) To eliminate overlapping and duplication of effort; and "(f) To segregate regulatory agencies and functions from those of an administrative and executive character."

Page 12, line 17, strike out all of line 17 and the letters "tion" and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 403. The President shall investigate the present organiza-tion of all executive and administrative agencies of the Govern-ment and shall determine what changes therein are necessary to accomplish the purpose and the policy of Congress as declared in section 401, and whenever after said investigation the President," so that the section will read:

" POWER OF THE PRESIDENT

"SEC. 403. The President shall investigate the present organization of all executive and administrative agencies of the Government and shall determine what changes therein are necessary to accomplish the purpose and policy of Congress as declared in section 401, and whenever after said investigation the President shall find and declare that any regrouping, consolidation, transfer, or abolition of any executive agency or agencies and/or the functions thereof is necessary to accomplish any of the purposes set forth in section 401 of this title, he may by Executive order—

"(a) Transfer the whole or any part of any executive agency and/or the functions thereof to the jurisdiction and control of other executive agency;

(b) Consolidate the functions vested in any executive agency;

"(c) Abolish the whole or any part of any executive agency and/or the functions thereof; and

"(d) Designate and fix the name and functions of any consolidated activity or executive agency, and the title, powers, and duties of its executive head; except that the President shall not have authority under this title to abolish or transfer an executive department and/or all the functions thereof."

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I invite the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. BYRNS] to this amendment. Evidently the intention of the draftsman of this title 4 was to declare a policy of Congress. As a matter of fact, that has not been done. The only purpose of this amendment is to definitely set up a policy of Congress as a guide to the President and then authorize him to do exactly what the bill now provides. I think you would greatly improve the chances of the bill being held constitutional if this amendment is adopted.

It seems to be generally conceded by Members upon the floor that title 4 of H. R. 13520, now incorporated in the proposed Byrns amendment is in effect a delegation of legislative authority to the President. On Saturday of last week I discussed the constitutionality of the provision and therefore shall not further discuss that feature here. Where a delegation of authority essentially legislative in character is sought to be conferred upon the Executive, the courts have held that the most that Congress can do is to set up what is sought to be brought about as a policy or a rule as a guide to the President and then authorize the President, upon the ascertainment of the facts and conditions specified to so declare, upon which the statute shall become operative.

It seems to me the amendment which I propose will clarify the purpose and intent of Congress so as to afford a more definite guide for the President in his efforts to reorganize the Government. If the language is so reconstructed and the authority to abolish Executive agencies and independent establishments were eliminated, I think title 4 would be constitutional, but I have very grave doubts as to its constitutionality in its present form, which would permit the President, if he should so elect, to abolish the marines, the Coast Guard, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Tariff Commission, or any other independent establishment. I do not anticipate the President would do anything of the sort but it is certainly within his power under the language now carried in title 4.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Williamson].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.
Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself two min-

Mr. Speaker, we are about to vote on this motion. As one of the conferees I know something of the difficulties involved in settling the differences between the House and the Senate.

This bill is the best average we have been able to secure, and I favor the motion, although a little while ago I voted for the amendment of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY], because I felt that Congress should retain a little more power touching its delegation of authority to the President to consolidate and curtail governmental activities. But this is not a surrender of power on the part of the Congress. It is the delegation of authority to perform a specific task, and Congress always has the potential power to set aside this authority given to the President. It has the right to enact any legislation dealing with the subject, and to withdraw that power at any time. We have seen the difficulty on the part of 435 Members of the House, and 96 Members of the Senate, in dealing with this question of consolidation and the elimination of unnecessary and overlapping governmental activities. This is not any particular indictment of the Congress, because naturally it is harder for a large number of individuals to function in regard to such consolidations and eliminations, which are executive in their character than it is for one man to deal with them. I fully agree with the suggestion that this proposed action is unusual, but, Mr. Speaker, the times and the needs are unusual. At the last session we clothed President Hoover with somewhat similar authority, but we required that his action should be subject to our approval or rejection. The result was that rejection of his endeavors followed, and the Congress offered nothing better. Therefore the Congress was and is at fault. It should have ratified the President's action; or else, put through an adequate plan of its own. Because of the fact that it has been so difficult for the Congress itself to bring about the wholesale consolidations and eliminations needed, there was delegated to President Hoover, last year, the indicated authority, and there is now under consideration the proposal to delegate to the President elect even greater power, to deal with these matters.

There is no abolition of congressional power thus involved. The Chief Executive simply becomes the agent of the Congress to perform for it a certain duty, a particular task. This it does because, being fully cognizant of the practical difficulties it involved, has reached the judgment and conclusion that one man-the Chief Executive officer of the Nation-with the aid of his administrative assistants, can do the job better than may 531 men and women of the two Houses of Congress. The responsibility will thus be with the President; and if his action is not overturned or rejected by the Congress as is permitted by the provisions in question, that action becomes, in effect, that of the Congress itself. By no statutory enactment could we divest ourselves of the basic constitutional powers which are ours; and these provisions do not have for their purpose or effect-as I view it-any actual surrender on our part of constitutional power. The people are demanding, as they have a right to demand, that there be a substantial reduction of governmental costs, and by the proposed action we are taking what we believe to be the most feasible and effective steps to reach the desired end. Under any ordinary circumstances I would not favor, as a matter of policy, this delegation of authority, but because of the grave situation presented, I believe that we are fully justified in conferring it.

So I, for one, am supporting this motion, and I trust that the action of the conferees will be sustained. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. McDuffie].

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for two minutes to call the attention of the committee and the House to section 14 of the proposed amendment, which is found on page 10.

During the last session, under the economy act, the rate of interest to be paid on judgments against the United States Government was changed from 6 per cent to 4 per cent.

I may be in error, and some gentlemen will correct me if I am, but according to the estimates this meant a saving to the Treasury of between four and a half and five million dollars.

Under the language carried in section 14, we repeal the economy act provision and make the repeal retroactive which means that we are handing back, if you please, from four and a half to five million dollars, which might be saved to the taxpayers were section 14 not carried in this bill. I think it should go out, and I therefore move that it be stricken from the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McDuffie: On page 10, beginning in line 7, strike out all of section 14 ending in line 12.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, gentlemen of the House know that when we go into conference with another body and it comes to agreeing with them, there may be some matters upon which they insist and upon which they have the right to be heard. However, regardless of that, we are now in the attitude of coming to an agreement upon this matter with the Senate, or at least I hope so.

The economy bill, to which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. McDuffie] refers, did undertake to reduce the rate of interest to 4 per cent upon the matter of tax refunds, but the economy bill made one big mistake. It went back prior to July 1, 1932, and this caused endless confusion. The courts insisted they had the right to render, and did render, judgments for 6 per cent. The Comptroller General was in a state of uncertainty and proposed amendments which restored the 6 per cent prior to July 1, on the theory that the economy bill itself was violative of the Constitution in undertaking to affect judgments rendered prior to that time.

Mr. BEEDY. Will the gentleman yield for a brief ques-

Mr. BYRNS. I have just a minute left. Here is the situation: When you owe the Government money—and I am saying this from the viewpoint of the other body—the Government charges you 6 per cent and collects 6 per cent.

Mr. McDUFFIE. You ought not to owe it.

Mr. BYRNS. The Government ought not to overassess and owe its taxpayers. It is as broad as it is long.

When you owe the Government money you have to pay 6 per cent, but when the Government turns around and pays you money that is due you, which, perhaps, it has held for several years, it only pays you 4 per cent. I say this is not fair, and the Government does not want to be in the position of being unfair to any single taxpayer within the broad confines of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken; and there were on a division (demanded by Mr. McDuffie and Mr. Stafford)—ayes 106,

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I demand tellers.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused. Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. McDuffie and Mr. Byrns.

The House again divided; and there were-ayes 126, noes 100

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that is not in order, because the House has already refused the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is always in order to ask for the yeas and navs.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were-yeas 234, nays 134, not voting 58, as follows:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA KIDNAPING BILL

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on the bill, S. 4694, and to include therewith extracts from the committee reports on the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, on the 3d day of March, 1932, I introduced in the House H. R. 10089, a measure entitled "A bill to amend section 812 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia." The object involved was the enactment of adequate kidnaping legislation for the District of Columbia. On the 9th day of May, 1932, at my request the duplicate bill, S. 4694, was introduced in the Senate by Senator Patterson, of Missouri. A hearing on the measure was had before the Senate committee on June 17, 1932, and it was thereupon favorably reported by that committee. The bill passed the Senate on July 11, 1932.

As introduced in the House and Senate, and as reported by the Senate committee, the bill permitted the jury to affix the death penalty in extreme cases. In the Senate the death penalty was omitted, but for the offense of kidnaping, abducting, and so forth, and the holding for ransom or reward of any person of whatsoever age there was retained the penalty of imprisonment for life, or for such term as the court, in its discretion, may determine.

On January 25, 1933, I was able to secure at the hands of the House Committee on the District of Columbia a hearing on the bill, and as a result the bill in the form it passed the Senate, S. 4694, was approved by the committee and favorably reported. Thereupon the measure was called up in the House on District of Columbia day by our esteemed colleague, the able chairman of the committee, Mrs. MARY T. Norton, Representative from New Jersey, and was passed by the unanimous vote of the House. On the 18th day of February, 1933, the measure was signed by President Hoover and became a law.

Until this bill was enacted there was no law on the subject of kidnaping and holding within the District of Columbia, for ransom or reward, any person over 16 years of age. Only in a case when a person over 16 years of age was kidnaped in the District and carried out of it was an offense declared. There was provided in the old law fairly-though not fully-adequate penalties for kidnaping within the District of Columbia of any child under 16.

The old law (sec. 812) of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia reads thus:

Whoever unlawfully and forcibly or fraudulently carries off or decoys out of the District any person, or arrests or imprisons any person with the intention of having such person carried out of the District, shall be imprisoned for not less than one nor more than seven years or fined not exceeding $1,000, or both: Provided, That whoever leads, carries, or entices away a child under the age of 16 years, with the intent unlawfully to detain or conceal such child so led, taken, or enticed away, shall be imprisoned for not more than 20 years or fined not exceeding $1,000, or both.

The new law, embodied in House bill 10089 and Senate bill 4694, as it passed the Senate and House and as approved by the President, is as follows:

An act to amend section 812 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia

Be it enacted, etc., That section 812 of the act entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1901, as amended (D. C. Code, title 6, sec. 36), is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 812. Whosever shall be guilty of or of adding or shatting in Sec. 812. Whoever shall be guilty of, or of aiding or abetting in, selzing, confining, inveigling, enticing, decoying, kidnaping, abducting, concealing, or carrying away any individual, by any means whatsoever, and holding or detaining, or with the intent to hold or detain, such individual for ransom or reward, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by imprisonment for life or for such term as the court in its discretion may determine. This section shall be held to have been violated if either the seizing. section shall be held to have been violated it either the seizing, confining, inveigling, enticing, decoying, kidnaping, abducting, concealing, carrying away, holding, or detaining occurs in the District of Columbia. If two or more individuals enter into any agreement or conspiracy to do any act or acts which would constitute a violation of the provisions of this section, and one or more of such individuals do any act to effect the object of such agreement or conspirate acts and the holding and the decorated to be a section of the provisions of this section. ment or conspiracy, each such individual shall be deemed to have violated the provisions of this section."

Approved, February 18, 1933.

There is no more heinous crime than that of kidnaping, and it is frightfully prevalent in our country to-day. The laxity of law enforcement, of every character, in the Nation presents a peril of the first magnitude. I am one of those who believe that, however grave our economic problems may be, that which is presented by the wholesale and flagrant commission of crime throughout the length and breadth of the land is even greater. In fact, crime constitutes a very important cause of economic stress, and the cancerous growth of crime upon the social body is malignant in any case, and will prove deadly to our liberties if not checked. Under our high-powered civilization it is now easier to commit crime than ever before, and more easy for criminals in one or another way to escape punishment.

Kidnaping of men, women, and children by gangsters for ransom, for reward, as well as for other unlawful purposes is shockingly prevalent. The kidnaping of the Lindbergh baby was one of the most horrible crimes ever committed in the world's history, and the fact that its perpetrators have been able thus far to baffle all efforts to find them adds to that horror. Crimes of this character constitute a challenge to our civilization. The gangster and the racketeer must be destroyed or they will destroy not only our society but our civilization as well.

During this, the seventy-second, the Congress enacted a law dealing with the subject of kidnaping persons for ransom or reward, and the carrying of them across the line of any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia. See Senate bill 1525, which was approved and became a law on June 22, 1932. It provides as follows:

[Public, No. 189, 72d Cong.] (S. 1525)

An act forbidding the transportation of any person in interstate or foreign commerce, kidnaped, or otherwise unlawfully detained, and making such act a felony

Be it enacted, etc., That whoever shall knowingly transport or cause to be transported, or aid or abet in transporting, in interstate or foreign commerce, any person who shall have been unlawfully seized, confined, inveigled, decoyed, kidnaped, abducted, or carried away by any means whatsoever and held for ransom or reward shall, upon conviction, be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary for such torms. reward shall, upon conviction, be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary for such term of years as the court, in its discretion, shall determine: Provided, That the term "interstate or foreign commerce" shall include transportation from one State, Territory, or the District of Columbia to another State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or to a foreign country; or from a foreign country to any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia: Provided further, That if two or more persons enter into an agreement, confederation, or conspiracy to violate the provisions of the foregoing act and do any overt act toward carrying out such unlawful agreement, confederation, or conspiracy such person or persons shall be punished in like manner as hereinbefore provided by this act.

Approved, June 22, 1932.

The passage of this interstate bill and of this District of Columbia measure protect the kidnaping situation in the States, Territories, and the District of Columbia so far as the Federal law-enacting obligation may be concerned; but a law is only a blue print, and it is of no value unless enforced. Congress has thus performed its duty in the premises, and many States have enacted antikidnaping laws, with heavy penalties provided. A number of them-including my own, Kentucky-provide the death penalty as a maximum punishment. I believe that if there is any crime in the calendar which merits the forfeit of life on the part of the offender, it is that of kidnaping, especially so where women and children are the victims. Now let the courts, the juries, the officials, and the citizens of the Nation perform their duty. Let them perform their duty fully and fearlessly, not only with reference to crimes of the indicated character but as well as regards all other forms of crime. The value of adequate law observance and law enforcement is beyond all estimation, and without these our country can not long Under leave granted me, I now include the substantial portion of the House committee's report on this District of Columbia kidnaping bill. It will be noted that the House adopted the report of the Senate committee.

WASHINGTON, June 10, 1932.

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,

Hon. Arthur Capper,

Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Sir: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to submit the following on Senate bill 4694, Seventy-second Congress, first session, entitled "A bill to amend section 812 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia," which you referred to them for report as to the merits of the bill and the propriety of its passage. of its passage.

The object of this bill is to amend section 312 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia by increasing the penalty for kidnaping or otherwise unlawful detention of individuals. Any prosecutions under the present provisions of section 312 of the code, or as said section is proposed to be amended by this bill, would be instituted by the United States attorney for the District of Columbia. The commissioners, therefore, submitted the bill to Mr. Leo A. Rover, the United States attorney for the District of Columbia, who advises them as follows:

"Please be advised that I am in favor of the general provisions of these bills. The bills in question care for a defect which undoubtedly exists under the present wording of the law and make it an offense to unlawfully hold or detain for ranson, reward, or other unlawful purpose, in the District of Columbia, regardless of the age of the person so held.

"I am also in favor of the provisions of the bills whereby a fine might not be imposed as a punishment. I feel that the public might not be imposed as a punishment. I feel that the public more than ever realizes the heinousness of this offense and only the most severe punishments will act as a deterrent."

The commissioners concur in the opinion of the United States attorney that the legislation is advisable, and they recommend favorable action on the bill.

Very truly yours,

L. H. REICHELDERFER, President Board of Commissioners.

Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator Capper: At its last regular meeting the Federation of Citizens' Associations adopted a report of its committee on law and legislation regarding kidnaping penalties (S. 4694), copy of which is inclosed. Very truly yours,

H. C. PHILLIPS, Corresponding Secretary.

"Your committee on law and legislation has had before it resolution of the Stanton Park Citizens' Association (R. 1033, L. and L. No. 39), indorsing H. R. 10089, to amend section 812 of the Code of Laws of the District.

"This measure was introduced in the House of Representatives by Congressman Thatcher, of Kentucky. A similar measure was introduced in the United States Senate (S. 4694) by Senator Parterson, of Missouri. Both bills were referred to the Committees TERSON, of Missourl. Both bills were referred to the Committees on the District of Columbia of the respective Houses.

"The proposal changes the present law respecting the crime of kidnaping by making the penalties therefor more severe. The present law, section 812 of the code, provides that any person who carries off, etc., 'out of the District of Columbia,' any person, whereas the proposed amendment penalizes any person who seizes, confines, kidnaps, etc., 'with the intent to hold or detain such person for ransom or reward or for any other unlawful purpose.' The penalties enumerated in the present law are imprisonment of from one to seven years or a fine of not exceeding $1,000, or both, and for kidnaping a child under 16 years of age the penalty is imprisonment for not more than 20 years or a fine of $1,000, or both."

"The penalties provided in the proposed amendment are imprisonment for life, or for such term as the court may in its discretion determine, but there is also added a provision that the jury may add to their verdict the words "with the death penalty."' The language here proposed to be used is identical with the language of the present law pertaining to punishment for the crime of rape, for which crime the code authorizes a similar optional verdict by the jury.

"Your committee recommends an amendment to the present proposal inserting as an optional penalty to be imposed by the court a fine of not to exceed $5,000, or both the fine and imprisonment. This, it is believed, would give a wider discretion to the court in imposing sentence in cases where the so-called kidthe court in imposing sentence in cases where the so-called kid-naping or abduction was committed by the natural father or mother of a child, whose parents are divorced or are engaged in marital contentions or difficulties.

"With this amendment your committee recommends that the

"With this amendment your proposed bill be enacted into law.
"Thomas E. Lodge, Chairman."

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA FEDERATION OF WOMEN'S CLUBS, Washington, D. C., April 28, 1932.

Chairman Senate Committee on the District of Columbia.

DEAR SENATOR: The District of Columbia Federation of Women's Clubs advocates that legislation be enacted which will strengthen the Code of Law for the District of Columbia relating to kidnaping and indorses this principle of H. R. 10089, introduced by Mr. Thatcher, and S. 4694, introduced by Senator Patterson.

Yours respectfully,

EDITH L. PHELPS, Chairman of Legislation. (Mrs. Horace J. Phelps.)

STANTON PARK CITIZENS' ASSOCIATION,
Washington, D. C., March 16, 1932.
CHAIRMAN OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA COMMITTEE,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C. Dear Sir: The Stanton Park Citizens' Association, at its regular meeting on Monday, March 14, 1932, unanimously indorsed the bill to amend section 812 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, in regard to kidnaping, etc.

Very truly yours,

Mrs. L. H. Brown, Secretary,

THE APPROPRIATION BILLS

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to emphasize what I said earlier in the day, that there has not been a sufficient paring of the appropriations in the bills that have been reported and passed in this House and that are now pending in the Senate or in conference. Up to the present moment the only bill that has been adopted is the Interior Department appropriation bill, and the only saving in that bill is $200,000 below the Budget estimates. In the War Department appropriation bill we added $9,000,000 in the National Guard item alone above the Budget estimates, and the total in that bill will exceed the Budget estimate, and so it is with the other appropriation bills, and with the naval appropriation bill about to be considered. I call the attention of the House to the fact that the economies that have been attempted to be effected by the Committee on Appropriations will in no wise get within $50,000,000 below the Budget estimates. Then how is the Budget going to be balanced except by added taxation?

The Speaker of the House listened very attentively yesterday to one message from the President of the United States, and everyone must agree that every proposal which the President set forth in his message of yesterday should be adopted, and adopted at the earliest possible moment. The President emphasized the need of balancing the Budget. The Budget can not be balanced by the action of the Committee on Appropriations in bringing in bills which will not result in any curtailment of expenditures beyond $50,000,000 below the Budget estimates. The amendment delegating to the incoming President the power to consolidate activities will not save more than a few million dollars. And yet the Government will have a deficit for this fiscal year of approximately $2,000,000,000. The Government can not go on interminably issuing its notes of indebtedness to cover this growing deficit. Nor if industrial recovery is to be had, can the already overburdened taxpayer carry any much greater loads. The crying need of the hour is cutting governmental expenses to the bone, but I regret to find an utter want of accomplishment toward that end. Representative government has failed to meet the test because of abject surrender to selfish cabals. I wish I could see some relief from these staggering appropriations, but there is little in the appropriation bills passed by this House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, it is a little late for the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Stafford] to speak of not cutting down appropriations.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Oh, he was only pinch-hitting.

Mr. BLANTON. He was pinch-hitting with no one on any of the bases, and after his side is retired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am on the home plate.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the other day I watched when the Barbour amendments adding millions were being passed, and if I remember correctly my friend from Wisconsin voted for them, did he not?

Mr. STAFFORD. He did not.

Mr. BLANTON. How many did the gentleman refuse to vote for?

Mr. STAFFORD. And the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Collins] will verify that I voted against all of them. [Applause and laughter and cries of "Hold that line."]

Mr. BLANTON. The Speaker is not going to take that out of my time. I want to say to my friend from New York [Mr. Snell] that I thought he was a better minority leader than to permit one of his sheep to get away from home, because every other Republican bellwether here followed the gentleman from New York in supporting those Barbour amendments, and if he let the gentleman from Wisconsin get off the Republican reservation and not follow him, he ought to take steps to whip him back into party line.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, I have never been on the reservation.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, there is no better Republican leader in this House just now than Bert Snell.

Mr. SNELL. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. And I want him to get his Republican steering committee to take hold of the gentleman from Wisconsin and bring him back into the Republican fold.

Mr. STAFFORD. But there are only 10 days left.

Mr. BLANTON. Because when the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], with his Republican followers, supports the Barbour amendments it means Republican extravagance, and the gentleman from Wisconsin ought to go down the line for every piece of Republican spending that is offered on this floor, for then he would be in strict party regularity.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

STATE, JUSTICE, COMMERCE, AND LABOR DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL, FISCAL YEAR 1934

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 14363) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed the following conferees: Mr. Oliver of Alabama, Mr. Griffin, Mr. Cannon, Mr. Blanton, Mr. Shreve, and Mr. Tinkham.

CONGRESSIONAL DIRECTORY, SEVENTY-THIRD CONGRESS

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Concurrent Resolution 50, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 50

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That an edition of the Congressional Directory for the first session of the Seventy-third Congress be compiled, prepared, indexed, and published under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, as provided for in section 73 of the printing act approved January 12, 1895.

The resolution was agreed to.

MANUAL FOR THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, SEVENTY-THIRD CONGRESS

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 367, which I send to the desk and ask to have read. The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 367

Resolved, That the Rules and Manual of the House of Representatives for the Seventy-third Congress be printed as a House document, and that 2,500 additional copies shall be printed and bound for the use of the House of Representatives, of which 700 copies shall be bound in leather with thumb index and delivered to the Parliamentarian of the House for distribution to officers and Members of Congress.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand it, it is proposed to print the new Manual immediately now at the close of this Congress?

Mr. STEVENSON. It will be printed as soon as it can be prepared by the Parliamentarian.

Mr. SNELL. If you should change the rules of the new Congress, of what value will it be?

Mr. STEVENSON. This is what has always been done. I take it it will be deferred until the rules are adopted.

Mr. BLANTON. That will give about one copy to each new Democratic Member.

The SPEAKER. Permit the Chair to make a statement. The Parliamentarian advises the Chair that this is the usual resolution and must be passed at this time in order that he may prepare the document so that it will be ready when the next Congress meets.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand, it intends to have the rules included as the new Congress shall adopt them?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. SNELL. Oh, that is a different thing.

Mr. STEVENSON. The only variation from the usual rule is that only 700 are to be bound in leather. The others are to be bound in buckram, and it saves the sum of $1,500.

The resolution was agreed to.

NAVY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL-FISCAL YEAR 1934

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14724) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes.

Pending that, owing to the lateness of the hour, I suggest that we not fix any particular time for general debate for the balance of this afternoon, and I ask unanimous consent that we proceed without fixing a time, the time for general debate to be divided equally between the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. French] and myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Ayres]?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14724), the Navy Department appropriation bill, with Mr. Doxey in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may desire to finish my statement.

Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, before proceeding with an explanation of the principal features of the bill we are presenting for your consideration, perhaps I should briefly touch upon the state of the Navy as regards matériel and personnel.

We will have during the succeeding fiscal year a bigger and a better Navy from the standpoint of ships than during the present fiscal year. That will be welcome news to you I am sure. There will be added to the fleet on varying dates during the next fiscal year 5 new 8-inch gun cruisers, 1 new aircraft carrier, 2 new fleet submarines, and 2 new destroyers. In addition two battleships will have undergone complete modernization and our air forces will have been expanded by the new rigid airship, the Macon, named after the home city of the distinguished chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee. Of course, it is true that as to the ships we have now, another year added to their age will have depreciated their effectiveness in an indeterminate degree, but I was not unmindful of that fact in making the assertion that our forces afloat will be stronger next year. The new units far outweigh the age factor as to the older units.

As to the older units, we have been providing annually sums adequate to keep them in a proper state of repair. It is true funds have not been sufficient to effect many desirable alterations in the interest of military efficiency, but I dare say ship for ship and age for age our older vessels are as good as any fighting craft in the world to-day.

In addition to the 10 new vessels which will be commissioned during the ensuing fiscal year, there will be under construction two 8-inch gun cruisers and 6 destroyers. The 6 destroyers will be completed during the fiscal year 1935, so that after June 30, 1935, there will be no vessels building save 1 cruiser, scheduled to be completed in January, 1936; 1 cruiser, which is to be commenced with money carried in this bill after next December 31; and 1 cruiser, which may not be commenced under the terms of the London treaty prior to January, 1935.

Under this bill there will be available next year for newship construction a total of $53,410,785. There will need to be appropriated approximately $78,700,000 after the next fiscal year to complete all vessels now building or authorized, omitting a transport and a Neff type of submarine, which there is no intention at this time to build. I bring these ship-construction matters to your attention because I think you should know that unless there be additional authorization we may look to new construction work's tapering off practically to nothing after the fiscal year 1935. That, of course, would be an unfortunate situation because it has been our aim to maintain an approximately even flow of new ship-construction work. To do otherwise would occasion the breaking up and dispersion of men skilled in such work that might be serious in time of emergency and costly from the standpoint of employing and training large numbers of new hands.

Turning to the personnel, the bill makes provision for 79,700 enlisted men. This number has not been changed since the fiscal year 1931. New vessels are being manned by reducing the complements of older vessels and by placing ships in rotating reserve. These are economy expedients. There is a limit, however, beyond which we may not go. The complement of a ship is its man-power requirements with all stations manned. Obviously reducing complements upon these highly technical floating mechanisms is not good preparedness policy and the need for most rigid economy is the only excuse for such a course. I think "excuse" is the proper word to use.

As to officers, I should say we are over supplied, particularly with line officers. Last year we passed a law authorizing the commissioning of the entire number of graduates from the Naval Academy in 1932, and the commissioning of at least 50 per cent of all graduates in subsequent years. The immediate effect was to increase the authorized number of 5,499 line officers to 5,933. Attrition will bring this number down somewhat before the coming June graduating class, of which it is estimated 217 will be commissioned in the line, 12 in the supply corps, and 30 in the Marine Corps. The latest estimate is that there will be 435 graduates. With the new admissions into the line, it is estimated that there will be an average of 5,871 line officers during the fiscal year 1934, or 372 in excess of the authorized number.

The Budget estimates for the Navy Department and the naval service call for a total of direct appropriations of $308,669,562, to be augmented by the diversion of funds from certain stores accounts to the extent of $6,750,000, making the total proposed for availability $315,419,562.

The current naval appropriation act carried:

Direct appropriations totaling $317, 583, 591
Authorization to divert naval funds to the extent of 9, 750, 000
And reappropriations in definite amounts totaling 379, 101

Or a total of______ 327, 712, 692

This would indicate a lesser amount estimated for 1934 by $12.293.130.

However, economy act savings this year are estimated at around $10,900,000 and then there will be a saving of $1,237,-820 resulting from reduced rental and subsistence allowances put into effect after the current naval appropriation act has passed the Congress, so that, taking these factors into account, we find the amount available for the two years practically in agreement.

But when we analyze the estimates we find that while no more will be available there will be added expenses on account of new vessels's being commissioned, which will run maintenance charges up a million dollars or so, and a net increase on account of modernization of capital ships and new ship construction of $10,812,000.

Now, if it were possible to absorb that additional expense within a total comparable to the total of the 1933 appropriations, manifestly we were grossly extravagant last year. It simply is not possible, without doing violence to the Navy as a whole.

The Budget recognized this and now I shall relate how the Budget has proposed to finance these added demands.

Firstly, upon the assumption that Congress would enact legislation that would permit of the wages of unclassified employees in the navy yards being adjusted to conform with wages paid by private employers for comparable lines of work. This proposition contemplated an average cut in the wages or earnings of such employees of 30 per cent, in addition to the reduction occasioned by the furlough provision of the economy act, and, in anticipation of Congress's acceding to the plan, the naval estimates were reduced by the Budget a total of $13.514.872.

Secondly, to reduce the enlisted strength of the Marine Corps from 15,343 to 13,600, saving $1,359,639 thereby.

There are other reductions and increases owing to personnel changes and the proposal to restore active training for members of the Naval Reserve and reduce the number of drills from 48 to 24.

Now, as to the first proposition, I invite your attention to what we say in the report, commencing on page 2.

Speaking for myself, I am unalterably opposed to reducing at this time the pay of one class of employees more than another class, and I am not in favor of resorting to such a discriminatory course in order to find moneys needed to support the Navy.

Moreover, in view of the unusual employment situation now prevailing, which has forced industry, as we all well know, to disregard usual considerations in fixing wages, I do not see how a fair and equitable comparable adjustment may now be made.

On September 30, 1932, we had a total of 46,130 employees in the Navy Department and the naval service. Of this number 36,412 would be affected by wage-board action. To this number the Budget proposes the application of an average wage reduction of 39 per cent. Upon the remaining 9,718, or 21 per cent plus of the total, the reduction proposed is the equivalent of about 9 per cent.

There is another angle to this proposition. We have industrial and nonindustrial plants in the Navy. There are unclassified employees at both. If wage boards were permitted to function and found no reduction possible, or say a reduction of not more than 10 or 15 per cent on an average, in which would be the 9 per cent now taken off, the industrial plant, not having the money to pay present or approximately present wages, could and would curtail operations. The nonindustrial plant, as for example the Naval Academy, would not be able to function at all, unless it be that we have been allowing them one-third more people than they need to run the institution.

The question vexed the committee a great deal.

The House and Senate already have refused on the Treasury and Post Office Departments bill to impose a greater reduction upon the pay or earnings of employees whose wages normally are founded upon wages paid by private employers than upon other classes of employees. Adherence to that policy meant one of two things: Either to put several millions of dollars into the bill without a Budget estimate, or to require the Navy, within the reduced Budget, to pay existing wages, which would not be possible without doing incalculable harm.

In conformity, therefore, with the policy already enunciated by the House, we have endeavored to meet the problem as far as we could without exceeding the Budget by finding moneys within the estimates for objects not of an essential character or that were not justifiable, and by dipping into certain naval stores accounts and funds where the surplus appeared to be more than adequate for current needs.

By resort to this course we were able to effect a net reduction of $7,012,515, of which $3,712,515 represents actual reductions in the Budget estimates and $3,300,000 represents the substitution of drafts upon naval stores accounts and funds in lieu of direct appropriations.

Then, in addition to this amount of $7,012,515, we found that certain public works projects had not been undertaken out of the $10,000,000 provided in emergency relief and construction act. For such projects $2,498,000 had been set aside. We concluded to reappropriate that money for new ship construction, thus releasing a like amount of the direct appropriation included in the Budget for new ship construction.

By these two processes we got a total of $9,510,515, and that sum of money we have added to the appropriations reduced by the Budget in anticipation of a 30 per cent wage cut in exactly the same amounts by which such appropriations were reduced by the Budget, which takes care of all of the Budget cuts on account of the wage matter except the following:

Contingent, yards and docks Public works, yards and docks	$20, 142 50, 000
	3, 374, 215
(65,785 has been restored under this head.) Armament, armament and ammunition	560,000
motel.	4 004 957

With these exceptions the wage matter is completely taken care of and the bill we present is exactly in agreement with the Budget total of $308,669,562.

As to the exceptions, the first two items are of no consequence. The amounts under "Increase of the Navy" will mean that the work will not progress as rapidly as it would otherwise. However, I wish to emphasize that the amount that will be available for "Increase of the Navy" under this bill as presented, without the restoration of these amounts, will be greater than has been expended under that head during any of the past 10 years.

Now I wish to stress this fact also: That while the bill provides appropriations corresponding in total exactly with the Budget, there will be available for expenditure a larger amount than contemplated by the Budget, because of the proposal to use a larger amount by the $3,300,000 of naval stores accounts and funds, which I have previously mentioned, and by our proposal to continue the Marine Corps at its present authorized strength, to meet practically all of the added expense of so doing we are proposing to make available to the Marine Corps $1,291,389 of moneys to the credit of the clothing and small-stores fund. In other words, the total available for expenditure will exceed the Budget recommendations by $4,591,389.

If you will turn to page 4 of the report you will find an itemization of all additions we have made to the bill on account of the wage question, and commencing on page 6 of the report you will find an enumeration of the other money changes effected by the committee, except as to the Marine Corps, which I shall refer to later.

The second itemization speaks for itself. I shall refer to just a few of the items therein.

About the middle of page 6 you will see an item, "Welfare and recreation, to be paid out of the naval hospital fund, $300.000."

The subappropriation, "Welfare and recreation," practically all, directly or indirectly, is expended for providing moving-picture entertainment aboard ship. The amount of the appropriation is augmented by a portion of the profits on sales from ships' stores and ships' service stores. For the ensuing fiscal year, owing to the healthy condition of the naval hospital fund, the committee is recommending that the amount of this subappropriation be paid from such fund, which is estimated to show a larger balance at the end of the fiscal year 1934 than at the end of the present fiscal year-$1,702,742-even though in both fiscal years the fund will be charged with a total of $1,199,129 on account of hospital construction. This fund is made up very largely by monthly deductions from the pay of all officers and men. The committee's proposal gives a portion back in the way of providing recreation.

Farther down on the same page (5) you will seen an increase, on account of drills for the Naval Reserve, of $300,000. For the current fiscal year, at the instance of the department, no appropriation was provided for active-duty training for members of the seagoing branch of the Naval Reserve. The estimates for the present fiscal year were reduced by $682,812 by reason thereof.

The 1934 Budget proposes to restore active-duty training and includes $518,654 on that account, and partly to offset such expense $405,032 has been omitted on account of drills, the effect of which, the committee is advised, would be to reduce the number of drills from 48 to 24. This is in line with the Budget policy with respect to the National Guard. The House has indicated unmistakably its opposition to reducing below 48 the number of drills for the latter organization. There is no sound reason, so far as the committee is aware, for treating the two organizations differently. The committee has endeavored to meet the matter in this way:

The estimates include $37,156 for active-duty training for members of the Volunteer Reserve, seagoing branch, also $15,000 for defraying subsistence costs in connection with week-end cruises, which are in addition to the regular training cruises and are not obligatory. These are not essential expenses. The committee is not in sympathy, particularly when money is scarce, with expending funds on other than members of the Fleet Reserve class of the seagoing branch of the reserve. Therefore, from the additional amount needed ($405,032) to provide 48 drills, such proposed expenditures have been deducted and a further sum of $52,876 in addition, which it is believed can be saved in other directions out of contemplated expenditures on the seagoing branch through the practice or greater practice of rigid economy, the net result being that the appropriation proposed exceeds the Budget recommendation by $300,000, exclusive of $14,453 restored on account of wage reductions proposed by the Budget.

I might say that a number of the reductions we have made have the approval of the department. We called attention during the course of the hearings to certain subsistence items that seemed large, and the department's representatives agreed that they should be reduced. Likewise the amount for steaming has been reduced by $410,000 with the approval of the Chief of Naval Operations, who agreed to modify his operating force plan at the instance of the committee as a measure of economy.

You will find on page 7 of the report where we have added $39,669 to the estimates for the Naval Academy.

Following the increase in 1929 of the number of appointments to the Naval Academy from 3 to 4, 15 additional civilian instructors were provided for and employed. The Congress provided for return to the 3-appointment basis in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1932, the first effects of which were felt in the class entering last June. In the bill of a year ago the committee proposed to drop 7 of these 15 additional instructors with the idea that the remaining 8 would be detached at the end of the present fiscal year. It was later decided not to require any separations, because it was too late for the instructors who were to be let out to engage with other educational institutions. As it became law the current appropriation act provided for their retention.

Since the beginning of the present fiscal year two civilian instructors have resigned and one will be retired on June 30, next. There will be 12 remaining of the 15 added, and none of these has been able to find other employment.

Rather than require their separation in such circumstances, the committee has made provision in the bill for their retention and has provided that no vacancies shall be filled until the number of instructors shall have been reduced below 49. There are 61 civilian instructors at the academy now. The 12 involved are listed on page 224 of the hearings.

Now as to the Marine Corps:

The estimates for the Marine Corps call for a total of $20,106,145 contrasted with a direct appropriation of $21,-914,839 and a reappropriation of $229,101 for the current fiscal year, or a difference in available funds, actual and proposed, of $2,037,795.

Of this difference $1,359,639 is entirely because of the Budget proposal to reduce the enlisted strength of the Marine Corps from the present-year number of 15,343 to 13,600. The remainder generally may be charged to estimated savings under the economy act and the proposal to reduce wages of unclassified employees by an average of 30 per cent.

The officer personnel upon which the estimates are based is listed on page 520 of the hearings. The distribution of the enlisted force as of December 15, 1932, and as proposed upon the basis of 13,600 men is shown in the tables on pages 509-511 of the hearings.

The primary mission of the Marine Corps is to provide forces to assist the fleet in the seizure and initial defense of advanced bases. By referring to the subdivision of the table on page 510 of the hearings captioned "Marine Corps activities in the United States," under the Budget proposal it will be seen that there would be left at the east and west coast bases 575 and 336 men, respectively, in which numbers, of course, is the permanent station maintenance force. Within these numbers the Navy would need to find trained bodies of men for advanced based activities. The numbers speak for themselves.

The attention of the House is invited to the hearings touching this proposal (pp. 502-519); also, to the printed hearings (No. 787) conducted upon the matter by the House Committee on Naval Affairs.

The committee is not willing to recommend at this time that the Marine Corps be reduced below its present appropriated-for enlisted strength of 15,343, and it has added to the bill, by way of a draft upon the clothing and small-stores fund, the amount necessary to avoid any reduction. [Applause.]

It has made a number of minor changes in the estimates in other respects, resulting in a net reduction of $68,248, discounting the additions made, totaling $243,106, because of refusal to concur in the proposition to reduce wages an average of 30 per cent. These reductions have been applied towards the increases necessary in other directions to provide for the maintenance of the present enlisted strength, so that the net amount drafted of the clothing and small-stores fund is $1,291,389, instead of $1,359,639, which is the entire cost of the restoration.

An itemization of the money changes resulting in the net reduction of $68,248 appears on page 19 of the report.

To provide the additional amount necessary to maintain the enlisted strength of the corps at its present figure the committee had two courses open to it without adding to the total of the bill: (1) To reappropriate unobligated prior-year balances, and (2) to draft cash to the credit of naval stores accounts. The former would have unquestionably added to Treasury withdrawals; the latter takes money from a revolving fund which otherwise could be expended in the production or purchase of stores without action by Congress.

After all, we are more interested in the end rather than in the mechanics of bringing it about.

Now, I shall turn to the several limitations we have included in the bill, which are set out on pages 23 and 24 of the report.

The first proposition is intended to prevent the Bureau of Navigation from withdrawing funds provided for aviation reserve activities to help out in finding additional moneys for drilling reservists of the seagoing branch.

The next is self-explanatory. It makes the same provisions carried in the War Department bill as to National Guard men and members of the Organized Reserves applicable to members of the Naval and Marine Corps Reserve forces.

The fourth proposition I call to your particular attention. There we are proposing to make the maximum extra amount that an officer might receive as flying pay $1,420. As drawn, this provision is intended to include all flying personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard.

By consulting the tables on pages 9 and 10 of the report you will see the rates now being paid.

One thousand four hundred and twenty dollars is the average rate now paid to officers in the grade of lieutenant in the Navy, a grade comparable to that of captain in the Army and Marine Corps. This proposal is not made primarily in the interest of economy. It is proposed because, in the judgment of the committee, there are no tenable grounds for paying flying pay to officers in the higher grades at rates in excess of those paid to the junior officers, among whom very largely are those who daily are assuming all the risks attendant upon practice in drilling and training in the art of war-time maneuvers and tactics. It is among such junior officers—quoting from the committee's report of a year ago—that the principal hazards lie, and not in the group which does straightaway flying, or, as to another group—to use the language of the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation in the hearings of a year ago—who draw flying pay for "being carried around in a plane under ideal conditions, with selected pllots, selected weather, and selected planes."

The committee has yet to hear a plausible argument for paying extra pay for flying, up to as high as $4,000 per annum, to a rear admiral or major general when our real pilots, particularly in the Navy, are getting $1,420 per annum and less.

The action proposed permits of a reduction of $168,760 in the Navy estimates and $13,239 in the Marine Corps estimates. It should permit of a saving to the Army appropriation of approximately $205,000.

Turning to the next provision, which relates to retired officers, the current appropriation act provides for activeduty pay and allowances for not more than four officers on the retired list. These four are the last four named in the matter at the top of page 114 of the hearings. The effect of the provision has made necessary the employment on occasion of active officers for retirement-board duty and for staff selection-board duty, in the former case at extra cost on account of transportation, and in the latter case necessitating in one instance the appointment of a board composed exclusively of line officers.

The provision is designed to correct that situation, and in addition provides the means for tendering to Admiral Pratt an opportunity to continue on active duty in his permanent grade of rear admiral. I think I may say that this officer has saved the country millions of dollars since he has been in his present office of Chief of Naval Operations by initiating and resorting to measures, solely for economical reasons, that would enable the Navy to function with a reasonable degree of efficiency at the lowest possible cost.

He has shown an unusual regard for the Public Treasury. The committee would like to see him retained in some position of administrative responsibility. By reason of having knowledge of naval and world affairs, his advice would be sought and respected, even though he reverted to the grade of rear admiral. Of course we do not know whether Admiral Pratt would wish or could be persuaded to continue on active duty. We simply are presenting the opportunity.

The next provision relates to the pay of aides.

Officers of the Navy detailed as aides to rear admirals of the upper half are entitled to an increase of pay at the rate of $200 per annum; to rear admirals of the lower half, at the rate of $150 per annum. This accords with law governing the pay of aides in the Army and Marine Corps.

The War Department appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1934 makes no provision for the pay of aides during the ensuing fiscal year, and the committee has included this provision suspending such payments to officers so detailed in the Navy. The Marine Corps will be governed by the provision in the War Department appropriation act.

This action permits of a reduction of $5,000 from the Navy estimates and $1,900 from the Marine Corps estimates.

Then we come to the provision directed against the employment of enlisted men as servants in the residences or quarters of officers on shore.

It has been the practice for many years to detail enlisted men rated as stewards, cooks, and mess attendants to the residences or quarters of commanding officers of the more important shore activities. A list of such details appear on pages 296 and 297 of the hearings.

While it may be argued that officers occupying such positions should provide their own servants, and that view certainly can not be controverted with respect to many of the details indicated in the list mentioned, it is questionable whether or not officers occupying such positions as the Chief of Naval Operations and the Superintendent of the Naval Academy, whose positions make necessary a considerable amount of official entertaining, should be required to defray the expense of servants the need for whom is occasioned solely by the official status of the incumbents of such positions. If this need be recognized as an appropriate expense to the Government in the two instances cited, perhaps the better way to handle the situation would be through a special allowance for the employment of civilian servants.

With the pressure for more enlisted men for duty on shipboard and the ever-present need for rigid economy, the committee has taken the position that the present practice can not be longer, or at least at this time, justified, and this provision is designed to stop the practice. The committee is advised by letter from the Budget officer of the War Department, Major General Coleman, dated February 14, 1933, "that no enlisted men of the Army are detailed in the capacity of servants in the residences or quarters of officers of the Army."

The servant matter is followed by a limitation on the use of moneys in maintaining mess-gear allowances in the residences or quarters of officers on shore.

Another ancient naval practice has been to supply table linen, table silver, dishes, and glassware to the residences or quarters on shore of officers of flag rank in certain details. A list of the allowances and of the official stations ashore of the officers benefiting by such allowances appears on pages 329–332 of the hearings.

Like in the case of servants, necessary official entertaining makes necessary the possession of a greater quantity of such articles than ordinarily would be the case, but because of the need for rigid economy the committee is unwilling to recommend an appropriation even for maintaining the existing allowances, and has included this provision designed to stop the supply or replacement of articles such as enumerated in the list above referred to.

The committee is advised that maintenance expenditures on account of such equipment only averages about $2,000 per annum

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that I regret, I am sure as much as any one here, the fact that this bill is not below the amount recommended in the Budget. However, in my judgment, we can ill afford to accede to proposals, advanced as measures of economy, that would lessen the present degree of our military preparedness. We have bended every effort to avoid doing so. There is not a man among you, I am confident, who would have had us do otherwise.

We all appreciate the need and value of the naval arm and of the vital necessity to maintain it in the highest state of preparedness that our finances will afford. In these times of financial stress, with a man of Admiral Pratt's caliber charting the course, supported by a loyal organization, by collaboration with the committees of Congress we may have an efficient and effective sea force at the lowest possible cost. That, I should say, is the end we all seek.

I thank you. [Applause.]

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AYRES. I prefer not to. I promised that the committee would rise at 5 o'clock, and it is exactly 5 o'clock.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Campbell].

Mr. CAMPBELL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I am going to take this opportunity of presenting my views in regard to several national questions.

Perhaps at no time in the history of our country has this Congress been confronted with more serious questions than involve us at this time. Let me repeat that which has been repeated on the floor of this House many times—we stand to-day the richest country in all the world, yet close to 10,000,000 men are crying for work that they may not be the objects of charity; thousands upon thousands are losing their homes by virtue of the depression; in my district, where the fertility is almost like the Garden of Eden, distress and destitution prevail; the more they produce the less they receive. We starve in the land of plenty. The farmer can no longer buy, the factories can no longer run, the working man can no longer work. A link is gone in that chain which binds the cycle of employment and prosperity.

To us, who sit here as representatives of the people, is assigned the task of finding the remedy to this social evil.

Mr. Chairman, I beg leave to present to this House a picture of the conditions in this country, and one that surrounds my own home. In years gone by the sturdy pioneers changed the prairies into productive fields and fine homes, and a contented, God-fearing people. To-day, as I stated before, thousands are losing those homes; discontentment has been evidenced by strikes and blockades. The little country banker, who ministered in a financial way to those who believed in development and progress, has largely passed out of the picture—his life's work in ruin and his depositors bankrupt, all by reason of the fact that that great farming community, which is the lifeblood of the Nation, is no longer able to buy more than the bare necessities of life. He no longer can pay his taxes and his interest by reason of the price that they receive for the products which he sells.

I have here with me several charts which I think will more vividly portray, the past as well as the present, the reason for the conditions that exist at this time.

My first chart is a general chart showing since the beginning of this country that relationship of those products which the farmer sells and those which he buys. Here, beginning with the year 1801 until the year 1860, or at the beginning of the Civil War, at no time were the prices for farm products equal to those of other commodities. After the Civil War we continued on the same plane until 1909, when, as the chart shows, farm commodities were on a par with all others. This continued during the sharp ascent occasioned by the war. Now, many of you do not understand why all farmers did not get rich during that period, but if he will turn his eyes again to this chart he will find that, as the farmers' prices rose in value, those things which he bought rose on the same high level. Then came the break following the war. In the year 1921 the farm prices again fell far below the prices for the commodities he bought. At the present time the differential between all commodities and the farmers' prices is the greatest ratio by far since the Civil War. This chart sets out those facts, and you and I know that the farmer can never recover until there is a proper balance all along the line. It is with that object in mind that I present some of our problems as well as some of our remedies.

For years the platform of both parties have promised equality as between agriculture and industry, but to-day we must go further than ever before. The prices of our products are so low that even if industrial prices should be brought down to a parity with ours it would mean ruination for all. The general commodities prices must, by some method, be brought far above their present level. The general object seems to be to bring them back to at least the 1926 level.

Many bills have been presented to Congress. The Mc-Nary-Haugen bill, with the equalization fee; the farm bill, without the equalization fee, which is now a law; and the allotment plan, which provides for a stabilization of prices and a general reduction of the acreage. The later plan seems to be the one which will be enacted at the next Congress, of which I shall not be a Member. I understand that there is a concerted effort to place under this plan only two commodities—wheat and cotton. It will therefore have little effect upon my district, which is largely corn, hogs, and cattle.

Ladies and gentlemen of the committee, I believe we have come to a time when emergency legislation is needed. You may call it radical or revolutionary, but if there is power in Congress to declare such an emergency and to set prices upon that part of the products of the farm that are consumed within the borders of our own country it ought to be done. In every bill which involves this matter there is always the cry of constitutionality. This is the objection to the Clair plan and many others. If this is true, then the Constitution ought to be amended, and I offered in this Congress a resolution for such an amendment.

The allotment plan will within itself never bring us out of our difficulties. It is true that the buying power of the farmer must be increased in order to put the laboring man to work, but I do not believe that the allotment plan is broad enough to bring this about.

In making careful study over a period of some four years I have come to the conclusion that this great question is involved around our medium of exchange. What is money but the evidence of value? For example, I sell my cattle for a given price, only to use that medium of exchange for the purpose of exchanging those cattle for clothing, food, in the payment of taxes, interest, and such. If that medium of exchange is at a high value, then the commodity price is low, but that exchange is not evidenced alone by gold and silver, Federal reserve notes, and money of all kinds, but ten times more is evidenced by checks, accounts, bills of lading, and all that paper which acts in the capacity of a circulating medium. To-day by virtue of frozen credits, bank disasters, and lack of confidence that medium of exchange, outside of money, has depreciated almost 40 per cent. Why, there is only a total of $5,705,000,000 of money in circulation, yet the money deposited in banks, as represented by the statements, amounts to over $50,000,000,000. When times are flourishing and credit is extended we really need less money than in times like these. I do not have the time to make an extensive speech on the money question, but practically half of our circulating currency are Federal reserve notes. Under date of December 31, 1932, or at the beginning of this year, there was in circulation $2,715,712,000 of this character of money. This money is backed by 100 per cent of collateral in the form of notes and bonds, together with gold reserves. In my Federal reserve district of Chicago I call attention to the fact that every one of these notes are not only backed by 100 per cent of paper security but over $100 of gold for every $100 issued. The exact figures are as follows: Federal reserve notes in actual circulation, Chicago district, $705,563,000, and the amount of gold held exclusively against these notes is $720.957,000.

If ever there should be a cry of flat money, take out a Federal reserve note issued in favor of the bank in Chicago and say this note is backed not only by 100 per cent of gold but more than 100 per cent of gold, and in addition thereto 100 per cent of good collateral. This seems to me a farce, even in a gold-standard country, and I will call your attention to the fact that while we were on the gold standard, of which some boast so much, that on October 29, 1920, the Federal reserve notes in circulation were $3,351,303,000, and those notes were backed by 100 per cent of collateral in the form chiefly of customers' notes and only $1,581,943,000 in gold: this included the 35 per cent reserve against deposits. The facts are that the actual gold as against the Federal reserve notes was only $1,175,118,000, and yet did you or I refuse at that time to accept the Federal reserve note on the ground that it was not adequately backed by gold?

The Federal reserve law provides that the minimum amount of gold necessary is only 40 per cent. This being true, the Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago could issue over two and a half times as much circulating medium as is now in circulation, provided the Federal reserve bank purchased Government securities, or discounted notes and collateral from customer banks. Due to the manner of the issuance of Federal reserve notes the time could come when every Federal reserve note would be backed by over 200 per cent of gold. Due to the failure of all the older banks in my county over a million dollars of currency has been taken out of circulation since 1924. The facts are that at the present time the amount of Federal reserve notes issued through the rediscounting of the notes of member banks is the smallest since the creation of the Federal reserve system.

I find, too, that we have in circulation United States Treasury notes, or the old greenbacks issued in 1862 and 1863, amounting to the sum of $346,681,016, which are protected by a gold reserve of less than 50 cents on the dollar, or $156,039,088, and yet when you cash your check at some bank and they count out to you over the counter the money as represented by that check, you take it as it is presented to you regardless of its character and you feel that it is all good, sound money.

Our country, among the very few in the world, is supposed to be on what is termed the "gold standard," under the theory that all of our money is backed with gold. Many of those who hold to the theory of the gold standard class all moneys not backed by gold as fiat money, or in the slang phrase, rubber money. If this theory is right, then in 1920, on October 29, we had in circulation in the form of Federal reserve notes over $1,800,000,000 of fiat money, and we had in circulation of United States Treasury notes, or old greenbacks, $190,000,000 of rubber money.

It seems to me that every day our money climbs higher and higher and our commodities go lower and lower. I realize the question of inflation is a delicate one. It has been tried not only in this country but in practically every country in the world, at some time. It has had its success and its failures. In Germany it had no limit; it ran away with itself and created disaster. In France it appears to be a success-the old franc was worth 19 cents in our money; during the inflation period it fell to almost 2 cents, and to-day is stabilized, backed by gold, at 0.0392. Practically all of the countries, with the exception of France and the United States, have gone off of the gold standard. Gold became too high as compared with commodity prices. These countries had but one thing to do and that was the inflation of the currency. The United States stands practically alone like the Rock of Gibraltar, while the banks are failing by the thousands and the great majority of the people are becoming bankrupt.

Two theories have been backed to a great extent by the Members of Congress. One theory, as advocated through a bill introduced by Congressman Burtness, of North Dakota, is for the revaluation of gold by changing the number of grains of gold in a dollar to a lesser amount. The other theory is by issuance of sufficient currency that you create either a better credit structure or inflate the currency. Both are for the sole purpose of cheapening the value of the dollar and thereby raising commodity prices, and under both theories by far the great majority of those who advocate either one, it is felt that in order to curb excessive inflation, which is just as disastrous as an excessive deflation, that when the general commodity prices reach the level of 1926 the inflation process should stop, and if it rises above the general commodity price of that year deflation should prevail. This is the theory of the stabilization of currency, or what is termed the "honest dollar."

There is still another theory of bringing silver into the picture and to increase our circulating medium by virtue of its coinage. We find there are a great many people, including some economists, who maintain there is only one safe standard of money and that is gold and silver or specie. The others who are for inflation believe that such money should be issued, backed by the credit and good will of the United States Government, until the present money should be so cheapened, as I have said before, to raise the commodity prices.

It was upon this theory that many of us voted for the soldiers' bonus. The idea being that the issuance of new money into the country, and being as widely distributed as it would be under this source, would bring about an inflation which would have the desired result. The idea being that, in issuing the currency, if need be the same currency could be retired in the same manner in which the certificates are to be retired, by building up each year a reserve fund to pay the same. I call attention to the fact that in my own district the amount of new money that would have gone into circulation, by counties, is as follows:

Buena Vista	$351, 872. 95
Cherokee	353, 192, 45
Clay	303, 616, 95
Dickinson	207, 010, 70
Ida	224, 937, 05
Lyon	288, 273, 05
Monona	343, 315, 05
O'Brien	347, 009, 65
Osceola	191, 930, 70
Plymouth	455, 397, 15
Sac	332, 532, 85
Sioux	505, 293, 10
Woodbury	1, 916, 460. 65

However, if the great majority of this Congress, or the next Congress, do not favor the payment of the adjustedcompensation certificates in this form, I believe that there should be created new money for the purpose of balancing our Budget, or in the payment of our national indebtedness.

There is one question which always presents itself in the minds of those who study the money question, and that is the contractual obligations of those contracts which are payable in dollars represented by gold of the weight and fineness as at the present time. I beg leave, with the consent of Congressman Burtness, to insert in these remarks his brief on this question in his speech which you will find in the Congressional Record under date of February 9, 1933. It would seem to me Congress having the sole right to coin money and to regulate the value thereof that that right could not be abrogated through personal contracts; however, in order to cover this phase I have introduced in this Congress a bill providing that all contracts payable in money can be paid in the legal tender of the United States. It is so formed that it would be impossible to make effective a contract payable solely in dollars of gold of a certain weight and fineness.

In studying the financial history of the United States we find that at one time in the thirties Congress changed the number of grains of gold in the dollar apparently to a good effect by lessening the number. No country in the world has tried stabilized inflation, which many of us maintain is the only kind which can bring about good results.

We sit here, under what we term the old order of things, saying to ourselves that depressions have always come and gone, thinking that by some miracle the present order can be changed, and that without a different policy prosperity will come back as the morning sun appears over the horizon each 24 hours, but, Mr. Chairman, like the South Dakota homesteader in the early days who looked vainly in the sky for the dark clouds while his crops burned under the heat of the midday sun, looked and looked, but looked in vain. It is true that the rain always came, but many, many times it came too late. We sit here quibbling over minor matters, hindered by party politics, fiddling around. History tells of another fiddler-they called him Nero-he fiddled and fiddled until his great city fell. I know the mental caliber of this Congress. It is not that the brains of the country are not here. It is timidity and fear, that fear which keeps them from reaching out into untried fields, although they believe that something must be done.

This depression is not of the same character as those of the past. The world is crumbling under an avalanche of debts, debts which can never be paid on the present value of our dollar. They bring despair and discontent. State legislatures are enacting moratoriums, loan companies are stopping foreclosures, banks are extending their paper, the Government is loaning more money. All this is simply putting off the fatal day.

I am a firm believer in the principles on which this Government is based. Individual opportunity propagates development. The results of genius and hard work should act to the financial remuneration of those who possess these qualities, and this can only be derived in a country like ours.

I am leaving this Congress after four years of service. It matters little whose name appears on the congressional roll, but it will mean much to me and to you, as a humble citizen, the nature and character of the men who represent us. It is easy to serve here and follow the old beaten trail, like the sheep which follow the bellwether, but what we need to-day in this Congress are women and men who will study these vital questions, enact needed legislation into laws, be fearless regardless of censure, and serve intelligently, honestly, and faithfully.

This is, no doubt, the last speech that I will make to this Congress; and let me close in saying that I know the great Middle West. My ancestors, my father, my brothers, and myself have all been tillers of the soil. Food is the basis of the continuation of human life; but this great civilization has not been developed by the production of food alone. We are all tied in the scheme of evolution and progress. What is good for a great body of citizens is good for all. I appeal to you men of the East to look to us as representing over 30,000,000 people. It is only by viewing the Nation as a whole that we can accomplish results, work together, and pull together, regardless of party politics and sectional differences, and I will leave you with faith and hope that our country will stand, as it always has stood, for the protection of the rights of every class of our citizens, regardless of his occupation or creed, always maintaining that of all rights human rights come first. I thank you.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Doxey, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 14724, had come to no resolution thereon.

ECONOMY CONDITIONS

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by Hon. JOHN W. FLANNAGAN, of Virginia, to the New England Tobacco Growers' Association on a recent date.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The address is as follows:

The address is as ionows.

Mr. Chairman and members of the New England Tobacco Growers' Association, there was a day when a Virginia rebel would have felt more or less embarrassment talking to a Connecticut Tobacco. That day, thank God, has passed. During the input Yankee. That day, thank God, has passed. During the intervening days and years many things have transpired to wipe out sectional feeling and bring us back to the point from whence we started, when on July 4, 1776, your Sherman, Huntington, Williams, and Walcott, and my Jefferson, Wythe, Lee, Harrison, Nelson, and Braxton, as the chosen representatives of our respective people, acting in the common interest of all, affixed their signatures to a certain declaration that will hold our people together as long as that declaration lives, and my friends, despite the trying period we are going through to-day I am persuaded that that declaration is immortal.

In times of prespective and plenty we may drift apart in our

In times of prosperity and plenty we may drift apart in our effort to secure for our respective sections advantages in the way of tariffs, freight rates, trade, and commerce. I hold no brief against a people who fight to secure the advantage for their own against a people who fight to secure the advantage for their own section; rather I glory in their activity and in their ingenuity. But in times of distress, such as exist to-day, and such as existed when we were first cemented together in our common effort to obtain our liberties, we have the faculty of getting together and working in the interest of all, and as long as we retain this spirit, handed down to us from our patriotic sires, America is safe.

May we all foster and nurture this spirit to-day. Our salvation depends upon keeping it alive.

It is in this spirit that I come to you to-day to discuss the pending congressional farm legislation with particular reference

Before approaching the subject may I be permitted to first remind you of the fact that we are facing the greatest crisis that we have faced since the winter of 1777. We won in 1777 because we cooperated and worked together. Neither gold nor silver but cooperation and team work made us the victor in 1777. silver but cooperation and team work made us the victor in 1777. That cooperation and that team work came from the faith our fathers had in our Republic that was then in the borning and that higher faith that permeated their breasts that God in His own time and in His own way would correct abuses and right wrongs. And to-day in our present crisis we need, more than anything else, to renew, to strengthen the faith of our people in our Government, the faith of our people in Him who holds the destiny of our Republic in the hollow of His hand.

It takes faith real faith, to carry on to-day. With millions

It takes faith, real faith, to carry on to-day. With millions out of employment, with hunger abroad in the land, with many out of employment, with hunger abroad in the land, with many shivering for lack of clothing and fuel, with foreclosure sales being daily held in every town, hamlet, and countryside, with the bankruptcy courts working overtime, with farm products selling below the cost of production, with business stagnated, and uncertainty and anxiety inmates of every home, it takes a stout heart imbued with the faith of our fathers, trusting and believing that some day the burden will be lifted and we will again be permitted to enjoy the fullness of our land, to carry on.

Our Government is only as strong as the faith of our people in our institutions. I can not, I will not, think that our people have lost faith in our Republic. I believe that in this crisis, as in the ones we have met and conquered in the past, that the American people will keep the faith and work and cooperate together, and if we do victory again will be our reward.

THE FARM PROBLEM

There are many causes contributing to the present condition of the farmer. If an indictment were drawn setting forth the contributing causes, some of the charges would be against the farmers themselves. They are not wholly without fault. They are, to some degree at least, the contributors to their own ruin. I say this, not in derogation of the farmers, because I realize the same charge can be made against all classes, but in an effort to bring home to them the true situation. The main contributing cause that can be laid at the door of the farmer himself, is his unwise horrowing of money and the foolish manner in which he cause that can be laid at the door of the farmer himself, is his unwise borrowing of money and the foolish manner in which he spent much of it. During our days of prosperity the farmer, like the rest of us, borrowed and spent money in a reckless and extravagant manner, and to-day, like many of us, he is paying the price of his own folly. Money was easy to obtain, and the farmers, many of them, were talked into mortgaging their farms by high-powered representatives of the joint-stock and Federal land banks, the insurance companies, the banks and other financial institutions. When the money was obtained instead of using it for essential farm purposes, a great percentage of it was used for what, during my boyhood days on the farm, would have been considered luxuries. As a result, when the farmers awoke from their financial debauch, they discovered that they had very little, if anything, to show in the way of real assets for the money they had borrowed.

But there are other contributing causes over which the farmers had no control and for which they are not responsible; and it is these causes that are largely responsible for their present condition, because if the price level of farm products had remained even at their pre-war level the farmer, in spite of his own mistakes, could have pulled through. These causes have from year to year gradually reduced the income of the farmer—actually bled him white—and eventually brought him to his present sad estate.

Let me briefly enumerate some of them:

(1) Discriminatory freight rates

In normal times farm products comprise 11 per cent of the total volume of freight, yet such products pay 19.8 per cent of the total freight revenues.

Moreover, rebates or reductions in rates are allowed on many manufactured articles when consigned for shipment abroad. As an example—and I could give many—on farm implements shipped from Chicago to New Orleans for domestic use—to be used by the American farmer—the freight rate is 85 cents per hundred, but when shipped for export—to be sold to the foreign farmer the rate comes down to 41½ cents per hundred. Yet, on the other hand, all farm products, whether destined for domestic or foreign consumption, carry the full freight rate.

(2) Discriminatory tariff schedules

The tariff protects industry but does not, and can not as long as the American farmer produces a surplus, protect the farmer. The result is this: The farmer sells practically everything he raises on a free, world market and buys on a protected market.

(3) A costly marketing system

There is something radically wrong with our marketing system. It costs as much, if not more, to-day to market cattle, hogs, wheat, and other farm products than it did when the farmers were receiving a fair and honest price for their products.

(4) High land taxes

Land taxes are all out of line. In many cases the farmers are not making enough to keep their taxes paid. Farm taxes—can you believe it—have increased 266 per cent during the past 20 years.

(5) High interest rates on loans

The interest rate the farmers are paying is entirely too high. They are, in my opinion, paying the highest interest rate of any class in America. Again, our Government is a party to the crime, because the rate in many instances is criminal. The Federal land bank and the intermediate-credit banks are charging the farmers full interest, and yet the same Government has loaned millions of dollars of the tax payers' money to the large steamship companies at a rate of interest as low as one-fourth of

(6) A medium of exchange that does not correctly measure values

The value of the American dollar does not correctly measure the value of farm products. For instance, measured in farm products, the American dollar is worth over twice what it was only a few years ago.

Let me give you a bird's-eye picture of the deplorable conditions these causes have led to:

Of the 6,288,648 farms in the United States, 2,911,644 are mortgaged.

The present value of farm lands in the United States is $50,000, 000,000, against which there are mortgage liens amounting to practically $10,000,000,000.

The value of farm lands has dropped from $79,000,000,000 in 1919 to $50,000,000,000 in 1932.

Farm taxes have increased 266 per cent during the past 20

The gross income of the farmers has dropped from $11,950,-000,000 in 1929 to $5,240,000,000 in 1932, which is far below the amount needed to pay running expenses, installments, interest, and taxes.

Based on pre-war prices—that is, the average commodity price between 1909 and 1914—the farmer to-day is getting 61 per cent less for what he sells and paying 6 per cent more for what he

And when you stop and consider that the farmer's dollar to-day, measured in crop values—and that is all he has with which to pay—is worth less than 50 cents, you begin to realize the hopelessness of the situation unless emergency measures that will bring relief are quickly enacted.

This is indeed a sad picture and unless something is done a hopeless picture. The farmers realize their own mistakes and anxious to correct them, but are helpless unless the other contributing causes are corrected.

These contributing causes can not be corrected overnight, and for this reason some emergency measure is necessary.

The farmers can not wait on the correction of the contributing causes I have enumerated which, when made, will put back into honest operation the law of supply and demand. They need present help—not help at some time in the future—but now. An emergency exists. The patient has passed the soothing-sirup stage. He needs a hypodermic; and I, for one, in order to revive him and keep him alive until the correction of the contributing causes will permit the law of supply and demand to operate honestly, am willing to administer the needle. We have talked and wrangled long enough. The time for action has arrived.

The real farm problem in America to-day is to make the farmer's dollar, measured in crop values, worth 100 cents.

ALLOTMENT PLAN

The emergency that exists is the father of the allotment plan. This plan was brought forward to take care of the emergency—to

This plan was brought forward to take care of the emergency—to keep the farmers alive until we can work out sound farm legislation that will insure permanent recovery.

The object of the bill, simply stated, is to give the farmer a fair and honest exchange price for the products of the soil; and when this is done—when you increase the purchasing power of the farmer; when you give him an honest dollar—you improve our whole economic structure. whole economic structure.

It has been found out that during the period running from 1009 to 1914 the prices of farm (except tobacco) and industrial products were more nearly on a parity. The committee adopted the 1909–1914 period, known as the pre-war period, as the base period, and the bill attempts to bring the price of farm commodities up to the average farm commodities brought during said period. During that period the farmer's dollar was worth practically as much as the dollar of the industrialist. The farmer during that period had an honest dollar that would pay a dollar's worth of debts or purchase a dollar's worth of goods, wares, and merchandise

What is the situation to-day?

Take, for instance, the four basic commodities included in the allotment plan bill as reported out by the committee—and the same condition prevails as to other farm products—wheat, cotton, hogs, and tobacco, and, measured in terms of these commodities, what do we find the value of the farmer's dollar to be?

The farmer's dollar to-day, measured in wheat, is only worth around 36 cents.

The farmer's dollar to-day measured in cotton, is only worth around 47 cents.

The farmer's dollar to-day, measured in hogs, is only worth around 42 cents.

The farmer's dollar to-day, measured in terms of tobacco, is only worth around 75 cents.

And we further find that the farmers are paying 6 per cent more to-day for what they purchase than they did during the period from 1909 to 1914.

Now, the purpose of the allotment plan is simply to restore the prices of agricultural products to their proper relative posithe prices of agricultural products to their proper relative position with respect to the prices of other commodities—to give to the products of the soil the same purchasing power they enjoyed during the years 1909 to 1914, and thus place their purchasing power on an equal footing with the purchasing power of other commodities. When we do this we simply restore the parity, or equality, that should always be maintained between agricultural prices and the prices of other commodities.

No effort is made in the bill to boost the prices of farm commodities to the injury of other commodities. The only effort is to lift the prices of farm commodities to a fair position with respect to other commodities.

respect to other commodities.

HOW THE PLAN OPERATES

Now, I know you want to know how the plan will work. As already stated, during the period from 1909 to 1914 (known as the pre-war period) the parity of equality between farm commodities and other commodities was, with the exception of to-bacco, fair and just. During this period the price of tobacco was abnormally low, and for this reason, as to tobacco, we adopted the abnormally low, and for this reason, as to tobacco, we adopted the period from 1909 to 1918. The bill provides that the first processor or manufacturer of the commodities set out in the bill shall pay a fee or adjustment charge thereon equal to the difference between the market price and the average price throughout the basic periods I have mentioned. This insures the growers of wheat, cotton, and hogs for 1933 the average price these commodities sold for between 1909 and 1914, and the growers of tobacco the average price tobacco sold for between 1909 and 1918. The fee is levied against the processor or manufacturer in the form of a tax, and the producer, when he sells his wheat, cotton, hogs, or tobacco, is issued an adjustment certificate equal to the amount of the fee on the commodity he sells. The certificates are redeemable at the United States Treasury, one half in 30 days and the balance in 6 months, and are made negotiable so the farmers can use them immediately. The fee collected by the processor or manufacturer is paid into the Treasury of the United States to redeem the certificates. redeem the certificates.

The bill contains two limitations:

The bill contains two limitations:

(1) While the plan is voluntary, the farmer before he obtains the benefits provided for must be able to show that he has reduced his acreage 20 per cent. The burden is placed upon the farmer to show that he has complied with the requirement of the act by reducing his acreage. This provision was inserted in order to control, if possible, our surpluses.

(2) The fee or adjustment charge is only paid upon that part of the crop that is domestically consumed. The idea is that the farmers are only entitled to the parity price on that part of their production which is consumed domestically. The farmer's share of this production is called his allotment; hence the name, allotment plan. ment plan.

The price levels to be maintained under the bill on the domestic consumption of the commodities named in the bill, after the initial period, are as follows:

Cents

Cotton, per pound

Wheat, per bushel
Hogs, per pound
I will give the price level of tobacco a little later. The prices for the intial period, that is until the or marketing season, are as follows:
	Cents
Cotton, per pound	9
Wheat, per bushel	75
Hogs, per pound
The domestic consumption of the commodities bill are approximately—
	Per cent
Cotton	40
Wheat	70
Hogs	94
	FO

In order to clarify the matter, let me give you a concrete illustration as to how the plan will work. Take cotton for instance. The domestic consumption of cotton is around 40 per cent, hence the farmer would be entitled to the adjustment charge on 40 per cent of his crop. During the base period, that is from 1909 to 1914, the average price of cotton was 12 cents per pound, hence the farmer is entitled to 12 cents per pound for 40 per cent of his crop. The balance of the crop, 60 per cent, would be sold on the open market at the world market price. If, therefore, the price of cotton this year is 5 cents, then the farmer would be entitled, in addition to the 5 cents, to an adjustment charge of 7 cents on 40 per cent of his crop. The balance of the crop, which would be 60 per cent, would be sold on the market at 5 cents per pound. Of course, if the price of cotton should go up or down the adjustment charge would correspondingly go up or down. On 4-cent cotton the adjustment charge would be 8 cents; on 8-cent cotton, 4 cents, etc. cotton, 4 cents, etc.

To further illustrate, let us take two farmers who raise 10,000 pounds each of cotton, one of whom complies with the law and the other does not. Cotton, we will assume, is worth 5 cents per pound on the open market.

The farmer who complies with the law would receive for his cotton-

4,000 pounds of cotton, at 12 cents per pound______$480 6,000 pounds of cotton, at 5 cents per pound______ 300

The farmer who failed to comply with the law would receive for his cotton—10,000 pounds of cotton, at 5 cents per pound—

A difference of $280 in favor of the farmer who came in under the plan.

The plan works the same way as to other commodities.

WHY ONLY FOUR COMMODITIES?

This question naturally arises: If the plan is a good one, why limit it to wheat, cotton, hogs, and tobacco?

If you will give careful thought to the plan, the answer is apparent.

These four commodities were selected in order to test the plan

These four commodities were selected in order to test the plan out, because they meet certain fundamental tests, namely:

(1) That the commodity be one that has a controlling effect upon the price of other commodities. If the price level of wheat is raised, there will be a corresponding raise in the price level of other grains, etc. With the exception of tobacco, all commodities included in the bill meet this test.

(2) That the commodity be one which normally has an exportable surplus, and hence its domestic price is influenced by the world price. All commodities included in the bill meet this test. Such commodities need protection, because they come in competition with like foreign commodities and can not be protected by a tariff.

(3) That the commodity be one which is processed or manufactured. All commodities mentioned in the bill meet this test. It would be cumbersome, if not impossible, to collect a tax or adjustment charge upon a commodity that is not processed or manufactured.

manufactured. While tobacco does not meet the first test, namely, that it has a controlling effect upon other commodities, it was thought wise to include it because the tobacco grower, in selling his tobacco, is at the mercy of two or three large tobacco manufacturers and manifestly needs protection in selling his tobacco.

PERIOD OF DURATION

The bill is purely an emergency measure and only extends for one year unless extended for an additional year by presidential proclamation.

TOBACCO UNDER PLAN

The census of 1930 shows that there were approximately 433,000 tobacco raisers in the United States, who produced approximately 1,400,000,000 pounds of tobacco, of which we consumed approximately one half and exported the other half. It may be of interest to note that the Internal Revenue Department reported the revenue from tobacco for the same year to be $442,824,000.

According to the figures of the Department of Agriculture, the average price the growers received for tobacco during what is known as the pre-war period, that is from 1909 to 1914, was 10.4

average price the growers received for tobacco during what is known as the pre-war period, that is from 1909 to 1914, was 10.4 cents per pound. According to the same figures, the average price of tobacco on November 15, 1932, was 8.9 cents per pound. We thought that while the 1909-1914 period was fair as to wheat, cotton, and hogs, that it was unfair as to tobacco, as tobacco during that period was abnormally low, and for this reason, as to tobacco, we adopted the period from 1909 to 1918 as the basic period, which will considerably increase the general average over the 1909-1914 average.

I have secured from the Department of Agriculture all available tobacco prices during the period 1909-1918. The department did not, as to some of the types, begin to keep separate figures until after 1918, as prior to that year many of the types were combined. The department recognizes 28 different types of tobacco, the 1909-1918 average on such types as I have been able to secure the yearly prices on, being as follows:

Section 22 of the bill recognizes the different types and grades of tobacco and gives the Secretary of Agriculture the right to treat and consider the different grades and types as separate commodities. This provision was necessary, in order to protect the tobacco growers, as the different types and grades, of course, bring different prices.

Tobacco, in my opinion, is better adapted to the allotment plan than any other commodity. In the first place the Government is already collecting a revenue tax on tobacco, and it would entail very little additional expense, if any, to collect the adjustment fee or tax. In the second place the adjustment charge would, in all probability, be absorbed by the manufacturer. They could certainly afford to do this considering the relatively small proportion the original cost of tobacco bears to the price the finished product brings. And then, too, tobacco can not be classed as a necessity. It is a luxury, and hence the argument can not be advanced that the bill, as to tobacco, would increase the price of one of the necessities of life.

ANSWER TO OBJECTIONS TO THE BILL

ANSWER TO OBJECTIONS TO THE BILL

Nothing has ever been accomplished without first overcoming obstacles. No legislation, however meritorious it may be, was ever enacted into law without meeting and subduing the objections to it. There are objections raised to this bill, some honest; others, in my opinion, advanced for purely selfish reasons. Permit me to briefly answer some of the objections.

(1) The objection is made that the bill will levy a tax upon the necessities of life in the form of a consumers or sales tax. This is a catchy argument, especially at this time, when millions at present prices are unable to purchase food and clothing.

Who advanced this argument? Did the labor organizations?

No. Labor is not opposing the plan. The argument was advanced by special interest and, I am afraid, for selfish reasons. The first I heard of the argument was when the representative of the Millers National Federation appeared before the committee and, as strange as it may sound, objected to the bill because it was unfair to the farmers and consumers. When I examined him I told him frankly that I did not believe his love for either the farmers or the consumers brought him before the committee, but rather his interest in the milling business. And when I asked him told him frankly that I did not believe his love for either the farmers or the consumers brought him before the committee, but rather his interest in the milling business. And when I asked him if he appeared when the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill was up for consideration and plead the cause of the farmers and consumers, he had to admit that he did not.

Is a bill that has for its object the giving the farmer a square deal—giving him a reasonable profit over and above the cost of production—to be defeated by branding it a sales tax? No. I know, and you know, that neither the laboring people, the consumers, nor any one else who wants to do the right thing, expect the American farmers to feed the American people at their own expense—by losing money every year they produce the food necessary to feed the American people.

But we do have a sales tax in this country, and it is being administered not to put money into a depleted Federal Treasury, but into the coffers of the very interests who oppose this bill under the guise that it is a sales or consumers tax. We have a tariff tax that to-day is collecting tribute off of the farmer and laboring man, for the purpose of taking care of the very ones who oppose this legislation. Special interests seem to think that it is all right to have a sales tax in the interest of industry, and all wrong to have such a tax in favor of the farmer.

Be not deluded into thinking this a sales tax. A sales tax is levied to raise revenue to balance the Government Budget. This

Be not deluded into thinking this a sales tax. A sales tax is levied to raise revenue to balance the Government Budget. This adjustment charge is being advocated to balance the farmer's budget, and God knows it needs balancing.

But who should pay this tax? There's the rub. When you find out the answer you will know why special interests oppose the bill. Before I answer this question let me give you a few figures.

The pre-war price of wheat to the farmer was around $1, and at that time the price of flour ranged from $4.36 to $5.10 per barrel. In 1932 the price of wheat to the farmer was between 30 and 40 cents and the price of flour ranged from $3.61 to $4.40 per barrel. In other words when the price of wheat fell off 62 per cent the price of flour only fell off 15 to 20 per cent.

Well, who should pay the tax or adjustment charge on flour?

In 1929 when the farmers were averaging 9.86 cents for hogs, the retail price of hog meat to the consumer in New York City averretail price of hog meat to the consumer in New York City averaged 15.42 cents. In 1932 the farmers averaged 3.41 cents for hogs, and the retail price of hog meat to the consumer in New York City averaged 10 cents. In other words when the price of hogs to the farmer fell off 65 per cent the price of hog meat to the consumer farmer fell off 65 per cent the price of hog meat to the consumer only fell off 33 per cent.

Well, who should pay the tax or adjustment charge on hogs?

In 1925 when the cotton growers were averaging 22 cents per pound for cotton the average price of cotton goods was approximately 15 cents. In 1931 when the cotton grower averaged 6 cents for his cotton the average price of the same cotton goods was approximately 8 cents. In other words when the price of cotton to the farmer fell off 70 per cent, the price of cotton goods only fell off 44 per cent.

well, who should pay the tax or adjustment charge on cotton?
In 1929 when the tobacco growers were averaging 21.8 cents per pound for Burley tobacco that goes into cigarettes, a package of cigarettes retailed for 15 cents. In 1931 when the same tobacco cigarettes retailed for 15 cents. In 1931 when the same tobacco growers averaged 8.7 cents for the same tobacco the same package of cigarettes sold for 15 cents. In other words when the price of tobacco to the tobacco grower fell off about 60 per cent there was no reduction in the price of cigarettes.

Well, who should pay the tax or adjustment fee on tobacco?

I think you now know the answer. And knowing the answer I think you know why special interests oppose the bill.

(2) Then there are those who oppose the bill because they claim it is class legislation.

(2) Then there are those who oppose the bill because they claim it is class legislation.

Well, if this is class legislation then the tariff is class legislation. If this is class legislation, then the regulation of freight rates and public-utility rates is class legislation. In the regulation of freight and public-utility rates the theory is to give a fair return on invested capital, while the practice is to give a fair return on not only invested but watered capital. The farmer is only asking a fair return on invested capital. Yet there are those who seem to think that it is all right to give railroads and public utilities a fair return on invested and watered capital and all wrong to give the farmer a fair return on invested capital.

return on invested and watered capital and all wrong to give the farmer a fair return on invested capital.

But this bill can not be considered under any view as class legislation. The purposes of the bill are so manifestly in the interest of the public good that it is hard to conceive of anyone advancing the argument that it is class legislation. I am persuaded that those who entertain such a view do not have a true conception of this legislation and do not appreciate the effect the depleted condition of the farmer has upon our whole economic structure.

All wealth comes from the soil and will ever remain in the soil. All wealth comes from the soil and will ever remain in the soil. And wealth is the spring from whence flows prosperity. I lay it down as an axiom that we can not have true prosperity in this country, or any other country, as long as the tillers of the soil labor only to become more involved, and that is exactly what is going on in this country to-day. The road to our financial recovery leads from the farmer's door.

Just a few simple statements will, I think, conclusively show the disastrous effect the destruction of the purchasing power of the farmer has upon our whole economic structure.

farmer has upon our whole economic structure.

The 1930 census shows that 44 per cent of our population is living on farms or in small rural communities of less than 2,500 population. Hence when you destroy the purchasing power of the farmer you practically destroy 44 per cent of the purchasing power of our people.

Let me give you a few examples of what this means.

In 1929, 42 per cent of all automobiles were in rural communities. It means, therefore, that practically 42 per cent of the automobile industry has been paralyzed. It also means that when you restore the purchasing power of the farmer you will put back to work 42 per cent of the laborers in automobile factories.

Take the farm-implement business. It has been practically destroyed since the purchasing power of the farmer has been destroyed. Restore the purchasing power of the farmer and you restore to employment the thousands who formerly worked for farm-implement companies.

farm-implement companies.

It is useless to multiply illustrations. It is apparent that the restoration of the purchasing power of the farmer is far-reaching in its effect. Our leading economists say that the passage of this bill would put over 6,000,000 idle men to work.

No; this is not class legislation, but legislation that will help all classes.

(3) Then there are those who claim that the passage of the allotment plan will mean the setting up of another bureau. Well, let me say this, if it does, it will be the first bureau ever set up in this country that was not financed out of the Federal Treasury. If it sets up another bureau, the farmers will pay the bill.

Under the terms of the bill 2½ per cent of the tax or adjustment charge collected will be used to take care of the administrative costs, and this should certainly be a sufficient amount. At present it is only costing the Federal Government three-fourths of 1 per cent to collect the manufacturing excise taxes now imposed.

Those in position to know do not think it would take very many additional governmental employees to collect the tax and administer the law. But, whatever the amount, not one single penny will come out of the Federal Treasury.

(4) Lastly, there are those who preach that the passage of the bill would reduce the consumption of the commodities therein set out. Well, if it does, the person who would be vitally affected would be the farmer, and yet the farmer is asking that the bill be passed. be passed.

These who advance this argument entirely overlook the fact that the passage of the bill, by increasing the purchasing power of the farmer, will put millions to work, revive business, and aid materially our whole economic structure. When this is done the general purchasing power of our people will be greatly increased and they will naturally consume more.

The bill should increase rather than decrease consumption. Give the American people something to buy food with and they will buy it, because most of them are getting lank and lean, and can, if given a chance, for a while at least, consume more than they formerly could.

CONCLUSION

I am not unmindful of the fact that there is some justification for terming the legislation under consideration radical. The legislation, however, in my opinion, is justified because of the emergency we are facing to-day. I am not advocating this legislation as a permanent policy. I know that as a permanent policy we can not employ artificial means to raise the price levels of farm products. I am advocating this measure as a temporary farm products. I am advocating this measure as a temporary stimulant to revive a very sick patient, hoping that before the effect of the stimulant dies we will be able to work out remedial measures that will bring permanent relief.

In conclusion, may I express the hope that the day is not far distant when the farmers of America, no longer burdened with high tax rates, unjust interest charges, discriminatory freight and tariff rates, and an unfair marketing system, may, by honest toil, be permitted to produce products of the soil that, translated into dollars, are worth 100 cents. They ask nothing more. They will be satisfied with nothing less.

RAISING THE TARIFF THROUGH THE BACK DOOR

Mr. AMLIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. AMLIE. Mr. Speaker, the so-called Crowther bill is one of the many measures introduced at the present session of Congress which has for its objective the equalization of the tariff duties by compensating for depreciation of foreign currencies. It is the claim of the proponents of this type of legislation that if such tariff schedules as we may adopt are to be made effective it is necessary to provide against any reduction in such tariffs by raising these tariffs against those countries operating on a depreciated-currency basis to the extent of such depreciation. They contend that such adjustment is an essential expedient and must be resorted to unless we are to have our markets flooded by cheap foreign goods and our working men as a consequence thrown out of employment.

Let us analyze these arguments. In the first place it is difficult to see how the claim can be made that we are suffering from a flood of importation when our imports last year amounted to $1,322,665,000 as against total imports of $2,090,633,000 for 1931 and as against a further average of importations in excess of $4,000,000,000 a year for the six years prior to 1931.

The following figures regarding total exports and imports for the past eight years, as put out by the United States Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, are in themselves the most conclusive refutation of this argument.

United States exports and imports [United States Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce]

Calendar year	Total exports from United States (1,000 dollars)	Total general imports into United States (1,000 dollars)	Excess of exports (1, 000 dollars)

1925 1926 1927 1927 1928 1929 1930 1930 1931	53, 7 52, 0 53, 8 55, 6 54, 4 55, 7 53, 7 55, 0	46. 3 48. 0 46. 2 44. 4 45. 6 44. 3 46. 3 45. 0	100. 0 97. 9 99. 1 104. 4 106. 7 78. 3 49. 4 33. 0	100.8 104.0 99.0 96.8 104.1 72.4 49.5 31.3

Not only was there a reduction in the total volume of imports in 1932 as against 1931 amounting to about 33 per cent but there was also a decrease in the volume of imports during this same period of approximately 20 per cent.

In the second place, if the argument made by the proponents of this measure is well taken, then we should naturally expect to see a smaller decrease in imports from those countries that have gone on a depreciated currency basis than from those countries that maintained their currencies.

The following, however, are the facts as presented by the United States Tariff Commission:

Quantitative change in imports of major commodities (Ratio of the imports, January-September, 1932, to the imports January-September, 1931, taken as 100 (weighted average))

	Total	Free	Duti- able
Articles coming chiefly from depreciated-currency countries_	79	79	78
Articles coming chiefly from gold-standard countries Articles of which a large proportion comes from both classes	88	110	78
of countries	79	64	88

It will be seen from the foregoing table that on the basis of volume of imports, in 1932 the total volume of goods coming from depreciated currency countries amounted to only 79 per cent of the total amount of imports from those countries in 1931. That is to say there had been no increase of importations from those countries as a result of the depreciation of their currencies which took place in the latter part of 1931. But on the other hand there had been an actual decrease amounting to 21 per cent by volume. On articles coming chiefly from gold-standard countries there was imported in 1932 approximately 88 per cent of the volume of goods that was imported in 1931. That is to say a decrease of imports of 12 per cent from countries on a gold standard as against a decrease of 21 per cent from countries on a depreciated-currency basis. It will be seen, therefore, that the premises upon which the supporters of the Crowther bill base their case are wholly nonexistent.

DE ADVANTAGES DUE TO DEPRECIATION OF CURRENCY ARE ILLUSORY

Not only are these premises nonexistent in fact, but it will further appear from a careful analysis of the subject that there is no particular reason why a depreciation of currency on the part of a nation should result in any permanent advantage insofar as scaling our tariff walls is concerned.

To begin with the tendency will be in any nation operating with a depreciated currency, for labor and other operating costs to advance in terms of dollars to the extent of the depreciation that has taken place. While there may be a temporary advantage insofar as raw materials on hand are concerned, this advantage will very quickly be lost when the manufacturer has to go out in the world market and purchase additional raw materials with which to continue his manufacturing processes. While it is true that the depreciating of a nation's currency might facilitate the writing down of capitalization and the burden of accumulated debts, it does not follow that this is the only means by which this objective may be accomplished.

At the present time in the United States we are in the midst of a process of deflation wherein our self-constituted "sound economists" hope to accomplish the same result without abandoning the gold standard. The chairman of the Tariff Commission has well illustrated this point before the committee by quoting the statement of the finance minister of Holland, who was asked by the representative body of that country as to what were the advantages of depreciated currency or of Holland's going off the gold standard. This Finance Minister said that—

They are partly illusory and partly temporary, and those that are not temporary are illusory and those that are not illusory are temporary.

It is obvious why this should be so. After all, there is no reason why we should not find just as stiff competition from countries on a gold standard as from those that have been forced to abandon the gold standard. The price for which people in a country are willing to produce goods is dependent upon the economic pressure to which they are subjected. In fact they might very readily be subjected to greater pressure in a gold-standard country than in one that had gone off the gold standard.

This is well illustrated by the fact that imports in 1932 as against 1931 had dropped 21 per cent in countries that are off the gold standard as against only 12 per cent from those countries that are still on the gold standard.

A specific example of this fact is given by Chairman Robert L. O'Brien, of the United States Tariff Commission, in his testimony before the Ways and Means Committee on February 2, 1933. He stated that Czechoslovakia and Japan are running neck and neck in the matter of the price of rubber footwear being imported into this country. Japan is off the gold standard while Czechoslovakia is on.

The Crowther bill would place an additional tariff of nearly 50 per cent on articles from England, a country which recently made its interest payments on its war debt to this country; while on the other hand it would levy no additional duty on France, a country that recently defaulted on its interest payments to this country. It would be a means of taking a direct slap at some of the nations whose friendship is most vital and valuable to the people of the United States. And all this in the name of an argument that is demonstrably unsound in every respect.

THE REAL PURPOSE OF THE CROWTHER BILL

At the present time imports into the United States may be defined as free imports which are not subject to duty of any kind, and dutiable imports against which there may be levied either a specific duty or an ad valorem duty. Under the Smoot-Hawley tariff law the average tariff on dutiable imports will amount to approximately 45 per cent. The average duty on both dutiable and nondutiable goods will amount to approximately 17 per cent on the basis of total imports of both classes of goods during the year 1932.

Had the provisions of the Crowther bill been in force and effect, then the average duty upon dutiable and nondutiable goods for the year 1932 would have been in excess of 40 per cent. From this it will be seen that the enactment of the Crowther bill or any of the other measures aimed at the making of adjustments against depreciated foreign currencies would have resulted in the increase of our present tariff rates by more than 100 per cent. This is the real purpose of the Crowther bill although its proponents sought to put it across under the smoke screen of making adjustments against depreciated foreign currencies.

In the same way it will be remembered that the Republicans in 1930 raised the Fordney-McCumber rates, which averaged 28.22 per cent ad valorem, to 45 per cent ad valorem under the Smoot-Hawley bill, all in the guise of aiding the farmer. These two illustrations are perfectly typical of the manner in which our tariffs have been raised from time to time at the behest of the industrial interests of the country.

At no time have the groups sponsoring these tariff raids been frank with the American people. They have always conducted their campaigns for higher tariffs under the pretense of aiding the laboring man or some other downtrodden group. Their motives have always seemingly been altruistic in purpose. In fact so confusing has the whole thing become that the average American to-day is able to see only his interest as a producer of goods. His interest as a consumer of goods he senses but vaguely. While his interest as a citizen of the United States who will either prosper or suffer, dependent upon the general welfare of the country as a whole, he does not sense at all.

The fact that the whole thing is merely a method by which one section of the country may be exploited for numerically superior sections of the country is quite beyond the grasp of the average citizen. In fact of late years it would appear that only a minority of the citizens of the sections so exploited are able to comprehend the workings of the process.

The same thing may be said of a majority of the Representatives in Congress who support these various moves looking toward a further increase of our protective tariffs. They believe that by raising the tariffs they will be able to exclude foreign goods and in that way keep employed the industrial workers in their respective industries. They do not look at the question beyond the probable immediate effect within their industries, and from a political standpoint it is quite essential that they should not do so. For woe unto that Representative who begins to understand the obvious physical fact that there can not be exportations of American-made goods unless there be an equal importation of foreign-made goods and that one must balance the other. And woe particularly unto that Representative who begins to think in terms of the welfare of the Nation rather than about the temporary welfare of his own constituents gained as a result of logrolling with the Representatives of other constituents for the purpose of exploiting the constituents of still other Representatives. While these Representatives may not fully understand the consequences of their acts, it is nevertheless the law of the pack that governs, and nature in the raw is seldom mild.

HISTORICAL DEVELOPMENT OF OUR TARIFF POLICY

Our first tariff act was enacted in 1789 and provided for an average ad valorem tariff of $8\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. It was recognized as a necessary piece of legislation in order to raise needed revenue for the operation of the Federal Government. In 1791 appeared Alexander Hamilton's report on manufactures, which set forth in detail the arguments in favor of developing American industries. It was recognized that such assistance would be at the expense of agriculture. But for the purpose of securing a strong union, Hamilton and his friend defended such a course as economically sound and desirable.

For a period of 25 years thereafter 24 different tariff acts were passed. They sought in the main to raise needed revenues, but they also contained various temporary experiments for the purpose of stimulating American industry.

During the War of 1812 and for three years thereafter importations from England virtually ceased. This gave to American industries a tremendous impetus. Following the cessation of the war the American markets were flooded with European goods, and our manufacturing industries were seriously threatened. Because of the emergency which existed, the tariffs were greatly increased through the cooperation of all sections of the United States. It was not made a sectional issue for that reason, although the relative advantages of free trade and protection were very fully discussed.

By 1824 the appetite of the industrialists through eating had grown tremendously. In that year a bill providing for substantial increases in the tariff was sponsored by Henry Clay. As would be expected, he did not discuss the justice or equity of having one section of the country exploit a numerically inferior section. He rather urged the raising of tariffs "as an American system." His efforts were opposed by Daniel Webster, who was then a Member of the House of Representatives, who said:

With me it is a fundamental axiom, it is interwoven with all my opinions, that the great interests of the country are united and inseparable; that agriculture, commerce, and manufactures will prosper together or languish together; and that all legislation is dangerous which proposes to benefit one of these without looking to consequences which may fall on the others.

But despite this noble statement of principle, Mr. Webster began to feel the importunities of his constituents. After all he was only a public servant dependent upon the support of his constituents for his political success, and if they demanded that he join with others in the exploitation of numerically inferior sections of the country, then their will be done, not his.

Later on he voted for the tariff act of 1828, commonly known as the black tariff and the tariff of abominations. Under its provisions the ad valorem rates on dutiable imports amounted to 49 per cent and on free and dutiable goods together to more than 45 per cent ad valorem.

As a result of this exploitation of the agricultural South, the Legislature of South Carolina called a State convention in 1832 and adopted the "ordinance of nullification." So great was the opposition throughout the Southern States that it became necessary to adopt the compromise tariff act of 1833 which called for a gradual reduction of all duties exceeding 20 per cent. As a result of this act by 1840 the average tariff on dutiable goods had been brought down to 30 per cent and on free and dutiable goods together to 15 per cent. With the depression of 1837-1842 the tariffs were again increased for the purpose of providing needed revenue. By 1846 there had been a marked improvement in financial conditions and as a result of Democratic success at the polls the Walker tariff was adopted which greatly reduced the general tariff schedules. In 1857 the tariff was again reduced, until the average rate on dutiable goods was approximately 20 per cent and on free and dutiable approximately 16 per cent. These rates were the lowest in the history of the country since 1812.

These reductions were secured only as a result of bitter political campaigns in which other issues finally captured the public imagination. It is, however, generally recognized by historians, even in the higher institutions of learning in the North, that it was this economic exploitation of one part of the country by another part of the country that was the principal cause of the Civil War.

During the course of the Civil War it became necessary to raise tariff rates for the purpose of securing needed revenue. From 1865 to 1870 the tariff on dutiable goods averaged 48 per cent and nearly 44 per cent on free and dutiable goods. By 1872 the country was again nearing the crest of a wave of prosperity. The Government's receipts were excessive, and rates were reduced to 39 per cent on dutiable and 28 per cent on free and dutiable. From 1876 to 1883 the average rate was 43 per cent on dutiable and 30 per cent on free and dutiable. From 1884 to 1890 the rates were 45 per cent on dutiable and 30 per cent on free and dutiable. In 1890 the so-called McKinley tariff was adopted. In the next three fiscal years 1892 to 1894 the average rates proved to be 49 per cent on dutiable articles and 22 per cent on free and dutiable articles.

From 1894 to 1897 under the Wilson-Gorman Act the rates were 41 per cent and 21 per cent respectively. Under the Dingley Tariff Act of 1897 the average rate on dutiable goods went as high as 52 per cent, the highest in the history of the country, while on free and dutiable goods it went to 30 per cent.

The average tariff rate between 1897 and 1909 amounted to 46 per cent on dutiable and 26 per cent on free and dutiable goods. Under the Payne-Aldrich Act of 1909 effective until 1913, the tariff on dutiable goods was reduced by 2.3 per cent and on free and dutiable goods by 4 per cent.

This law, however, because of legislative deadlocks from 1911 to 1913 remained substantially unaltered. In the latter year under President Wilson, the tariff was reduced so that in the first eight months of the new law the ad valorem rate on dutiable goods proved to be 36 per cent, about 4 per cent less than in the preceding year, and the rate on free and dutiable goods together amounted to about 14 per cent, or about 3 per cent less than in the preceding year. During the war period, however, commerce was so disturbed that comparisons are not possible.

The changes in tariff rates since that time are generally familiar and have been referred to heretofore in these remarks. With this picture of the tariff history of the United States in mind, let us analyze the manner in which the agricultural sections of the United States have been affected by our long American policy of a high protective tariff.

PRICE OF EXPORTABLE SURPLUS FIXES PRICE OF WHOLE CROP

It is a matter of elementary knowledge that when a surplus is raised of any crop which has to be sold in the markets of the world, the price paid for that surplus fixes the price paid for the crop as a whole. No knowledge in the field of economics is more elementary, and still it would be no exaggeration to state that a great majority of the protectionist Members of Congress either are not possessed of this elementary knowledge or at least wholly fail to see or understand its practical application in the everyday economic life of the Nation.

I prefer to believe that this is true, rather than that these same gentlemen, knowing the situation, would be willing to be party to any program which deliberately sought the exploitation of one part of the country at the expense of another. This belief on my part is not due entirely to a charitable feeling for my protectionist colleagues but is also based in part upon the understanding of this situation evinced by their speeches that I have heard them give upon the floor of this House.

The spectacle of legislators enacting legislation and discussing their reasons pro and con for such legislation apparently oblivious of this elementary economic principle is without parallel in the physical sciences. It would be like a group of engineers unable to add or subtract designing plans for the construction of a suspension bridge. The spectacle of the United States Government spending several million dollars to construct a perpetual-motion plant at Vincennes, Ind., could not be more ludicrous.

The hearing on the Crowther bill before the Ways and Means Committee runs true to form. They seek to secure an increase in tariff rates at this time in the same manner that increases in tariff rates have been secured heretofore. A group of manufacturers from different fields have appeared before the committee and stated that they can not compete successfully with foreign competitors; that it will be necessary, therefore, to secure an increase in tariff rates in order that it will be possible for them to compete and maintain an American standard of wages. Behind it all runs the naïve assumption that it is possible in this way to put every group in the same relative position of advantage that is enjoyed by every other group.

If this ideal situation were ever attained, then we should have every group standing in the same relation to every other group that would be the case if we had free trade. Obviously this is the last thing that the industrialists desire. They know that certain groups can be protected by a high protective tariff, while other groups can not. In other words, a tariff is effective and beneficial to one group to the extent that it is discriminatory, and any tariff is effective only to the extent that it is discriminatory.

But the protectionist Members feel grieved at such unorthodoxy coming from a Republican. For why should anyone be so unkind as to question their beneficence? Do they not stand at all times ready to hear anyone who questions the tariff rates? In other words, Come unto us all ye that are heavy laden, and we will raise the tariffs on the articles that you produce sufficiently to make up for the cost of production here and abroad.

Let us proceed to see if this theory works out in this manner for goods that are on an export basis. The classical illustration in the United States would be the cotton crop. The exploitation of the cotton-raising sections of the United States for the benefit of the industrial sections is one of the major threads that run through our history of the last 120 years. It is a matter, however, with which others are much better qualified to deal than I am.

I will, therefore, take for the purpose of my illustration the case of wheat and attempt to trace this process of exploitation through from beginning to end. I will take the case of wheat for the reason that I am thoroughly familiar with this phase of our history of sectional exploitation through first-hand knowledge. I was born and raised on a wheat farm in North Dakota, and still have on my hands the management of this farm. I have furthermore analyzed in detail the effect of a high protective tariff on wheat. (Congressional Record, January 11, 1932.) At that time I received a press release from that great economist, Mr. Arthur M. Hyde, Secretary of the United States Department of Agriculture, wherein he pointed out the tremendous advantages that had accrued to the American wheat farmer as the result of a 42-cent tariff on wheat.

After showing in detail that there was no advantage and that there could be no advantage to the American wheat farmer through a high protective tariff save for that small percentage of the wheat crop high in protein, I charged the Secretary of Agriculture with being a deliberate falsifier and political propagandist. My charge, though given wide publicity at the time, has not been answered. It can not be answered.

THE EXPLOITATION OF THE WHEAT FARMER BY A HIGH PROTECTIVE TARIFF POSSIBLE WHEN THE UNITED STATES WAS A DEBTOR NATION

In order to explain this to those gentlemen who may not be familiar with the situation I want to trace this process historically through the last 70 years.

In so far as the wheat raisers are concerned, it is necessary to go back to the first Republican National Convention held in Chicago in 1860, the convention at which Lincoln was nominated. At that time the farmers of the East and mid-West were anxious to secure free western land into which they might migrate. They were anxious for the passage of a homestead law whereby they might secure this land in return for moving West and making their homes upon it. This, however, was not possible in the face of the opposition of the industrial East, which held the balance of power. They did not propose to permit the pioneers to come into possession of this land without acquiring some benefit for themselves. In the first place, the frontier was in competition with their industrial plants for labor. If a laboring man was not paid as much for his work in the factories as he could earn by going West and taking up a homestead, he would naturally make a change. To make the frontier available to the laboring man and then to be forced to compete with the frontier for labor was something that the industrialists did not propose to do. They, therefore, demanded a protective-tariff policy for industry in exchange for their consent to the enactment of the homestead law. not because they owned this western land but because they held the balance of power and were able to dictate terms.

It will be seen, therefore, that the western land was really not given to the settlers, as they supposed when they received a patent from the United States Government. The homesteaders merely secured a lease upon this land whereby they became croppers. They received a part of the proceeds, while the balance of the proceeds went to the industrial East. This was accomplished by compelling these people to spend the money that they secured through selling their produce in a world market and using it to pay enhanced prices for goods purchased in a protected market. At first this arrangement was not so onerous. The tariff was lower. We were a debtor Nation. We were able to sell our crops abroad at a good price, because fortunately our European creditors realized that if they were ever to be paid for the money they had lent to the industrialists of this country they would have to accept payment in goods. They did not erect tariff walls against the importation of these goods. On top of this the fertility of the soil had not been

But the situation to-day is completely changed. The fertility of the soil is gone. It has been mined out, and the price for which it was sold in the markets of Europe has been donated to the upbuilding of the industrial East. During this period of exploitation our agricultural products were our principal exports. In fact, they were almost our sole exports. During this period our industrialists borrowed heavily from the older nations of Europe in order to build our railroads and industrial plants. These loans were repaid through the sale of our agricultural surplus abroad.

The importance of our export of agricultural products is well illustrated in the panic of 1896. During that year it looked as though we would not be able to pay our obligations maturing abroad. It looked as though we would be compelled to abandon the gold standard. Commodity prices fell until August of 1896, when it became apparent that there would be a world shortage in the production of wheat. We were able to export our surplus of wheat to sell same in the markets of Europe for a good price, material obligations, and the gold standard was saved. The issue of 16 to 1 became a dead issue and has remained so until recently. This incident is alluded to because of the mistaken ideas regarding this period of our history that were expressed on the floor of this House three or four days ago, during the discussion of House Resolution 8557.

But despite this fact the lot of the wheat farmer was not so bad. Many of them had come from countries where they were able to eke out the barest margin of subsistence. The fertility of the soil to which they were given a patent by the United States Government was well-nigh inexhaustible. The price that they received for their grain in the markets of Europe enabled them to live comfortably even though they were compelled to donate a major part of their profit to the industrial sections of the country. This sectional exploitation might have gone on much longer had we remained a debtor nation, particularly so long as our creditors were willing to have us sell our agriculture in their markets without erecting tariff barriers against us.

Following the World War we ceased to be a debtor nation and have now had thrust upon us a position of world primacy, as a result of the investment abroad of approximately eleven or twelve billion dollars owing by foreign governments to the Government of the United States, and approximately fifteen or sixteen billion dollars more due and owing by foreign governments and citizens to the citizens of the United States.

It is indeed encouraging to note that after 70 years of exploitation of the wheat farmer there are at this day to be found in Congress Representatives from some of these Western States who are beginning to appreciate the process whereby they have been exploited. I refer to the testimony of Mr. McGugin, of Kansas, before the Ways and Means Committee on the 20th of January, 1933:

Let me say to you, my friend from New York [Mr. Crowther], you have nurtured at the nipple of American agriculture for 60 years, but that cow is dry and you will nurture there no more until you feed her.

That it should have taken so long before any of the Representatives from the wheat-raising sections should have discovered the means and method by which they have been exploited is the strongest commentary on the general lack of understanding of economic matters which obtains among the rank and file of the common people.

At some future date when we shall have entered upon an era of functional control of our economic system, and our industries and natural resources shall be managed for the benefit of the people of the country as a whole, it is almost certain that the academicians of that day will be at a complete loss for any adequate explanation of the fact that certain sections of the United States were represented for a period of more than half a century by men who, judging from their legislative records, apparently conspired to betray the economic interests of the sections that they represented. Undoubtedly anthropologists of that day will seek to disinter the bones of some of these Representatives in the belief that an examination of their skulls will shed some light upon this unexplainable phase of the Nation's economic history.

CONTINUED EXPLOITATION OF AGRICULTURE NO LONGER POSSIBLE SINCE THE UNITED STATES HAS BECOME A GREAT CREDITOR NATION

As heretofore stated we have between eleven and twelve billion dollars owing by foreign governments to the Government of the United States. We have between fifteen and sixteen billion dollars of money due and owing by foreign governments and their citizens to the citizens of the United States. It is our dealing with this situation that has rendered completely prostrate the agricultural sections of the United States that have been the subject of systematic exploitation for a hundred years. As long as this country was a debtor Nation, a high protective-tariff policy had some justification from a national standpoint. It helped this country maintain a favorable balance of trade and in that way meet its contractual obligations abroad. Of course it made the exploited sections bear the brunt of the payment of these obligations, but at least the country as a whole received some benefit therefrom, and the industrial sections in particular.

Moreover, it was possible for the United States to pay these obligations because the financial policies of our creditor countries were dictated by men old and wise in matters of international finance. They knew that they could only be paid through the importation of American goods, and they also knew that if they erected barriers against the importation of these goods it would probably result in compelling the people of the United States to default on their obligations.

Let us now examine our own policies, since we have become the great creditor Nation of the world. Instead of recognizing that our foreign investments can only be paid in goods or services, we have set out to maintain a favorable balance of trade at all times. In short, we have been able to maintain a favorable balance of trade amounting to more than $500,000,000 a year since we became a great creditor Nation. Whereas if we were to have permitted our foreign debtors to merely pay interest on their loans and keep these obligations alive, it would have necessitated a balance of trade against us amounting from $500,000,000 to $750,000,000 a year, not to mention the repayment of any part of the principal. But when the question is asked of the protectionist Members of Congress as to how they expect foreign nations to repay these obligations unless they be permitted to pay in goods or services, they answer with the utmost hauteur that it must be understood that international trade by its nature is triangular, and that these loans may be repaid by the extension of credit.

It is incredible that grown men should even believe this to be an answer. It is, of course, true that we need not buy goods from England to pay for goods sold to England. England may sell to France and we may buy from France, but ultimately the transaction will have to show up in our balance of trade. And if we maintain a favorable balance of trade at all times, clearly these debts can never be repaid. To say that our excess in foreign exports as shown in a favorable balance of trade can be paid for by the transfer of credit is merely to say that there is no use in paying back any money borrowed as long as one is able to borrow additional sums. Clearly neither this Government nor its bankers nor its investors will go on extending credit to foreign nations when it becomes apparent that we are going to follow a policy whereby these loans in all probability can never be repaid.

As time has gone on it has become increasingly difficult to maintain a favorable balance of trade, but the mercantilists of this country who are in control of its Government believe that in spite of our position as a creditor nation we can maintain a favorable balance of trade at all times if we only raise the tariff walls high enough.

Let us examine the effect of this policy upon our foreign debtors who have contractual obligations to meet here. As we raise our tariff walls constantly higher it becomes necessary for these debtors to pile a constantly increasing quantity of goods against our tariff walls in order to get a certain number of units into this country. These debtors will naturally exert every effort to meet their contractual obligations. They do not desire to default. As a consequence they will manufacture more and more cheaply in order to meet their obligations here. It is not a matter of choice as far as they are concerned. It is a matter of stern business necessity. It is because we are forcing them into a position where they will be obliged to default that the people of these debtor countries are beginning to hate us.

And still upon the floor of Congress I have heard numerous representatives of the industrial East denounce European nations for dumping their goods upon our markets. Can not these gentlemen understand that by the very nature of things our debtors must dump their goods upon our markets no matter how small a price they may bring, if they are to meet their contractual obligations here? Can not these gentlemen understand that capitalism by its very nature rests upon the sanctity of contract, upon the necessity of meeting contractual obligations, no matter how onerous they may be? Can not these gentlemen understand that with our high tariff walls we are forcing our creditors to either do this or else default upon their contractual obligations?

Because of the large amount of debts payable in gold owing by the governments of other countries and their citizens to the Government of the United States and to its citizens, we can, if we insist upon following a high protective tariff policy, drive the commodity prices of the world down to the vanishing point, providing repudiation of these debts does not first take place, which of course it must. This is not a matter that should be difficult of comprehension. It is a process that is wholly within the realm of elementary physics. The whole proposition can be fully stated in Newton's third law of motion, that "to every force action there is an equal, opposite, and direct reaction."

There is nothing new or revolutionary about this statement. It is a matter that has been fully realized by every informed economist in the country since we became a creditor nation, barring, of course, a few special pleaders. In 1926 Senator Oscar W. Underwood, who was perhaps the country's foremost authority on the tariff in the field of politics, declared that—

Unless the excessive Fordney-McCumber rates are revised downward to reasonable competitive figures, the American people can have no right to expect European nations to pay their war debts. There must be revision of the rates downward or this country and the world will face distress and disaster. We can not go on lending money to European nations to permit them to buy our goods. We have reached the crest of the wave in those loans. There must be an end to them; and in place of a flow of American money to Europe in the form of loans there must be a circulation of goods and services between the United States and the European debtors. For purely selfish reasons the United States should be interested in the prosperity of Europe. We must exchange goods with the European nations if they are to get rid of their crushing money debts.

This statement of Senator Underwood, made seven years ago, stands out to-day as a remarkable piece of prophecy. And still what he said was fully understood at that time by every informed economist in the land. The only remarkable thing about it is the fact that there should have been a man in politics capable of seeing and understanding the situation.

In other words, to use the illustration of Samuel Johnson, "People willingly go miles to see a dog walk on his hind legs, not because he walks as well as a man, but because he is able to walk at all."

THE TARIFF NOW A 2-EDGED SWORD AGAINST AGRICULTURE ON AN EXPORT BASIS

In the preceding paragraphs I have pointed out that because of the large contractual obligations payable here in gold we can, by the simple expedient of raising our tariff, force the commodity prices of the world down to almost any given level. To a Nation, however, whose agricultural output and industrial output are geared up to a foreign export basis, the effect is immediately felt at home, first in those agricultural crops and industries that are on an export basis, and later on by all industry, whether on an export basis or not. As a result, the cotton farmer to-day receives only 36.6 per cent as much for his cotton as he did in 1926. During the past two years the wheat farmers have been selling wheat for 25 cents a bushel that it has cost them three times that sum to raise. The wheat farmer to-day receives only 48.9 per cent as much for his wheat crop as he did in 1913, while bread in Chicago sells for 151.8 per cent as much as it did in 1913. He receives for his cowhides only 22.8 per cent as much as he did in 1913, while on the other hand he pays 200.4 per cent as much for harnesses and 197.1 per cent as much for shoes as he did in 1913. The reason why the wheat and cotton farmers receive such low prices for their crops is due to the fact that they are on an export basis, and the price paid is the price which they will bring in a world commodity market forced down by our high protective tariff policies.

into the United States of their manufactured goods. While it is possible to convince the American people that their markets are being flooded by the importation of foreign goods, even though the figures show that in the last eight years there has been a decrease from four and a half billion dollars a year to one and one-third billion dollars a year, on the other hand, however, is a factor that is genuinely serious. Where our exports in 1925 amounted to ap-

It will be seen therefore why our wheat farmer or cotton farmer or tobacco farmer and our corn and hog farmer has been brought to complete and total ruination. He is compelled to receive for his products a price fixed in the depreciated commodity markets of the world. What he receives he is not permitted to spend in the cheap commodity markets of the world, but he is forced to spend it in the highly protected markets of the United States.

But, after all, this is no longer a matter of prime importance except and in so far as it is important that the fine minds of the industrialists of the Nation should be able to see and comprehend why a policy of sectional exploitation worked at a time when one section was capable of being exploited but why it can not work when that section has gotten past the possibility of exploitation.

The industrialists of the country are like a blind man driving the old gray mare—agriculture. In days gone by they found that they could speed up the rate at which they were going by simply applying the lash to the mare, and usually the speed at which they went was in proportion to the severity with which the lash was applied. But now the old gray mare is sick—sick nigh unto death. Even if the lash were applied with fourfold fury, it would not start things moving again. The old gray mare can go no farther. It might even be advisable to increase the heavy tariff rates fourfold on dutiable and nondutiable goods if only to show the high-tariff proponents that further exploitation is impossible. But it would do no good, for the industrialists of the land are blind.

But when the plight of the farmer is presented to the industrialists of the country they demand to know why the wheat and cotton farmers do not restrict their production to the demands of the local market in the same way that has been done by the industrialists. The answer is of course obvious, for the individual farmer is helpless. His individual salvation lies in the field of efficiency, although it may have become perfectly apparent that what may be a means of salvation for him as an individual, if practiced universally, will be the ruination of the group.

Besides it comes with ill grace from the industrialists to charge the wheat farmer with having overexpanded the production of wheat. They should bear in mind the fact that the success of the economic system which they have built and maintained has been possible only through the exploitation of the wheat farmer and the cotton farmer for the past 70 or 100 years. And, moreover, the extent and success of their exploitation have been immediately dependent upon the extent to which these farmers were able to expand their farming activities.

A year ago I am told that 47,000 people in the State of North Dakota were dependent upon the Red Cross for the barest necessities of life. When it has been proposed to relieve some of this distress by taxing the wealth of the country, I have heard two Representatives of two great industrial States protest against having their wealth taxed for the purpose of feeding the paupers of other States. They can not see, or else they ignore the fact, that it is the exploitation of these sections in years past that has built the industrial wealth of the country. To leave them now without help would be like turning a horse that has outlived its usefulness into a bleak pasture in the middle of winter to die. Any farmer who did do this would be promptly arrested by the humane authorities.

BREAKDOWN OF GOVERNMENTAL POLICY

It is a rather singular thing that the American people are apparently unable to see that if we are to export Americanmade goods to foreign countries we must expect to permit those countries to pay for these goods by the importation it is possible to convince the American people that their markets are being flooded by the importation of foreign goods, even though the figures show that in the last eight years there has been a decrease from four and a half billion dollars a year to one and one-third billion dollars a year, on the other hand, however, is a factor that is genuinely serious. Where our exports in 1925 amounted to approximately $5,000,000,000, our exports last year amounted to only $1,617,000,000. The American people can understand the significance of the importation of cheap foreign goods, but they do not understand that to a country whose industries are geared up to an export basis there is something far more serious that can be dumped upon our shores than cheap foreign goods, and that is a total inability of these countries to buy. Dumping their cheap foreign goods may compel our workingmen to work for reduced wages. But dumping their inability to purchase upon us causes millions of our working men to walk the streets looking

But perhaps it is unfair to criticize the American people when they are being constantly misled by politicians, newspapers, and industrialists who are seeking their own special advantage at the expense of the rest of the country.

But it becomes more difficult to understand how the Government of the United States, engaging the best counsel that can be procured, will embark upon a policy that is contradictory and self-destructive. I refer now to the policy of this Government during the past 12 years. After the Republican Party went into power 12 years ago the international bankers demanded the cooperation of the Government in helping them unload on the American investors huge quantities of foreign securities. The part played by the Government of the United States is well set forth in the Annual Report of the Department of Commerce for 1928, found on page 135:

A record-breaking volume of foreign stocks and bonds was offered to the American investing public last year. This partly explains the increased use made of the store of information on the finances of foreign governments and corporations that is on file in the bureau. American underwriters of foreign securities are now turning to the finance and investment division in constantly growing numbers for data to guide them in foreign commitments.

It will be noticed, therefore, that President Hoover, as Secretary of Commerce in 1928, took credit for helping the international bankers unload these securities upon an American investing public.

After he became President the industrialists of Pennsylvania and the East came to him and demanded their pay. They wanted increased tariffs. And as a result the Fordney-McCumber schedules of 28.22 per cent, were raised to approximately 45 per cent under the Smoot-Hawley law. It is rather significant that at this time more than 1,000 leading American economists filed a protest with the President of the United States setting forth the fact that an increase in tariffs could only result in world-wide disaster. That there must be a reduction in tariffs if a general world breakdown was to be avoided. But despite these facts the Smoot-Hawley bill was enacted into law.

This transaction is truly portentious. In the first place, the Government of the United States is apparently unable to resist the demands of organized corporate wealth.

Had either of the two immediate predecessors of our present President been in office, the situation might have been overlooked, for it is conceivable that they might not have understood the circumstances and have signed the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill without understanding its real import. This, however, can not be said of our present President, who is a man of ability and conversant with international affairs.

At the very time, however, that it becomes evident that the Government can not maintain a consistent governmental policy as against the demands of great corporate wealth, it also becomes equally apparent that the great interlocking combinations of corporate wealth, which controls the economic life of the Nation, are also apparently unable to maintain any unified and consistent policy.

In the present instance we see the great bankers unloading upon the American people billions of dollars of foreign securities which can never be paid if we are to embark upon a high protective-tariff policy and then we see the Government embarking on a tariff policy, the result of which will inevitably be to wipe out approximately $25,000,000,000 of American capital invested abroad. This is equal to half of the value of our agricultural land of the United States. Such an amount of capital can not be wiped out without having the repercussion felt throughout our whole economic

As President Hoover signed the Smoot-Hawley tariff law. there must have come to his mind the words of Madame de Pompadour, mistress of Louis XV, "Après nous le déluge"after us the deluge.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as

To Mr. SUMMERS of Washington (at the request of Mr. JOHNSON of Washington), indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. GLOVER, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. Lewis, for to-day, on account of illness.

INVESTIGATION OF CERTAIN PUBLIC-UTILITY CORPORATIONS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk House Joint Resolution 572, to provide for further investigation of certain public-utility corporations engaged in interstate commerce and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the House joint resolution.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, as I understand from the prior statement of the gentleman from Texas the amount provided by this resolution will conclude the investigation which has been going on now for two years or more.

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes. Mr. STAFFORD. And is exigent because the gentleman wishes to have this work continued during the interim between the adjournment of this Congress and the convening of the special session.

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. This is a continuance of an investigation that was authorized some time ago.

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes. It is needed to complete the investigation, and it is the hope that it will be completed in less than 10 months.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the House joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That for the purpose of obtaining information necessary as a basis for legislation, those members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the Seventy-second Congress who are Members elect to the Seventy-third Congress, or a majority of them, after March 4, 1933, and until the organization of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of the Seventy-third Congress are authorized, as a committee, by subcommittee or otherwise, to continue the investigation begun under authority of H. Res. 59 of the Seventy-second Congress.

SEC. 2. For such purposes the committee is authorized to select a chairman, and the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act at such times and places in the District authorized to sit and act at such times and places in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, to hold such hearings, to employ such experts and such clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to take such testimony, to have such printing and binding done, and to make such expenditures as it deems necessary, and oaths or affirmations may be administered by any member of the committee.

SEC. 3. Subpænas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman and shall be served by any person designature by him.

SEC. 3. Suppenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman and shall be served by any person designated by him. The provisions of sections 102, 103, and 104 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 2, secs. 192, 193, and 194) shall be applicable with respect to any person summoned as a witness under the authority of this resolution in the same manner as such provisions are applicable with respect to any person summoned as a witness in the case of an inquiry before a committee of the House of Representatives

House of Representatives.

SEC. 4. The expenses of the committee, not to exceed $50,000, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House upon vouchers signed by the chairman and approved by the Committee on Accounts.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed; and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet tomorrow at 11 o'clock.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I inquire whether to-morrow is going to be given over largely to general debate on the Navy bill?

Mr. AYRES. I may say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I expect practically the entire day will be consumed in general debate.

Mr. SNELL. I am quite sure general debate will occupy the entire day, for we have a great many requests for time. The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. Under the general order of the Senate the Senator from Illinois [Mr. GLENN] will now read Washington's Farewell Address.

READING OF WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS

Mr. GLENN read the address, as follows:

To the people of the United States.

FRIENDS AND FELLOW-CITIZENS: The period for a new election of a Citizen to administer the Executive Government of the United States, being not far distant, and the time actually arrived, when your thoughts must be employed in designating the person, who is to be clothed with that important trust, it appears to me proper, especially as it may conduce to a more distinct expression of the public voice, that I should now apprise you of the resolution I have formed, to decline being considered among the number of those, out of whom a choice is to be made.

I beg you, at the same time, to do me the justice to be assured, that this resolution has not been taken, without a strict regard to all the considerations appertaining to the relation, which binds a dutiful citizen to his country—and that, in withdrawing the tender of service which silence in my situation might imply, I am influenced by no diminution of zeal for your future interest, no deficiency of grateful respect for your past kindness; but act under and supported by a full conviction that the step is compatible with both.

The acceptance of, and continuance hitherto in, the office to which your suffrages have twice called me, have been a uniform sacrifice of inclination to the opinion of duty, and to a deference for what appeared to be your desire. I constantly hoped, that it would have been much earlier in my power, consistently with motives, which I was not at liberty to disregard, to return to that retirement, from which I had been reluctantly drawn. The strength of my inclination to do this, previous to the last election, had even led to the preparation of an address to declare it to you; but mature reflection on the then perplexed and critical posture of our affairs with foreign Nations, and the unanimous advice of persons entitled to my confidence, impelled me to abandon the idea.

I rejoice that the state of your concerns, external as well as internal, no longer renders the pursuit of inclination incompatible with the sentiment of duty, or propriety; and am persuaded, whatever partiality may be retained for my services, that in the present circumstances of our country, you will not disapprove my determination to retire.

The impressions, with which I first undertook the arduous trust, were explained on the proper occasion. In the discharge of this trust, I will only say, that I have, with good intentions, contributed towards the organization and administration of the government, the best exertions of which a very fallible judgment was capable. Not unconscious, in the outset, of the inferiority of my qualifications, experience in my own eyes, perhaps still more in the eyes of others, has strengthened the motives to diffidence of myself; and every day the increasing weight of years admonishes me more and more, that the shade of retirement is as necessary to me as it will be welcome. Satisfied, that, if any circumstances have given peculiar value to my services, they were temporary, I have the consolation to believe, that, while choice and prudence invite me to quit the political scene, patriotism does not forbid it.

In looking forward to the moment, which is intended to terminate the career of my public life, my feelings do not permit me to suspend the deep acknowledgment of that debt of gratitude, which I owe to my beloved country, for the many honors it has conferred upon me; still more for the steadfast confidence with which it has supported me; and for the opportunities I have thence enjoyed of manifesting my inviolable attachment, by services faithful and persevering, though in usefulness unequal to my zeal. If benefits have resulted to our country from these services, let it always be remembered to your praise, and as an instructive example in our annals, that under circumstances in which the Passions agitated in every direction were liable to mislead, amidst appearances sometimes dubious, vicissitudes of fortune often discouraging, in situations in which not unfrequently want of success has countenanced the spirit of criticism, the constancy of your support was the essential prop of the efforts, and a guarantee of the plans by which they were effected. Profoundly penetrated with this idea, I shall carry it with me to the grave, as a strong incitement to unceasing vows that Heaven may continue to you the choicest tokens of its beneficence-that your union and brotherly affection may be perpetual—that the free constitution, which is the work of your hands, may be sacredly maintained—that its administration in every department may be stamped with wisdom and virtue—that, in fine, the happiness of the people of these States, under the auspices of liberty, may be made complete, by so careful a preservation and so prudent a use of this blessing as will acquire to them the glory of recommending it to the applause, the affection, and adoption of every nation which is yet a stranger to it.

Here, perhaps, I ought to stop. But a solicitude for your welfare, which cannot end but with my life, and the apprehension of danger, natural to that solicitude, urge me, on an occasion like the present, to offer to your solemn contemplation, and to recommend to your frequent review, some sentiments; which are the result of much reflection, of no inconsiderable observation and which appear to me all important to the permanency of your felicity as a People. These will be offered to you with the more freedom, as you can only see in them the disinterested warnings of a parting friend, who can possibly have no personal motive to bias his counsels. Nor can I forget, as an encouragement to it your indulgent reception of my sentiments on a former and not dissimilar occasion.

Interwoven as is the love of liberty with every ligament of your hearts, no recommendation of mine is necessary to fortify or confirm the attachment.

The Unity of Government which constitutes you one people, is also now dear to you. It is justly so; for it is a main Pillar in the Edifice of your real independence; the support of your tranquillity at home; your peace abroad; of your safety; of your prosperity in every shape; of that very Liberty, which you so highly prize. But, as it is easy to foresee, that, from different causes, and from different quarters, much pains will be taken, many artifices employed, to weaken in your minds the conviction of this truth; as this is the point in your political fortress against which the batteries of internal and external enemies will be most constantly and actively (though often covertly and insidiously) directed, it is of infinite moment, that you should properly estimate the immense value of your national Union to your collective and individual happiness; that you should cherish a cordial, habitual, and immovable attachment to it; accustoming yourselves to think and speak of it as of the Palladium of your political safety and prosperity; watching for its preservation with jealous anxiety; discountenancing whatever may suggest even a suspicion that it can in any event be abandoned, and indignantly frowning upon the first dawning of every attempt to alienate any portion of our Country from the rest, or to enfeeble the sacred ties which now link together the various parts.

For this you have every inducement of sympathy and interest. Citizens by birth or choice of a common country, that country has a right to concentrate your affections. The name of American, which belongs to you, in your national capacity, must always exalt the just pride of Patriotism, more than any appellation derived from local discriminations. With slight shades of difference, you have the same Religion, Manners, Habits, and political Principles. You have in a common cause fought and triumphed together. The Independence and Liberty you possess are the work of joint counsels, and joint efforts—of common dangers, sufferings and successes.

But these considerations, however powerfully they address themselves to your sensibility, are greatly outweighed by those, which apply more immediately to your Interest. Here every portion of our country finds the most commanding motives for carefully guarding and preserving the Union of the whole.

The North in an unrestrained intercourse with the South, protected by the equal Laws of a common government, finds in the productions of the latter great additional resources of maritime and commercial enterprise-and precious materials of manufacturing industry. The South in the same intercourse, benefiting by the agency of the North, sees its agriculture grow and its commerce expand. Turning partly into its own channels the seamen of the North, it finds its particular navigation invigorated; and, while it contributes, in different ways, to nourish and increase the general mass of the national navigation, it looks forward to the protection of a maritime strength to which itself is unequally adapted. The East, in a like intercourse with the West, already finds, and in the progressive improvement of interior communications, by land and water, will more and more find, a valuable vent for the commodities which it brings from abroad, or manufactures at home. The West derives from the East supplies requisite to its growth and comfort, and what is perhaps of still greater consequence, it must of necessity owe the secure enjoyment of indispensable outlets for its own productions to the weight, influence, and the future maritime strength of the Atlantic side of the Union, directed by an indissoluble community of interest, as one Nation. Any other tenure by which the West can hold this essential advantage, whether derived from its own separate strength, or from an apostate and unnatural connection with any foreign Power, must be intrinsically precarious.

While then every part of our Country thus feels an immediate and particular interest in Union, all the parts combined in the united mass of means and efforts cannot fail to find greater strength, greater resource, proportionably greater security from external danger, a less frequent interruption of their Peace by foreign Nations; and, what is of inestimable value! they must derive from Union an exemption from those broils and wars between themselves, which so frequently afflict neighboring countries, not tied together by the same government; which their own rivalships alone would be sufficient to produce; but which opposite foreign alliances, attachments, and intrigues would stimulate and embitter. Hence likewise they will avoid the necessity of those overgrown Military establishments, which under any form of government, are inauspicious to liberty, and which are to be regarded as particularly hostile to Republican Liberty: In this sense it is, that your Union ought to be considered as a main prop of your liberty, and that the love of the one ought to endear to you the preservation of the other.

These considerations speak a persuasive language to every reflecting and virtuous mind, and exhibit the continuance of the Union as a primary object of Patriotic desire. Is there a doubt, whether a common government can embrace so large a sphere? Let experience solve it. To listen to mere speculation in such a case were criminal. We are authorized to hope that a proper organization of the whole, with the auxiliary agency of governments for the respective subdivisions, will afford a happy issue to the experiment. "Tis well worth a fair and full experiment. With such powerful and obvious motives to Union, affecting all parts of our country while experience shall not have demonstrated its impracticability, there will always be reason to distrust the patriotism of those, who in any quarter may endeavor to weaken its bands.

In contemplating the causes which may disturb our Union, it occurs as matter of serious concern, that any ground should have been furnished for characterizing parties by Geographical discriminations-Northern and Southern-Atlantic and Western; whence designing men may endeavor to excite a belief, that there is a real difference of local interests and views. One of the expedients of Party to acquire influence, within particular districts, is to misrepresent the opinions and aims of other districts. You cannot shield yourselves too much against the jealousies and heart burnings which spring from these misrepresentations; they tend to render alien to each other those who ought to be bound together by fraternal affection. The inhabitants of our Western country have lately had a useful lesson on this head. They have seen, in the negotiation by the Executive, and in the unanimous ratification by the Senate, of the treaty with Spain, and in the universal satisfaction at that event, throughout the United States, a decisive proof how unfounded were the suspicions propagated among them of a policy in the General Government and in the Atlantic States unfriendly to their interests in regard to the Mississippi. They have been witnesses to the formation of two Treaties, that with Great Britain, and that with Spain, which secure to them every thing they could desire in respect to our Foreign Relations, towards confirming their prosperity. Will it not be their wisdom to rely for the preservation of these advantages on the Union by which they were procured? Will they not henceforth be deaf to those advisers, if such there are, who would sever them from their Brethren and connect them with Aliens?

To the efficacy and permanency of your Union, a Government for the whole is indispensable. No alliances however strict between the parts can be an adequate substitute. They must inevitably experience the infractions and interruptions which all alliances in all times have experienced. Sensible of this momentous truth, you have improved upon your first essay, by the adoption of a Constitution of Government, better calculated than your former for an intimate Union, and for the efficacious management of your common concerns. This government, the offspring of our own choice uninfluenced and unawed, adopted upon full investigation and mature deliberation, completely free in its principles, in the distribution of its powers, uniting security with energy, and containing within itself a provision for its own amendment, has a just claim to your confidence and your support. Respect for its authority, compliance with its Laws, acquiescence in its measures, are duties enjoined by the fundamental maxims of true Liberty. The basis of our political systems is the right of the people to make and to alter their Constitutions of Government. But the Constitution which at any time exists, 'till changed by an explicit and authen-alliances, attachments, and intrigues would stimulate and | tic act of the whole People, is sacredly obligatory upon all. embitter. Hence likewise they will avoid the necessity of those overgrown Military establishments, which under any form of government, are inauspicious to liberty, and which ual to obey the established Government.

All obstructions to the execution of the Laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle, and of fatal tendency. They serve to organize faction, to give it an artificial and extraordinary force—to put in the place of the delegated will of the Nation, the will of a party; often a small but artful and enterprising minority of the community; and, according to the alternate triumphs of different parties, to make the public administration the mirror of the ill-concerted and incongruous projects of faction, rather than the organ of consistent and wholesome plans digested by common councils, and modified by mutual interests.

However combinations or associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely, in the course of time and things, to become potent engines, by which cunning, ambitious, and unprincipled men will be enabled to subvert the Power of the People and to usurp for themselves the reins of Government; destroying afterwards the very engines, which have lifted them to unjust dominion.

Towards the preservation of your Government and the permanency of your present happy state, it is requisite, not only that you steadily discountenance irregular oppositions to its acknowledged authority, but also that you resist with care the spirit of innovation upon its principles, however specious the pretexts. One method of assault may be to effect, in the forms of the Constitution, alterations which will impair the energy of the system, and thus to undermine what cannot be directly overthrown. In all the changes to which you may be invited, remember that time and habit are at least as necessary to fix the true character of Governments, as of other human institutions—that experience is the surest standard, by which to test the real tendency of the existing Constitution of a Country—that facility in changes upon the credit of mere hypothesis and opinoin exposes to perpetual change, from the endless variety of hypothesis and opinion; and remember, especially, that, for the efficient management of your common interests, in a country so extensive as ours, a Government of as much vigor as is consistent with the perfect security of Liberty is indispensable. Liberty itself will find in such a Government, with powers properly distributed and adjusted, its surest Guardian. It is, indeed, little else than a name, where the Government is too feeble to withstand the enterprises of faction, to confine each member of the society within the limits prescribed by the laws, and to maintain all in the secure and tranquil enjoyment of the rights of person and property.

I have already intimated to you the danger of Parties in the State, with particular reference to the founding of them on Geographical discriminations. Let me now take a more comprehensive view, and warn you in the most solemn manner against the baneful effects of the Spirit of Party, generally.

This Spirit, unfortunately, is inseparable from our nature, having its root in the strongest passions of the human mind. It exists under different shapes in all Governments, more or less stifled, controlled, or repressed; but, in those of the popular form, it is seen in its greatest rankness, and is truly their worst enemy.

The alternate domination of one faction over another, sharpened by the spirit of revenge natural to party dissension, which in different ages and countries has perpetrated the most horrid enormities, is itself a frightful despotism. But this leads at length to a more formal and permanent despotism. The disorders and miseries, which result, gradually incline the minds of men to seek security and repose in the absolute power of an Individual: and sooner or later the chief of some prevailing faction, more able or more fortunate than his competitors, turns this disposition to the purposes of his own elevation, on the ruins of Public Liberty.

Without looking forward to an extremity of this kind (which nevertheless ought not to be entirely out of sight), the common and continual mischiefs of the spirit of Party are sufficient to make it the interest and duty of a wise people to discourage and restrain it.

It serves always to distract the Public Councils, and enfeeble the Public administration. It agitates the community with ill founded jealousies and false alarms, kindles the animosity of one part against another, foments occasionally riot and insurrection. It opens the doors to foreign influence and corruption, which find a facilitated access to the Government itself through the channels of party passion. Thus the policy and the will of one country, are subjected to the policy and will of another.

There is an opinion that parties in free countries are useful checks upon the Administration of the Government, and serve to keep alive the Spirit of Liberty. This within certain limits is probably true—and in Governments of a Monarchical cast, Patriotism may look with indulgence, if not with favor, upon the spirit of party. But in those of the popular character, in Governments purely elective, it is a spirit not to be encouraged. From their natural tendency, it is certain there will always be enough of that spirit for every salutary purpose, and there being constant danger of excess, the effort ought to be, by force of public opinion, to mitigate and assuage it. A fire not to be quenched; it demands a uniform vigilance to prevent its bursting into a flame, lest, instead of warming, it should consume.

It is important, likewise, that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those entrusted with its administration, to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres; avoiding in the exercise of the powers of one department to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism. A just estimate of that love of power, and proneness to abuse it, which predominates in the human heart, is sufficient to satisfy us of the truth of this position. The necessity of reciprocal checks in the exercise of political power, by dividing and distributing it into different depositories, and constituting each the Guardian of the Public Weal against invasions by the others, has been evinced by experiments ancient and modern; some of them in our country and under our own eyes. To preserve them must be as necessary as to institute them. If in the opinion of the People, the distribution or modification of the Constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the Constitution designates. But let there be no change by usurpation; for though this, in one instance, may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed. The precedent must always greatly overbalance in permanent evil any partial or transient benefit which the use can at any time yield.

Of all the dispositions and habits, which lead to political prosperity, Religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of Patriotism, who should labor to subvert these great Pillars of human happiness, these firmest props of the duties of Men and Citizens. The mere Politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and to cherish them. A volume could not trace all their connections with private and public felicity. Let it simply be asked where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in Courts of Justice? And let us with caution indulge the supposition, that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure—reason and experience both forbid us to expect, that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle.

"T is substantially true, that virtue or mortality is a necessary spring of popular government. The rule indeed extends with more or less force to every species of Free Government."

ment. Who that is a sincere friend to it can look with indifference upon attempts to shake the foundation of the fabric?

Promote, then, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge. In proportion as the structure of a government gives force to public opinion, it is essential that public opinion should be enlightened.

As a very important source of strength and security, cherish public credit. One method of preserving it, is to use it as sparingly as possible: avoiding occasions of expense by cultivating peace, but remembering also that timely disbursements to prepare for danger frequently prevent much greater disbursements to repel it—avoiding likewise the accumulation of debt, not only by shunning occasions of expense, but by vigorous exertions, in time of Peace, to discharge the debts which unavoidable wars may have occasioned, not ungenerously throwing upon posterity the burden which we ourselves ought to bear. The execution of these maxims belongs to your Representatives, but it is necessary that public opinion should cooperate. To facilitate to them the performance of their duty, it is essential that you should practically bear in mind, that towards the payment of debts there must be Revenue—that to have Revenue there must be taxes—that no taxes can be devised which are not more or less inconvenient and unpleasant—that the intrinsic embarrassment inseparable from the selection of the proper objects (which is always a choice of difficulties) ought to be a decisive motive for a candid construction of the conduct of the Government in making it, and for a spirit of acquiescence in the measures for obtaining Revenue which the public exigencies may at any time dictate.

Observe good faith and justice towards all Nations. Cultivate peace and harmony with all. Religion and Morality enjoin this conduct; and can it be that good policy does not equally enjoin it? It will be worthy of a free, enlightened, and, at no distant period, a great nation, to give to mankind the magnanimous and too novel example of a People always guided by an exalted justice and benevolence. Who can doubt but that in the course of time and things, the fruits of such a plan would richly repay any temporary advantages, which might be lost by a steady adherence to it? Can it be that Providence has not connected the permanent felicity of a Nation with its virtue? The experiment, at least, is recommended by every sentiment which ennobles human nature. Alas! is it rendered impossible by its vices?

In the execution of such a plan nothing is more essential than that permanent, inveterate antipathies against particular nations and passionate attachments for others should be excluded; and that in place of them just and amicable feeling towards all should be cultivated. The Nation, which indulges towards another an habitual hatred or an habitual fondness, is in some degree a slave. It is a slave to its animosity or to its affection, either of which is sufficient to lead it astray from its duty and its interest. Antipathy in one nation against another disposes each more readily to offer insult and injury, to lay hold of slight causes of umbrage, and to be haughty and intractable, when accidental or trifling occasions of dispute occur. Hence, frequent collisions, obstinate, envenomed and bloody contests. The Nation promoted by ill-will and resentment, sometimes impels to War the Government, contrary to the best calculations of policy. The Government sometimes participates in the national propensity, and adopts through passion what reason would reject; at other times, it makes the animosity of the Nation subservient to projects of hostility, instigated by pride, ambition, and other sinister and pernicious motives. The peace often, sometimes perhaps the Liberty, of Nations, has been the victim.

So likewise a passionate attachment of one Nation for another produces a variety of evils. Sympathy for the favorite nation, facilitating the illusion of an imaginary common interest in cases where no real common interest exists, and infusing into one the enmities of the other, betrays the former into a participation in the quarrels and wars of the latter, without adequate inducement or justification: It leads also to concessions to the favorite Nation of privileges denied to others, which is apt doubly to injure the Nation making the concessions; by unnecessarily parting with what ought to have been retained, and by exciting jealousy, ill-will, and a disposition to retaliate, in the parties from whom equal privileges are withheld; and it gives to ambitious, corrupted, or deluded citizens (who devote themselves to the favorite Nation) facility to betray, or sacrifice the interests of their own country, without odium, sometimes even with popularity: gilding with the appearances of a virtuous sense of obligation, a commendable deference for public opinion, or a laudable zeal for public good, the base or foolish compliances of ambition, corruption or infatuation.

As avenues to foreign influence in innumerable ways, such attachments are particularly alarming to the truly enlightened and independent Patriot. How many opportunities do they afford to tamper with domestic factions, to practice the arts of seduction, to mislead public opinion, to influence or awe the public councils! Such an attachment of a small or weak, towards a great and powerful nation, dooms the former to be the satellite of the latter.

Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence, I conjure you to believe me, fellow-citizens, the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake, since history and experience prove that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican Government. But that jealousy, to be useful, must be impartial; else it becomes the instrument of the very influence to be avoided, instead of a defense against it. Excessive partiality for one foreign nation and excessive dislike of another, cause those whom they actuate to see danger only on one side, and serve to veil and even second the arts of influence on the other. Real Patriots, who may resist the intrigues of the favorite, are liable to become suspected and odious; while its tools and dupes usurp the applause and confidence of the people, to surrender their interests.

The great rule of conduct for us, in regard to foreign Nations, is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little Political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements, let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith. Here let us stop.

Europe has a set of primary interests, which to us have none, or a very remote relation. Hence, she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence therefore it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves, by artificial ties, in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics, or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities.

Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course. If we remain one People, under an efficient government, the period is not far off, when we may defy material injury from external annoyance; when we may take such an attitude as will cause the neutrality we may at any time resolve upon to be scrupulously respected. When beligerent nations, under the impossibility of making acquisitions upon us, will not lightly hazard the giving us provocation when we may choose peace or war, as our interest guided by justice shall counsel.

Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice?

"T is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliances with any portion of the foreign world; so far, I mean, as we are now at liberty to do it—for let me not be understood as capable of patronizing infidelity to existing engagements (I hold the maxim no less applicable to public than to private affairs, that honesty is always the best policy). I repeat therefore let those engagements be observed in their genuine sense. But in my opinion it is unnecessary and would be unwise to extend them.

Taking care always to keep ourselves, by suitable establishments, on a respectably defensive posture, we may safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies.

Harmony, liberal intercourse with all nations, are recommended by policy, humanity, and interest. But even our commercial policy should hold an equal and impartial hand: neither seeking nor granting exclusive favors or preferences; consulting the natural course of things; diffusing and diversifying by gentle means the streams of commerce, but forcing nothing; establishing with Powers so disposed-in order to give trade a stable course, to define the rights of our Merchants, and to enable the Government to support them-conventional rules of intercourse, the best that present circumstances and mutual opinion will permit; but temporary, and liable to be from time to time abandoned or varied, as experience and circumstances shall dictate; constantly keeping in view that 't is folly in one nation to look for disinterested favors from another, that it must pay with a portion of its independence for whatever it may accept under that character—that by such acceptance, it may place itself in the condition of having given equivalents for nominal favors and yet of being reproached with ingratitude for not giving more. There can be no greater error than to expect, or calculate upon real favors from Nation to Nation. 'T is an illusion which experience must cure, which a just pride ought to discard.

In offering to you, my Countrymen, these counsels of an old and affectionate friend, I dare not hope they will make the strong and lasting impression, I could wish, that they will control the usual current of the passions, or prevent our Nation from running the course which has hitherto marked the destiny of Nations. But if I may even flatter myself, that they may be productive of some partial benefit; some occasional good; that they may now and then recur to moderate the fury of party spirit, to warn against the mischiefs of foreign intrigue, to guard against the impostures of pretended patriotism; this hope will be a full recompense for the solicitude for your welfare, by which they have been dictated.

How far in the discharge of my official duties, I have been guided by the principles which have been delineated, the public Records and other evidences of my conduct must witness to You and to the world. To myself the assurance of my own conscience is, that I have at least believed myself to be guided by them.

In relation to the still subsisting War in Europe, my Proclamation of the 22d of April 1793 is the index to my plan. Sanctioned by your approving voice and by that of Your representatives in both Houses of Congress, the spirit of that measure has continually governed me: uninfluenced by any attempts to deter or divert me from it.

After deliberate examination with the aid of the best lights I could obtain, I was well satisfied that our country, under all the circumstances of the case, had a right to take, and was bound in duty and interest, to take a Neutral position. Having taken it, I determined, as far as should depend upon me, to maintain it, with moderation, perseverance, and firmness.

The considerations which respect the right to hold this conduct, it is not necessary on this occasion to detail. I will only observe, that, according to my understanding of the matter, that right, so far from being denied by any of the Belligerent Powers, has been virtually admitted by all.

The duty of holding a neutral conduct may be inferred, without anything more, from the obligation which justice and humanity impose on every Nation, in cases in which it is free to act, to maintain inviolate the relations of Peace and Amity towards other Nations.

The inducements of interest for observing that conduct will best be referred to your own reflections and experience. With me, a predominant motive has been to endeavor to gain time to our country to settle and mature its yet recent institutions, and to progress without interruption to that degree of strength and consistency, which is necessary to give it, humanly speaking, the command of its own fortune.

Though, in reviewing the incidents of my Administration, I am unconscious of intentional error—I am nevertheless too sensible of my defects not to think it probable that I may have committed many errors. Whatever they may be, I fervently beseech the Almighty to avert or mitigate the evils to which they may tend. I shall also carry with me the hope that my country will never cease to view them with indulgence; and that after forty-five years of my life dedicated to its service, with an upright zeal, the faults of incompetent abilities will be consigned to oblivion, as myself must soon be to the mansions of rest.

Relying on its kindness in this as in other things, and actuated by that fervent love towards it, which is so natural to a man, who views in it the native soil of himself and his progenitors for several generations; I anticipate with pleasing expectation that retreat, in which I promise myself to realize, without alloy, the sweet enjoyment of partaking, in the midst of my fellow-citizens, the benign influence of good Laws under a free Government, the ever favorite object of my heart, and the happy reward, as I trust, of our mutual cares, labors, and dangers.

GEO. WASHINGTON.

UNITED STATES, September 19th, 1796.

TRIBUTE TO GEORGE WASHINGTON

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, all the resources of lofty and loving eloquence have been exhausted in vain attempts to portray the rounded greatness and the genius for war and government of George Washington. Oratory has paid its tribute to his civic virtues. Poetry has laid its immortal wreath upon his brow. Scholarship has sought to sound the depths of his practical wisdom. Patriotism has striven to express its admiration, its gratitude, and its love for the character, the services, and the legacy of George Washington.

His fame increases; it grows with the flight of years. A century and more have come and gone since he closed his eyes in eternal sleep; but he lives—lives in the Government he founded, lives in the principles he enunciated, lives "first in the hearts of his countrymen" that beat with unutterable emotion at the mention of his sacred name.

As military leader, history—the disinterested, the dispassionate judgment of men—has fixed his place. Alexander, Hannibal, Cæsar, Napoleon, Wellington—each has his champions, some their idolaters; but, all things considered—the times, the places, the circumstances, the mighty opposing foe, the small resources, difficulties overcome, dangers removed, victory achieved—thus measured, Washington takes his rightful place at the very head of military genius, and there he will remain forever.

I need not dwell on his military life and achievements. Senators know them by heart—from Boston to Yorktown—and I would hasten to consider Washington other than as a soldier. But with our minds fixed for a moment on the tragedy and triumph of battle, there is one continuing fact which patriotism loves to mention, and may be pardoned for mentioning, at any time, on any occasion, and that glorious fact is that the flag of our country, first lifted to heaven by Washington, has been carried in victory from the days of the Revolution to this very hour, never knowing defeat and blessing alike the victor and the vanquished.

Not only in the camp, but elsewhere Washington wrought great deeds and made himself immortal. The battle fought, the victory won, independence acknowledged, the thirteen Colonies recognized as free, then came the greater task and the greater problem—the task of perpetuating liberty under law, the problem of establishing and maintaining constitutional government. Victory was ours, freedom was ours, but the Colonies took their place among the nations of the earth under a form of government which gave promise of neither permanence hor security. It is easier to gain liberty than to maintain it; it is easier to win a battle than to found a state. To use the thoughtful and beautiful words of Charles Sumner—

Gaining liberty is not an end, but a means only; a means of securing justice and happiness, the real end and aim of states, as of every human heart.

The thirteen Colonies were, in fact, one people, and in their international relations one nation. But in other respects, in an interstate constitutional sense, they were so many separate sovereignties.

The Articles of Confederation-under which the colonists waged successful war when their indignation was aroused, and patriotism ran high, and there was generous rivalry as to which should perform the greatest service, make the greatest sacrifice for the common cause-were soon found to be utterly inadequate in times of peace. The Articles of Confederation were borne of imminent danger and pressing necessity for joint action. They were prepared by a committee of the Continental Congress, then sitting in Philadelphia, and reported to that body on July 12, 1776. Amended and debated and temporarily laid aside, it was not until November 15, 1777, that they were agreed to and thereupon transmitted to the legislatures of the States for ratification. One by one the several "free, sovereign, and independent States" formally ratified these articles, and the cannon in the yard of Independence Hall announced to the world the "glorious compact" on March 1, 1781. It was indeed a glorious compact, and gloriously did our fathers triumph under it.

The treaty of peace with Great Britain was signed at Paris on September 3, 1783. The military duties of Washington were performed. His country was free. In New York on December 4, 1783, he bade farewell to his officers and repaired to Annapolis, where Congress was then sitting, to return his commission as Commander in Chief. This he did on Tuesday, December 23, and in so doing used these memorable words:

Having now finished the work assigned me, I retire from the great theater of action, and bidding an affectionate farewell to this august body, under whose orders I have so long acted, I here offer my commission and take my leave of all the employments of public life.

Washington retired to his home at Mount Vernon—now a shrine to which his countrymen and lovers of liberty make pilgrimage—in the fond expectation of spending the remainder of his days in domestic tranquillity and peace.

War brought liberty; victory was followed by peace; but liberty was not enough; peace was not enough. The condition of the country was deplorable. The Nation had incurred an indebtedness of over forty millions of dollars—a small sum now, a colossal amount then; the several States were largely indebted. Congress could not raise money by way of internal tax or by a tariff on imports; to borrow money was almost impossible, for how could Congress guarantee payment? The Government's credit at home and abroad was ruined. Congress recommended, but could not enforce its recommendations. The States quarreled; controversies over interstate trade sprung up; conflicting laws as to foreign commerce were enacted; and the discouraging and disheartening fact was that Congress confessedly was powerless to remedy these many and increasing evils.

We had assumed international relations but were unable to carry out our international obligations. We were fast forfeiting the respect of the world, as Congress was losing the respect of the people. The very limited delegation of powers to Congress did not include the elemental power of enacting laws of an essentially national character, binding on all the States. The country was drifting, nay more, it was rushing into internecine strife. Were we a Nation? Was the Republic a success?

A few thoughtful, observant men saw and realized and feared all this and were brave and frank enough to express their views. It was at this critical period of our history, when self-government was rapidly falling into discredit and the young Republic was heading toward disaster, that Washington rendered incalculable service to his country and to mankind. From his retirement at Mount Vernon he saw the danger. He saw that the precious fruits of the revolutionary struggle were in peril and that to save and perpetuate them there must be a change in the form of government. The Confederation was called by him a "half-starved, limping government, always moving upon crutches and tottering at every step. It is clear to me as A B C," he said, "that an extension of Federal powers would make us one of the most happy, wealthy, respectable, and powerful nations that ever inhabited the terrestrial globe. Without this, we shall soon be everything which is the direct reverse."

Other great men shared in these views. Hamilton, Madison, Franklin, Pinckney, Monroe recognized the situation; they saw the distressing condition of affairs and were active in directing and molding public opinion in the direction of a "more perfect Union."

I do not forget or undervalue their great services, but I think it just to say that Washington led in the movement which happily resulted in the formation and ratification of the Constitution under which we have lived a hundred years and more and grown to be what we are and what the Father of his Country predicted we would become—"One of the most happy, wealthy, respectable, and powerful nations that ever inhabited the terrestrial globe."

Of course, we are familiar with the steps taken to reform, recast, reframe the Government. It will be recalled that upon motion of Madison, of Virginia—and it gives me pleasure to digress to say that the State of Virginia has produced many great men, some of whom are Members of the Senate to-day—it was upon the motion of Madison, of Virginia, that the Virginia Assembly passed a resolution calling for a meeting of commissioners from all the States at Annapolis yonder in September, 1786. It will be remembered that this meeting, made up of commissioners of but five of the States, prepared an address urging the necessity and suggesting a method for forming a stronger and better government, for we were then operating under the old Articles of Confederation. Nor will it be forgotten that this historic address was written by Alexander Hamilton.

Public interest was awakened, the work of the Annapolis meeting was laid before the Congress, and that body passed a resolution calling for a convention-note this, Mr. President-"for the sole and express purpose of revising the Articles of Confederation." Such a convention assembled in Philadelphia on the 25th day of May, 1787, and, judged by its work and its effect on liberty under law, it was the most important convention that ever met, as is appreciated by Members of the Senate whose scholarly minds run over the history of the world and recall the various conventions which have met. I emphasize that the Philadelphia convention met to "revise" the Articles of Confederation, to repair a falling structure; but, with a practical wisdom which has elicited the admiration of the world, it erected a new fabric of government—the Constitution under which we live, and to which we owe whatever makes us proud of our country, or great or respected among the nations of the earth

However much the world may praise Washington for his military achievements, whatever of imperishable luster his genius shed upon our arms, he rendered a greater and more valuable service to liberty when as presiding officer he guided and controlled in large measure the deliberations of that convention. But for his conservative views and conciliating nature, but for the confidence the delegates had in his spotless integrity and self-denying patriotism, but for his calmness and coolness and patience, his proved devotion to his country, his practical wisdom and his consequent influence over the minds and hearts of his associates, we now know that the convention would have dissolved in strife and broken up in quarrel, and that the attempt to form a "more perfect union" would have ended in lamentable failure. Debate was animated, interests clashed, jealousies existed, and rivalry contended, and all to such an extent that at times the convention was "scarce held together by the strength of a hair"; but through those four months of doubt and fear Washington sat patient, forbearing, and by the very force of moral grandeur allayed passion and molded antagonisms into harmony.

The convention over, the new Constitution transmitted to the Continental Congress to be submitted to the several States for ratification, Washington returned to his beloved Mount Vernon, there to remain until again called to the service of his country.

Mr. President, do not for a moment suppose that all men believed in the new Constitution. Elbridge Gerry, Edmund Randolph, and George Mason, members of the convention, had refused to approve it, and 12 others had retired from the convention before its labors were finished. Violent opposition to it sprang up throughout the country. There was intense excitement, and supporters of the great charter of constitutional government felt the most anxious solicitude as to its fate. That instrument—the Constitution—was denounced as the "stepping-stone to tyranny," and as "consolidated tyranny," "inimical to the liberties of a free people."

To the youth of to-day, as they read briefly their school histories, it is, perhaps, not known that chief among the opponents of the Constitution stood Patrick Henry, who, though elected a member, had refused to attend or participate in the work of the Philadelphia convention. Patrick Henry, great orator, great patriot, whose love of liberty was unbounded and unquestioned, whose genius had moved the House of Burgesses to resistance, and whose lofty and fearless appeals had stirred their hearts as they move ours to-day, opposed the new Constitution with all his power and all his might. Nor could he be reconciled, even with the tacit, if not authoritative, promise that immediately upon its ratification it should be radically amended, as we know it was amended, the first 10 amendments being immediately added to the original Constitution. Everywhere the civic battle raged. Hamilton, Madison, Jay, Marshall championed the new form of government. The storm gathered and centered in Virginia; upon her action turned the fate of the "more perfect Union." Out from Mount Vernon went a mighty influence—the influence of Washington. For the first time Virginia refused to follow her beloved Patrick Henry; the victory was won.

How shall we express our gratitude to Washington? As without his genius our battle for independence would probably have been lost, as without his counsel the Philadelphia convention never would have agreed upon the Constitution, so without his influence that great instrument of government never would have been ratified by the people. To him more than to any other man we owe the formation of our present Union; without him there would have been no common country to live for or to die for; without him the flag of our hearts and hopes, the flag of unnumbered heroes whose blood has sanctified it—without Washington the flag of this Republic would not be known and respected on every wave, honored and saluted in every port, the symbol of our power, the emblem of liberty enlightening the world.

To Washington we owe the great blessings of the present American Republic. My words, Mr. President, will be forgotten; but I trust in God that this and succeeding generations will follow the advice of Washington and keep out of the entanglements of Europe; that they will have no permanent entangling alliances with European or other nations, but will stand on American soil, on this continent as a free, sovereign, independent, and just Republic, hating no nation, coveting the possessions of no nation, conspiring against no nation. This was the policy of Washington. This should be our policy.

The nations to-day are in a state of anarchy. If there could rise some man, if there could be spoken some word which would induce the so-called civilized nations of the earth to abandon the idea of future enlargement of territory, and to be content with living on their own soil, cultivating the arts of peace; if some great, mighty voice could arrest the attention of the diplomats, the ambassadors, the kings, the queens, the presidents of the earth and persuade them to have done with war, to have done with mighty armies and mighty navies and live in peace, then we could look forward with greater confidence to the survival, the advancement of what we are pleased to call civilization.

Civilization! It does not consist in material things. It consists in spiritual things—in right, in justice, in freedom, in mercy, in charity, in love. Those divine things make up civilization; not mighty armies, not mighty navies.

Yes; the civic battle was won. Washington was at Mount Vernon. The Constitution having been adopted, the hearts of the people called on him to take charge, to guide the new Nation. Surrounded by Hamilton and Jefferson, by Randolph and Knox, Washington launched this Government upon the untried, uncharted waters, and for eight years directed its course. He was confronted with greater problems than distress us to-day. He encountered greater dangers than surround us. But he resolutely and wisely, in the face of clamor and unmeasured invective—think of it; think of it—in the face and in spite of invective and abuse and ridicule, he held his country on a certain course, and, as you heard read to-day, advised his country to keep out of foreign entanglements. I trust that this and future generations in America will pay heed to the solemn advice of Washington in respect to our relations with foreign countries.

Mr. President, Washington stood, and stands to-day, for constitutional liberty, for regulated liberty, for liberty under "salutary restraint," for liberty under law. He stood, and stands, for regulated liberty under constitutional protections. He knew and taught that without these restraints, these checks, these safeguards, these balances, liberty degenerates into license worse than slavery, into anarchy worse than despotism. Against license, with all its suicidal tendencies, he uttered his warning; against anarchy, in all its frightful and hideous forms, he voiced his protest.

The Nation's power and glory do not altogether depend upon the triumph of its arms; they rest upon the righteousness of its people and the quality of justice which it metes out to all men. The liberty for which Washington stood was the liberty of equality—absolute equality of public burdens, absolute equality of public duty. He believed in a republic of law, a government of order, wherein and whereunder all men should be protected and secure in "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness."

Mr. President, Washington and his compatriots were not mere theorists. They were practical men who knew that the liberty they had achieved could only be secured by a government strong enough to protect every man entitled to its care. They strove to embody in constitutional form, and thereby perpetuate, the principles for which they had fought: and their work was one of lofty and disinterested patriotism, marked by concession and compromise. They, the men of New England and Georgia; they, the men of New York and Virginia-Benjamin Franklin, Luther Martin, Rufus King, Robert Morris, and others no less worthy of remembrance-were men who knew their rights, and, "knowing, dared maintain." They had been educated in the English common law and were familiar with history and government; and after a hundred or more years of trialyears of stress and strain, of internal dangers and foreign menace-how true it is to say that they "builded better than they knew "!

I must not detain the Senate longer; but, perhaps, you will suffer me to add just a few words.

Does your love, does our love, body forth an imaginary being? Was there such a man as Washington? Do we overstate it? Does our love betray us into extravagant speech?

Some years ago I happened to be in the great city of Chicago. Walking down State Street, I came to a bookstore. Entering, I saw a table covered with secondhand books. Looking, I saw one, The Speeches of Henry Grattan, Ireland's great orator and patriot. Opening it, there was the bookmark of Ireland's immortal orator, Daniel O'Connell! I have that book now, and would not part with it.

Turning to another book, lo, I saw the Speeches of Charles Phillips—Charles Phillips, another of Ireland's great orators. I pause to say, having in mind Burke and Grattan and Plunket and Curran and O'Connell himself, and the martyr, Robert Emmet—having them all in mind, I say that Ireland has produced no greater orator than Charles Phillips. Opening the volume I was attracted to a speech which he delivered at a dinner given to a young American. In that speech this great Irish orator, over a hundred years ago, paid this eloquent tribute to the Father of our Country:

It matters very little what immediate spot may be the birthplace of such a man as Washington. No people can claim, no country can appropriate him; the boon of Providence to the human race, his fame is eternity, and his residence creation. Though it was the defeat of our arms, and the disgrace of our policy, I almost bless the convulsion in which he had his origin. If the heavens thundered and the earth rocked, yet, when the storm passed, how pure was the climate that it cleared; how bright in the brow of the firmament was the planet which it revealed to us! In the production of Washington it does really appear as if nature was endeavoring to improve upon herself, and that all the virtues of the ancient world were but so many studies preparatory to the patriot of the new. Individual instances no doubt there were; splendid exemplifications of some single qualification; Cæsar was merciful, Scipio was continent, Hannibal was patient; but it was reserved for Washington to blend them all in one, and like the lovely chef d'oeuvre of the Grecian artist, to exhibit in one glow of associated beauty the pride of every model, and the perfection of every master. As a general he marshalled the peasant into a veteran, and supplied by discipline the absence of experience; as a statesman he enlarged the policy of the cabinet into the most comprehensive system of general advantage; and such was the wisdom of his views, and the philosophy of his counsels, that to the soldier and the statesman he almost added the character of the sage! A conqueror, he was untainted with the crime of blood; a revolutionist, he was free from any stain of treason; for aggression commenced the contest, and his country called him to the command. Liberty unsheathed his sword, necessity stained, victory returned it. If he had paused here, history might have doubted what station to assign him, whether at the head of her citizens or her soldiers, her heroes or her patriots. But the last glorious act crowns his career and banishes all hesitation. Who, like Washington, after having emancipated an hemisphere, resigned its crown, and preferred the retirement of domestic life to the adoration of a land he might be almost said to have

How shall we rank thee upon glory's page, Thou more than soldier and just less than sage; All thou hast been reflects less fame on thee, Far less than all thou hast forborne to be!

Such, sir, is the testimony of one not to be accused of partiality in his estimate of America. Happy, proud America! The lightnings of heaven yielded to your philosophy! The temptations of earth could not seduce your partiotism!

And now listen to the calm words of our own Chief Justice John Marshall:

This hero, the patriot, and the sage of America, the man on whom in times of danger every eye was turned and all hopes placed, lives now only in his own great actions.

What more need be said? As a fixed star in the firmament of freedom, Washington shines on, fadeless to eternity, Nothing can cover his high fame but heaven; No pyramids set off his memories, But the eternal substance of his greatness, To which I leave him.

GEORGE WASHINGTON BICENTENNIAL COMMISSION (S. DOC. 188)

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the last meeting of the Bicentennial Commission was held last Monday, at which time the commission received a report from the executive committee, which was made the preliminary report of the commission, to be transmitted to Congress. I shall take only a moment in submitting the report.

The executive committee set forth the reason why the commission could not end immediately. It will have to continue its work for probably nine months more, although no additional amount of money will be needed. No appropriation will be asked for. In other words, there is sufficient money in the hands of the commission, or available until expended, to make it unnecessary to ask for further money.

Mr. President, I do not want to take the time of the Senate to indicate the activities of the commission. I do, however, think it wise to submit a digest of its report to the commission made by the director, Mr. Sol Bloom. I therefore ask unanimous consent as vice chairman of the commission to report for the United States George Washington Bicentennial Commission, established by Senate Joint Resolution 85, approved December 2, 1924, the activities of the commission for the last 18 months, and, if in order, would like to have the report follow the address on George Washington delivered by the Senator from California [Mr. Shortrider]. I would also like to have the digest submitted by the director, Mr. Bloom, indicating the breadth of the work, printed and printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the report and digest were ordered to be printed, and printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

At the last meeting of the executive committee on January 10, 1933, the committee authorized the director to proceed with the preparation and completion of material embracing all phases of the commission's activities preliminary to and including the bicentennial year. It is estimated that this material will be embraced within about 12 large volumes. There will be a Literary Series in 3 volumes, one of which already is complete; 2 volumes covering Foreign Participation, 3 volumes on Activities, 2 volumes on Music, 1 on the Wakefield Masque, in Braille, and such number of other volumes as will accommodate State Programs.

of other volumes as will accommodate State Programs.

In view, therefore, of this proposed comprehensive compendium of literature covering every phase of the bicentennial celebration, which in itself will constitute memorabilia of George Washington and a veritable library of Washingtoniana to which students may recur in the future, it is deemed unnecessary by your committee in this report to do more than epitomize certain prominent features divested of the details which will be set forth fully in the literature referred to. This literature of the directors and in the literature referred to. This literature report of the director and in the literature referred to. This literature will be preserved in the Library of Congress and in the Hall of Archives.

The joint resolution of Congress establishing the George Washington Bicentennial Commission provided that the commission shall expire within two years after the expiration of the celebration, December 31, 1933. That much time will not be necessary in which to close the work of the commission; but the essential work yet to be done, including final rendition of accounts, will be completed, it is thought, with the aid of a small force by the end of the present year. It is desirable to terminate the commission's activities as soon as possible, and they will be terminated expeditiously, but not at the sacrifice of orderly procedure. Much is yet to be done for the sake of the enduring and constructive record of a celebration which was unique in its scope and purpose and unparalleled in its extent and duration. Its influence for good upon the younger and upon the future generations is record of a celebration which was unique in its scope and purpose and unparalleled in its extent and duration. Its influence for good upon the younger and upon the future generations is incalculable, imponderable. It may be said in truth and in fact that hereafter the student of the life and character of George Washington will find it unnecessary to go back of the year 1932 for accurate and authentic information. In the publications, in the reproductions, and in the data assembled through painstaking research and subjected to minute scrutiny, care has been exercised by those charged by the commission with this important duty to exclude all things of an apochryphal nature.

The executive committee, to which was committed by the commission at the outset the duty of formulating a plan or plans of celebration, kept constantly in mind that the proposed celebration was to be one in which every American citizen and every organization should participate and have some part, leaving details largely to be arranged and perfected by State commissions acting in conjunction and with the approval of the United States commission. Through these agencies and throughout the bicentennial year on every day in that year all over the world some form of commemoration was observed.

The committee has also borne in mind that the celebration was

The committee has also borne in mind that the celebration was not intended to be a material expression to be evidenced by an exposition of physical resources and the development of the arts and sciences and industries but was intended to be spiritual and educational.

The concept of the character of such a celebration was early expressed by President Emeritus Charles W. Eliot, of Harvard University. "The two hundredth anniversary of the birth of George Washington," wrote Doctor Eliot, "should be celebrated not only Washington," wrote Doctor Eliot, "should be celebrated not only all over this country but wherever in Europe there exists a group of persons who know the value of his writings and his deeds for the promotion of liberty and justice among mankind. This celebration, however, should be solemn, not gay, and spiritual, not materialistic. It should be directed in large measure to the rising generation, not to the passing or the past. It should appeal to thinking people, not to the careless or indifferent. Its aim should be to increase the number of Washington's disciples and followers in and for the struggles of the future."

This noble concent, in keeping with Washington's own life and

This noble concept, in keeping with Washington's own life and character, can be said to have been scrupulously adhered to. In the activities, both here and abroad, the many thousands of commemorative exercises held daily and in divers forms, according to time and place, were on a high plane of dignity and reverence, educational in their aim and purpose, from which the spectacular and material were excluded, and in which spiritual values were stressed. While foreign countries as such did not officially participate it is a representable foot that in peerly every every. stressed. While foreign countries as such did not officially participate, it is a remarkable fact that in nearly every country in the world groups and individuals paid homage to General Washington in various ways. Of these foreign activities record has been kept and will be preserved in the literature on Foreign Participation. ticipation.

In our own country particular attention was bestowed upon "the rising generation," to which the youth of America responded with zeal and enthusiasm; and it can not be gainsaid that there has been a tremendous increase in the number of Washington's disciples and followers in and for the struggle of the future. In our judgment, this commemoration has accomplished more to our judgment, this commemoration has accomplished more to mold the thought and opinions and character of our youth—America's potential rulers—in the fundamentals and ideals of George Washington, both personal and political, and to dissipate and offset un-American propaganda than any one other thing could possibly have done. This, too, in the face of two great obstacles, namely, widespread economic depression and a presidential campaign. These disturbing influences served to distract the people and to divert their minds; nevertheless, this handicap, great as it was, was met and overcome in marked degree and to such an extent as to exert a steadying influence upon the minds of the American people in the midst of conflicting emotions.

Prior to the establishment of headquarters early in 1930 in the Washington Building in the city of Washington the executive committee held its meetings in the Capitol Building. Its preliminary work consisted chiefly in considering the plans and suggestions invited by the organic act. These plans varied widely in their purpose and scope; some were within the original concept, but the majority of them, if not impracticable, would have been too costly in their execution. costly in their execution.

In 1927, on the anniversary of Washington's Birthday, President Coolidge, as chairman of the George Washington Bicentennial Commission, delivered an address to the American people in the presence of the two Houses of Congress, in which he invited their cooperation. This was followed by a concurrent resolution of Congress inviting the legislatures and the governors of the States, Territories, and insular possessions to cooperate with the commission in such manner as would seem to them most fitting "to the end that the bicentennial anniversary of the birth of George Washington be commemorated in the year 1932 in such manner that future generations of American citizens may live according to the example and precepts of his exalted life and character and thus perpetuate the American Republic." To this invitation there was general, widespread, hearty response not only by the States and other geographical units but by municipalities, towns, civic, fraternal, patriotic and religious, and other organizations, resulting in the astounding grand total of 1,555,755 contacts with the commission's headquarters, the appointment of 894,224 committees, and the presentation of 4,780,345 programs.

As interest developed and increased with the approach of the bicentennial year the need of the services of one or more directors became apparent to the executive committee actively to organize became apparent to the executive committee actively to organize and execute the plans for the celebration. For these responsible and exacting duties the committee, with the approval of the commission, selected Col. U. S. Grant, 3d, United States Army, and Hon. Sol Bloom, Representative in Congress from the State of New Hon. Sol Bloom, Representative in Congress from the State of New York, as associate directors, both of whom generously consented to serve. On account of his other and many official duties Colonel Grant found it necessary to relinquish his work as associate director greatly to the regret of the commission and thereafter the entire work of direction was conducted by Representative Bloom. To this task, with its manifold details and responsibilities, Mr. Bloom applied himself with ardent zeal and enthusiasm and with rare executive ability born of ripe experience and organizing genius. He devoted three years to the work with unfailing fidelity and sacrificial devotion; and under his intelligent direction administered the duties of his office in all of its varied ramifications by istered the duties of his office in all of its varied ramifications by modern business methods and with strict regard for economy. With the result that the celebration was a distinct success from the viewpoint of its original concept and its influence will be perpetual. To Mr. Bloom we extend our gratitude for his unselfish and effective labors, and our hearty congratulations. In his report to the commission doubtless Mr. Bloom will give due need of recognition to those who labored with him, and to them also, especially to Dr. Albert Bushnell Hart, historian; his assistant, Dr. D. M. Matteson; and to Mrs. John Dickinson Sherman, a member of the commission, the executive committee extends its thanks.

matteson; and to Mrs. John Dickinson Sherman, a member of the commission, the executive committee extends its thanks.

Under authority of Congress and of the commission the preparation and editing of a complete and definitive edition of the Writings of George Washington, including his General Orders, never before published, as a congressional memorial, is proceeding as rapidly as the delicate nature of the work will permit. This duty was committed to Dr. John C. Fitzpatrick, editor of the Washington Diaries. This insures accuracy and the production of a literary work in about 25 volumes, the value of which to the present and future generations can not be estimated. Included will be thousands of Washington letters never before published. This will be a permanent contribution to the literature of our country and a notable memorial to General Washington. Seven volumes are complete. The first volume off the press was presented to President Hoover, who wrote the foreword. One hundred and ninety-six sets have been sold to libraries at $50 a set, but no price to the public has yet been fixed and will not be until the cost of production is more definitely ascertained. It is thought, however, that the price per set will approximate $125. Volumes 8 and 9 are in page proof, volume 10 in galley proof, and the type for volume 11 is being set. The index will be in one volume.

Of the 1,000 sets of the definitive writings authorized by law to be distributed to Masshare.

Of the 1,000 sets of the definitive writings authorized by law to be distributed to Members of Congress and other officials, 950 copies have been allocated to Members of the Seventy-first Congress, to new Members of the Seventy-second and Seventy-third Congresses, and to officials designated in the law, leaving but 50 sets remaining for distribution by the commission, in its discretion, and for foreign exchange.

On November 15, 1932, with appropriate ceremonies, in which the vice chairman participated, the Mount Vernon Highway con-necting the city of Washington with the Washington Estate at Mount Vernon was dedicated. This magnificent boulevard, author-Mount Vernon was dedicated. This magnificent boulevard, authorized by Congress, was constructed by the Bureau of Public Roads, Department of Agriculture, under the supervision and direction of Mr. Thomas H. MacDonald, and is a model in road building and a product of engineering skill In its construction many physical obstacles were overcome. This commission was charged with the duty of selecting the route and did select what is known as the scenic or river route, 15½ miles in length, which lends itself to superior park facilities. The completion of this highway is the realization of a dream of those who long wished for a connecting link between the home of Washington as he built it and the Capital City which bears his name.

Capital City which bears his name.

To the commission at its meeting last year was submitted a report on the status of the Arlington Memorial Bridge, showing that the essential parts of the project were practically completed, and at that time an inspection of the bridge was made by the President, accompanied by members of the commission and other officials. From the foot of this massive memorial bridge, at Columbia Island, begins the Memorial Highway, and thus spanning the historic Potomac, so prominently identified with the life of George Washington and his concept of better inland transportation facilities for the colonists, and standing as a permanent memorial to him and as a concrete evidence of the union of North and South, this bridge testifies to the reality of an imperishable reunion of sections once sundered by the strife of Civil War.

On May 14, 1932, the Mansion House, so called, was dedicated at Wakefield, Westmoreland County, Va., the birthplace of George Washington. Another fitting shrine was thus rescued from obliv-Washington. Another fitting shrine was thus rescued from obliv-ion and a belated national memorial of major importance made a signal part of the bicentennial program.

The Wakefield National Memorial Association, organized in 1923, engaged in the work of restoring Washington's birthplace, and it is primarily due to the unselfish spirit of patriotism and the unremitting and consecrated devotion to this task of the late Mrs. remitting and consecrated devotion to this task of the late Mrs. Josephine W. Rust, its president, that Congress was induced to aid the association to recognize Wakefield as a national shrine, and to make provision therefor by supplementing the voluntary contributions raised by Mrs. Rust and the members of the association. In his report to the commission on the rehabilitation of the birthplace of George Washington, Mr. Horace M. Albright, Director of the National Park Service, gave an interesting review of its history as revealed by old records, from which the following is musted:

"The National Park Service of the Department of the Interior was authorized by Congress on January 23, 1930, to take over, by transfer from the War Department, the administration of all Government-owned lands at Wakefield, the birthplace of George Washington, the area to be known thereafter as the George Washington Birthplace National Monument. The service was further authorized to cooperate with the Wakefield National Memorial Association in rehabilitation work which the latter had been authorized by Congress in 1926 to undertake.

"Before the erection of the mansion house could be undertaken it was, of course, necessary to remove the Government monument, a shaft of Vermont granite 51 feet high, to a location at a road intersection about a quarter of a mile distant. The present location of this monument adds greatly to the road approach to the mansion. The base and pedestal of the monument were recut to achieve a classic appearance. In addition to this work and the erection of the mansion house a building has been constructed on achieve a classic appearance. In addition to this work and the erection of the mansion house a building has been constructed on the site of the ancient independent kitchen, a deep-well water supply has been provided, a sewage-disposal plant installed, and telephone and electric-power connections made. The development of the grounds has been an especially interesting feature of the work because of the naturally beautiful location of the old Washington homestead. The point of land on which it was situated affords a beautiful view of Popes Creek with the broader waters of the Potomac in the distance, and innumerable cedars stud the grounds. It was necessary to transplant some of these trees, but wherever this was done the work was accomplished with great care. Many of them were planted on either side of the road leading from the granite shaft to the grounds of the mansion house.

"In the spring of 1930 the association excavated and rebuilt the old family vault at the burial ground and collected the remains of all the bodies that were buried outside the vault and placed them in the reconstructed vault and sealed it. The top of this vault is about 1 foot below the ground surface. Five table stones have been erected, and the burial ground, an area of 70 feet square, inclosed by a wall of handmade brick with iron gates.

"The association is furnishing the mansion with copies of furniture of the period. At present the living room and dining rooms are furnished. The furniture for the other rooms is under contract and delivery is expected at an early date.

"The Wakefield association is now completing plans for a log lodge building to cost $20,000, which will be located in the recre-

"The Wakefield association is now completing plans for a log lodge building to cost $20,000, which will be located in the recreational area and dedicated as a memorial to Mrs. Josephine W. Rust, founder and late president of the association.

"The story of George Washington birthplace national monu-ment is largely the story of the Wakefield National Memorial Asso-ciation, under the able presidency of the late Mrs. Josephine W. Rust, who was untiring in her efforts for the preservation of Washington's birthplace. Her death was a great loss to the offi-cials of the park service who have been actively engaged in the rehabilitation work.

"In 1929, at the initiation of the association, Mr. John D. Rockefeller, jr., purchased 273.56 acres of the original Washington tract lying along the Government road between the birth-site area and the Potomac River and Bridges Creek at a cost of $115,000. This land was transferred to the Government, December 12, 1930, and by proclamation of the President became a part of George Washington birthplace national monument, March 30, 1931.

"In 1929 the association purchased 30 additional acres of land at a cost of $8,000 to consolidate the lands purchased by Mr. Rockefeller.

"On June 22, 1931, the association deeded its land at Wakefield, about 100 acres, to the Government. The present area of George Washington birthplace national monument is 384.37 acres."

The full text of Mr. Albright's report is embodied in the minutes of the commission's proceedings of January 16, 1932.

Upon the invitation of the commission the District of Columbia, through its Board of Commissioners, created the "District of Columbia Commission George Washington Bicentennial (Inc.)." and Congress appropriated $100,000 from the District revenues in aid of the local celebration. of the local celebration.

formulated for events throughout the bicentennial year, and an agreeable arrangement was made with respect to such events as were of national and local character, respectively.

The commemorative ceremony in honor of the 200th anniversary of the birth of George Washington was officially inaugurated at a joint session of Congress in the House of Representatives on February 22, 1932, at 12 o'clock, noon, on which occasion the President of the United States, Herbert Hoover, delivered the address opening the Bicentennial Commission. The congressional joint committee on arrangements consisted of the congressional members of your Executive Committee, supplemented by the Hon. CLIFTON A. WOODKUM, of Virginia.

The official ceremony was held under the auspices of the United States Commission, and the exercises which followed at the east front of the Capitol Building were arranged and conducted by the District of Columbia Commission. At night the official Washington's Birthday celebration climaxed with a costume ball at the Mayflower Hotel.

From the birthday anniversary, February 22, until Thanksgiv-ball at the Mayflower Hotel.

From the birthday anniversary, February 22, until Thanksgiving Day, November 24, a succession of events took place in the city of Washington, in the form of military and civic parades, pageants, plays, and religious exercises, which were locally a reflex of the thousands of similar activities engaged in all over the country and in many parts of the world. Great credit is due the District of Columbia Commission for its fine spirit of cooperation and for the successful execution of its plans. Every facility and possible assistance were rendered to it by Director Bloom and his force, and under the direction of your subcommittee.

The entire net charge upon the Federal Treasury, covering the entire life of the commission, is estimated at $208,170.91, and this amount may yet be reduced considerably through the sale of commemorative postage stamps and the sale of sets of the Definitive Writings.

To February 1, 1933, the amount impounded from the appropriations pursuant to the economy act was $7,203.52, leaving a balance of $66,985.39 available for requisition. This amount, together with the disbursing officer's check book balance as of February 20, 1933, of $120,499.71, makes the total available funds $187,485.10, from which will be deducted amounts hereafter impounded.

makes the total available funds $187,485.10, from which will be deducted amounts hereafter impounded.

The minimum estimate made by the Post Office Department of profit derived from the sale of bicentennial stamps is $1,000,000, which sum, together with the amount paid the Public Printer of $62,545.11 for the production of the definitive writings which will be returned to the Treasury from proceeds of sale of that work, aggregate $1,062,545.11, leaving net $208,170.91 as the total cost for each and every item of expense incurred by the commission covering a period of seven years. The estimates of the amounts to be derived from the sales mentioned are conservative; it is quite likely that the reimbursement from such sales will nearly, if not fully, cover the total amount of appropriations, and possibly with some increment.

In concluding this preliminary report in which details of the operation of administration have been left to be covered by the preliminary report of the director, the executive committee wishes to express the confident belief that the bicentennial of the birth of George Washington was commemorated in the manner in which such event was contemplated without resorting to spectacular and ephemeral devices; and to those persons who expected or anticipated a celebration in the form of displays of material progress and development of resources, invention, and scientific or anticipated a celebration in the form of displays of material progress and development of resources, invention, and scientific achievements, which at best are evanescent, we desire to say that it was the spirit of George Washington, the simplicity of his life, and the virtue of his character, the renown of his deeds, and the principles of his Americanism that we almed to teach and to inculcate in the minds and hearts of the American people as the most fitting and lasting tribute that could be paid him by a grateful people through the use of agencies for the dissemination of knowledge and accurate information deemed by him to be essential in a government founded on the principle that all just powers are derived from the consent of the governed.

Acknowledgment is here made and recorded of the fact that the late Col. John A. Stewart, of New York, originated the idea of commemorating the bicentennial of the birth of George Washington, and rendered practical aid and suggestions in the creation of the United States Commission. He drafted the organic act, and but for his death soon thereafter he would have been an invaluable advisor to the commission and of great assistance in

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 50) to authorize the printing of the first edition of the Congressional Directory of the first session of the Seventy-third Congress, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 572) to provide for further investigation of certain public-utility corporations engaged in interstate commerce, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13520) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes; that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 1, 14, 15, and 16 to the said bill and concurred therein severally with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate; that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 17 and 18 and concurred therein; and that the House insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 7, 8, and 9.

PETITION AND MEMORIALS

Mr. HALE presented the petition of the Green Street Methodist Episcopal Church Quarterly Conference, Augusta, Me., praying for the passage of legislation to regulate and supervise the motion-picture industry, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAPPER presented memorials signed by 5,272 citizens of the District of Columbia and the State of Maryland, remonstrating against the repeal of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution and the return of beer, or the liquor traffic in any form whatever, in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 246. An act for the relief of Galen E. Lichty (Rept. No. 1263):

H.R. 3036. An act for the relief of Florence Mahoney (Rept. No. 1264); and

H. R. 3727. An act for the relief of Mary Elizabeth Fox (Rept. No. 1265).

Mr. STEIWER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5150) for the relief of Annie M. Eopolucci, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1266) thereon.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12977) to amend section 808 of Title VIII of the revenue act of 1926, as amended by section 443 of the revenue act of 1928, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1267) thereon.

Mr. WALCOTT, from the Special Committee on Conservation of Wild Life Resources, submitted a report, pursuant to Senate Resolution 246, on the question of consolidating Federal agencies engaged in conservation, which was ordered to be printed as report No. 1268.

Mr. FRAZIER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 5623) referring the claims of the Turtle Mountain Band or Bands of Chippewa Indians of North Dakota to the Court of Claims for adjudication and settlement, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1269) thereon.

Mr. McNARY, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 228) authorizing the American National Red Cross and certain other organizations to exchange Government-owned cotton for articles containing wool, reported it without amendment.

Mr. VANDENBERG, from the Committee on Commerce, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 14411. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Rio Grande at Boca Chica, Tex. (Rept. No. 1270);

H. R. 14460. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Baton Rouge, La. (Rept. No. 1271);

H.R. 14430. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the reconstruction of a railroad bridge across the Little River at or near Morris Ferry, Ark. (Rept. No. 1272);

H. R. 14500. An act to extend the time for completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Kansas City, Kans. (Rept. No. 1273);

H. R. 14584. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Board of County Commissioners of Allegheny County, Pa., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Allegheny River between the city of Pittsburgh and the township of O'Hara and the borough of Sharpsburg, Pa. (Rept. No. 1274);

H.R. 14586. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Culbertson, Mont. (Rept. No. 1275):

H. R. 14589. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the

H. R. 14601. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River between New Orleans and Gretna, La. (Rept. No. 1277);

H. R. 14602. An act to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress to the highway department of the State of Alabama to construct a bridge across Elk River between Lauderdale and Limestone Counties, Ala.," approved February 16, 1928 (Rept. No. 1278); and

H. R. 14657. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a railroad bridge and/or a toll bridge across the water between the mainland at or near Cedar Point and Dauphin Island, Ala. (Rept. No. 1279).

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CAREY:

A bill (S. 5680) for the leasing of agricultural lands by the Secretary of Agriculture for the purpose of reducing overproduction of certain agricultural commodities; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. WAGNER:

A bill (S. 5681) for the relief of the Sultzbach Clothing Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. REED:

A bill (S. 5682) granting a pension to John P. Haupt (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pen-

By Mr. BULKLEY:

A bill (S. 5683) to amend the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act approved January 22, 1932; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 572) to provide for further investigation of certain public-utility corporations engaged in interstate commerce, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

CORRECTION IN ENROLLMENT OF BILL

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I submit a concurrent resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. It merely corrects the spelling of two words in an act which was recently passed by Congress

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read. The Chief Clerk read the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 43), as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, in the enrollment of the bill (S. 4020) to give the Supreme Court of the United States authority to prescribe rules of practice and procedure with respect to proceedings in criminal cases after verdict, to strike out, on page 1, lines 8 and 9, respectively, of the engrossed bill the words "Porto Rico" and insert in lieu thereof "Puerto Rico."

Mr. NORRIS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and, without objection, the concurrent resolution is agreed to.

RULES FOR CONDUCTING SENATORIAL ELECTION CONTESTS

Mr. BLACK submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 367), which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be, and it hereby is, directed to prepare and report to the Senate as early as practicable rules and regulations providing for the conduct of election contests in this body, including provisions for charges to support such contests, the answers thereto, and the rules as to the admissibility and relevancy of evidence offered in the said contests.

INDIAN ALLOTMENTS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3508) to amend section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide for determining the heirs of deceased Indians for the disposi-

Mississippi River at or near Tenth Street in Bettendorf, | tion and sale of allotments of deceased Indians, for the leasing of allotments, and for other purposes," approved June 25, 1910, as amended, which were, on page 1, line 3, to strike out "That" and insert ""That," and on page 3, line 21, to strike out "Interior." and insert "Interior."

Mr. FRAZIER. I move that the Senate agree to the amendment of the House numbered 1 with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the word "That," as designated, insert the following:
"That section 1 of the act entitled 'An act to provide for determining the heirs of deceased Indians, for the leasing of allotments, and for other purposes, approved June 25, 1910, as amended, is amended to read as follows:
"'That'"

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment of the House is agreed to with the amendment to it submitted by the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. FRAZIER. I move that the Senate agree to House amendment numbered 2.

The motion was agreed to.

CONGRESSIONAL DIRECTORY FOR SEVENTY-THIRD CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 50), as follows:

Resolved, etc., That an edition of the Congressional Directory for the first session of the Seventy-third Congress be compiled, pre-pared, indexed, and published under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, as provided for in section 73 of the printing act approved January 12, 1895.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT TO PENDING APPROPRIATION BILL-FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I am compelled to leave the Chamber in a few minutes to fill an imperative engagement. I desire to offer an amendment to the committee amendment on page 22 of the independent offices appropriation bill, and ask that the amendment may be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Fess in the chair). The clerk will report the amendment for the information of the Senate.

On page 22, line 8, strike out "$780,000" and insert "$1,081,500." On page 22, line 13, strike out "$10,000" and insert "$20,000." On page 22, line 14, strike out "$790,000" and insert "$1,101,500."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the amendment, if agreed to, will give the Federal Trade Commission $8,000 less than the Budget estimate. It will be $365,000 less than the current appropriation—that is, the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933. The reduction as made by the House of Representatives was 65 per cent from the appropriation of the present fiscal year. The appropriation contemplated by the amendment just submitted will increase the amount recommended by the Senate committee by $311,500. It is necessary to adopt the amendment and make the appropriation unless the Congress wishes to terminate the various economic investigations which the Federal Trade Commission is constantly making under its general power; that is, under the direction by the President or Congress or one branch of the Congress and on its own initiative.

I shall reserve further discussion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will lie on the table for the present.

ADDRESS BY WILLARD T. CHEVALIER ON DEVELOPMENT OF HIGHWAYS

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, in view of the very vital interest in the development of our highway system in this country and the proposed legislation now before the Congress, I wish to present for the information of the Senate excerpts from the address given on February 15 at Atlantic City by Mr. Willard T. Chevalier, publishing director of the Engineering News-Record, New York City.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

There is no single influence in this country, in my judgment, that has contributed so powerfully to the development of this new transportation machine as has been the enabling act to set up economically and the control of articulation of all the elements that compose it, equal to the Federal aid to the States. It has not only insisted upon the laying out of contiguous roads for interstate traffic, it has not only insisted upon the continuity that is the essence of a transportation artery as opposed to a land-service facility, but it has also conducted the research necessary, it has established the standards necessary to see that these facilities are designed and built in accordance with the requirements of a transportation agency rather than of a local land-service facility. The national viewpoint in the development of our highway system has been the most powerful single factor to make it truly a transportation system rather than a local land-access facility, and now that we have this need for a better formulation and classification of highway services, there is all the more reason why we should continue the influence of the Bureau of Public Roads in our highway thinking and highway planning. To-day we have the additional reason that Federal highway aid has become self-liquidating by the imposition of a Federal gasoline tax and taxes upon tires, oil, and parts. We are providing an income to the Federal Government more than equal to the requirements of Federal aid, and every reason that can be given for opposing th diversion of State gas and vehicle taxes to other than highway purposes applies to the diversion of Federal taxes upon highway users, because the highway user is paying directly to the Federal Government more than enough to defray the expense involved in the Federal aid and supervision of our highway systems.

I think it is most important that we centralize the control and administration of highway features, so far as practical in every State, to insure sound planning and avoid waste. In a number of States to-day this process is going on. It is wise and well-founded, and if we are going to have a more rational classification of our roads and our highways to integrate them into a complete system, it is going to be of the utmost importance to centralize the design, construction, and administration of that system. In this day of economy it is necessary also for the sake of economy that can be realized over the present dispersement with many administrative agencies absorbing each one a part of the funds available in unnecessary administrative expense. If we are going to give the taxpayer, especially the property taxpayer, more road for his dollar, then it is necessary for us to eliminate much of the waste now involved in the administration of that dollar.

Next we must put forth our best effort to keep the main trunk system on a self-liquidating basis and equal to traffic demands. We have a great highway system to-day, and yet we have congestion, and we have situations that involve the public safety. We have a great need for by-passes in many cases; we have a need for realignment and reconstruction, a need for greater economy and safety in driving the highways. We have need for grade improvements where, in the first rush of road building, some of these new highways of ours were laid upon the same alignment and grades of the old land-service roads.

If we are going to keep our primary highway system as a part of a transportation machine self-liquidating, then it is necessary that we keep them up to it, that we keep up the efficiency, that we keep it in shape to encourage its use as a transportation artery rather than to discourage it. Furthermore, I sometimes wonder whether we have begun to cash in on our highway investment. We are dressed up and don't know where to go. We have made a tremendous investment and have an improved transportation machine and do not know how to use it. What do I mean by that? Simply that one of the greatest benefits to be derived by the community from an improved transportation machine is the simplification of our government structure. This present land of ours is carved up into thousands and thousands and thousands of governmental subdivisions to-day that are of no more necessity than two tails are to a cat. The governmental divisions of the country are based upon the days of the oxcart and the horse and buggy and mud roads as the only means by which the citizen could get to the county seat, the courthouse, or the community. To-day we have our county seats 10 or 15 minutes apart by a modern system of highways. The new transportation machine has offered us an opportunity to save untold millions in the needless cost of administering our government. But we have not yet had the intelligence or the stamina to seize upon it. The same applies to our educational system. There are school houses and school districts in this country to-day that are maintaining a school house and staff and overhead expense for the education of 1 or 2 or 3 children. The development of the school-bus system needs attention. Then we need to take this new transportation agency that we have created, with all of its values, and cash in on some of them. And when I hear people to-day urging that we cut our highway program and that we declare "a highway holiday" in order to cut down the cost of government and slash taxes I become very impatient.

I say to them, the place to cut the cost of government is in the cost of administering the government, not in the capital investment that we are putting into the very facilities that make it possible for us to cut the cost of government, but for one reason or another we do not take advantage of. Cuts in administrative and operating costs are true economies; cuts in capital investment may not be economies in any sense of the word, and the place to begin cutting the cost of government is in this needless waste of the taxpayers' money in maintaining and operating an anachronistic governmental structure.

The next point to bear in mind is to avoid excessive taxes on our highway users. Do not strangle the highways. That is not just a phantasy of mine or a ridiculous fear. I have been told that last year 2,000,000 cars were laid up by their owners because they were unable to pay the expenses involved in operating them. We are up against it. Give the people a new facility and they will use it and pay for it gladly. But keep loading upon them the expense for the use of the facility and there comes a time when no amount of increase in the rate will make up for the loss of the total revenue due to diminished use. All over the loss of the total revenue due to diminished use. All over the country to-day, animal-drawn vehicles are coming back. I have just returned from a trip of a couple of thousand miles through the Middle West and I know that is so there. I have talked to people who have returned from the South and I know that is so there. Why, actually, they are hitching old Dobbin to the Chevrolet in some communities and putting shafts on automobiles for animal draft. And those are the States that have run their gasoline taxes up out of all reason.

What is the use of making an investment in a great transportation machine and then arbitrarily running the rates up to a point where you cut down the use of it and the revenue from it? We shall have to stop talking about gasoline and vehicle taxes. They are not taxes. They are highway revenues as truly as the passenger receipts of a railroad are revenues, and the rates charged for service must bear some proportion to the cost of rendering the service and the ability of the buyer to pay for it, and it is perfectly proper that you put our highways on a self-liquidating basis, and avoid this insane diversion of our highway revenues to support fish hatcheries and schools for sheriffs, or what have you, all over the country, and avoid bleeding the highway userbuyer of our transportation service; then we shall be able to keep the cost down to a point where we would still patronize our highways and contribute to our revenues in doing so. It is a business proposition pure and simple. The motorist is not a Christmas tree. If we continue to look to him to carry the cost of Government by simply jacking up the taxes that we levy on him which are in fact a charge for the service, we are going to cause him to stop using the service; and if we do the highways will not be the chief agency of transportation.

One of the great troubles that our railroads suffer from to-day, one of their great complaints against the highway, is that the highway is taking traffic away that they once had, and why? Because of an utterly irrational rate structure built upon the principle of all that the traffic would bear, and which simply could not stand up under the test. Now, if we are going to follow the same process we are going to find the same problem and we are going to drive our people back from the use of the highway.

Incidentally in this matter of taxes and regulations, and, mind you. I want to insist upon looking at this transportation machine.

Incidentally in this matter of taxes and regulations, and, mind you, I want to insist upon looking at this transportation machine as a whole, I want to refer to the matter of taxation or regulation by taxation, which, in my judgment, is a wholly vicious thing; and yet we are being urged to-day that we should equalize the opportunity of the two means of transportation by loading the more efficient of the two for certain purposes with prohibitive taxation and regulation. Of all the economic folly I ever heard of, that is the worst; that is penalizing progress. If any of our transportation agencies to-day are overtaxed, if they are overregulated, if they are unfairly handicapped, the way to remedy that is to remove the handicap, not to put more handicap upon another agency of transportation that the public has provided out of its own pocket for its own service. That seems so elementary as scarcely to need a statement; and yet we have one great State in the Union that has already passed laws to the effect that the charge for hauling on the highways, regardless of the cost, shall not be less than that on a railroad between the same points; and we have also in the same State a law that trucks shall not carry a greater load than 7,000 pounds unless it is being carried to serve a railroad, and then you may carry 14,000 pounds on your truck. Why? I don't know; but that is an effort to regulate by taxation, and the only result of it will be to tax our traffic off the highways, and if we do that we can not possibly hope to get back a return on our highway investment; and so I say let us devote all of our energy to keeping the charges upon our highway users upon a fair and equitable basis, sufficient to defray the cost of providing and maintaining and regulating our highways with perhaps something over for an extension of our highway system to provide feeders that will increase the traffic and therefore the revenues from our highways rather than regulation or taxation that will drive the traffic off our highways and decrea

I am speaking here in behalf of justice and equity for the new highway transportation agency, but I want to step out of my part long enough to express sympathy for the men in this generation who are charged with the responsibility of operating our railroad facilities. The evils from which they suffer are not of their creation, but God knows the railroad brought all its troubles upon itself, and incidentally we are being treated to a great flood of propaganda on that subject. We hear a great deal to-day about what it is going to do to the whole financial structure of this country if we do not do something to keep people from using the highways and force them to use the railroads. Well, it is a lot of hokum. We hear a great deal about the investments of insurance companies, for example. Well, as a matter of fact, in 1906, 36 per cent of the resources of our insurance companies were in railroad securities, to-day less than 16 per cent of their resources are in railroad securities. You could wipe out all the railroad securities which are in the resources of our insurance companies to-day and the average paper loss of policy owners would be $48. So, let us not be too disconsolate about the need for handicapping highway development in order to preserve the financial structure of the country.

Now, we need, if we are going to develop intelligent highway programs, to keep the public informed on the economic facts and how highway funds are being invested. I wonder if all of you have seen the charts that are being displayed in the railroad stations of this country convenient to the ticket offices calculated to put the fear of Jehovah into the hearts of the taxpayers. I wrote an article, which appears in the January issue of Bus Transportaan article, which appears in the January issue of Bus Hanspotta-tion, which is an analysis of that chart, and I want to say that in 30 years' experience I have never seen a more untrue, a more mis-leading, or a more perverted presentation of data than is conveyed in that chart. It is all full of cute little tricks to frighten the taxpayer out of his wits, but it relies for its effect upon two

The first is that the chart shows the tremendous increase in taxation for our highways during the last seven years, but it does not bring out and is drawn to conceal the fact that substantially the whole of that increase has been from gasoline and vehicle the whole of that increase has been from gasoline and vehicle taxes and that in that time there has been no increase in the property taxes levied in behalf of our highways. It also conceals the fact that practically all the property taxes mentioned in that chart are being spent on the local or land-access roads, which should properly be paid for by taxes upon land to which they give access and value; that substantially the whole amount of money that is being spent upon the main arteries of traffic, the transportation machine proper, come from the users of that transportation machine in the form of vehicle taxes and gasoline tax. That fact is carefully cancealed in this chart. Furthermore, the first item in this dish is a part of the chart which shows a tremendous accumucarefully cancealed in this chart. Furthermore, the first item in this dish is a part of the chart which shows a tremendous accumulating deficit that must be paid for by future taxpayers for a dead horse, the idea being that the life of the bonds so far exceeds the life of the highways that we are building up a huge deficit that is hanging over us like a great cloud and some day will descend upon us and engulf us. That is the impression created upon the average business man by this chart. Well, the joker in that is that the average layman does not understand it, but you will see it. The joker is that the whole calculation is based on the asit. The joker is that the whole calculation is based on the assumption that the life of the highway is no more than 10 years; in other words, the average bond period of our highway bonds is about 20 years. If the maker of this chart had assumed a 20-year life for our highways, his deficit would have disappeared in thin air. And so he has assumed 10 years. I do not know why he did not assume five years; then he could have made a lot more im-pressive exhibit. However, he assumes 10 years as the life of a not assume five years; then he could have made a lot more impressive exhibit. However, he assumes 10 years as the life of a highway to build up a deficit. Let us look at that for a minute. An analysis of 70,000 miles of Federal-aid roads built between 1917 and 1928 of all sorts shows that 40 per cent of the cost of those highways went into rights of way, grading, drainage structures, and bridges. Now, the maker of this chart, of course, has played upon the layman's impression that the life of a highway is the life of the surface, but everyone knows that it is ridiculous to figure the life of a highway by the life of the surface as it is the life of the surface, but everyone knows that it is ridiculous to figure the life of a highway by the life of the surface as it would be to figure the life of a railroad on the life of the steel rails that the trains run over. Now, I say the average for 70,000 miles of roads of all sorts was 40 per cent in these permanent items. If you take the sand or clay roads, the permanent items amount to 70 per cent of the cost of the road. If you take a gravel road, they amount to 49 per cent of the cost of the road. So you see the quicker the road surface may wear out, the less of the investment is not the road surface. And so it would seem to anyone that knows anything about the matter and wants to be honest that the 20-year term for our highway bonds is a very reasonable that knows anything about the matter and wants to be honest that the 20-year term for our highway bonds is a very reasonable and conservative term, and there is, in fact, no accumulating deficit in our highway system. Nevertheless the man on the street does not know these things that I am talking to you about. He just takes that for granted and wants to know where the highway extravagance of this country is going to lead him. I have had intelligent business men ask me, "Have you seen this chart in the railroad stations?" and they said, "My God, you fellows on the highways are going to run this country into bankruptcy." There is need for some intelligent education on the subject of highway investments.

The legislators of this country are facing an alternative; the alternative is, are they going to relieve unemployment by increasing employment or by dispensing charity? That is all; it is just as clear-cut as that. I admit that the solution is not simple, but I contend that the problem is clear-cut. Our people do not want charity. An engineer told me recently about a man, pretty well charity. An engineer told me recently about a man, pretty well along in years, that he picked up on a road out in one of the Western States, I think in Colorado, and he was walking 15 miles because he heard there was a highway construction job up the line and he wanted to get a job, he wanted one of those 5-hour shifts. That man could have gotten charity in the town he had just left but de did not want charity, he wanted a job and he was walking 15 miles to get it, and that is the spirit of the American people—or has been up to now—and that spirit is a very precious thing and the future of our country depends upon our preserving that spirit, and yet there are times when I am temporarily afraid that we are fastening upon this country to-day a psychology of the dole. I am afraid that we are letting ourselves in for a new racket, the relief racket. I know that the professional welfare worker can show you figures showing how much further a charity dollar goes in relief than an employment dollar, but ther a charity dollar goes in relief than an employment dollar, but something way down inside of me tells me that those figures are hay wire. No man living on charity can be anything else than a liability to the community, and a man at work is an asset to the community. He is a producer. He is one of the producing agencies; he is an element of wealth in the community.

You can not put all the unemployed at work on highways, but we can keep the men we have on the highways now at work and keep them off the bread line, can we not? And we can put a lot of people who are on the bread line to work, can we not? Why should we divert the revenues of our highway system to this thing and that thing, and then lay off men and create more unemployment only to turn around and dole out the money as a charity? Throw the man out of a job and put him on the bread line; you take him from an asset and make him a liability and develop the psychology of the dole. It is a complicated matter, but it is a serious matter and I believe we are fastening upon ourselves an institution that is going to survive long after the need has passed. You will substitute for the will to work and the determination to be self-supporting the feeling that "Oh, well, we can live on the community;" and you are striking at one of the fundamental elements of the country.

It has been said, and well said, that the highway systems of this country can absorb a great deal of unemployment and relieve it quickly. We have our State highway departments, our programs and our plans. We can go ahead like that. These emergency appropriations have been put under contract and spent like that, and we have other agencies that have floundered and are still trying to get set up to spend some of the money that has been made available to them.

NATIONAL GRANGE'S PROGRAM FOR RECONSTRUCTION

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD a recent radio address by L. J. Taber, master of the National Grange, delivered at Washington, D. C., February 18, 1933, and to urge the Senators to give careful and thoughtful attention to the contents of this

I regard Mr. Taber as one of the ablest farm leaders in the country to-day. His statement of the farm situation, of the relationship of agriculture to industry, of the causes of our present distressed condition, and his discussion of basic remedies should be given intensive study by all of us. and by the country.

The Grange program, as outlined and amplified by Mr. Taber in this address, is fundamentally sound, essentially workable, in my judgment. His analysis is clear-cut and compelling. He urges lifting farm prices to restore farm purchasing power. I consider that essential. He points out clearly that while our domestic markets are basically most important, agriculture also must have foreign markets reopened for American farm products.

I especially commend to the Senate Mr. Taber's program for revision of the money system so that we will have a stable dollar-stable in purchasing power, rather than simply constant in the amount of gold it contains.

"We must either reflate or repudiate," Mr. Taber says, discussing the relation of dollars to debts. And I believe he is right. Mr. President, I send Mr. Taber's address to the desk, with the request that it be printed in the RECORD, and again urge my colleagues to give it careful attention.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and it is as follows:

Pursuant to the terms of a resolution proposed by Senator Harrison of Mississippi, the Senate Committee on Finance is conducting hearings with a view to determining more clearly the causes of the present depression, to secure suggestions for cure, and as an aid in formulating policies for the prevention of its recurrence.

Upon invitation of Senator Smoot, chairman of the committee, leaders in agriculture, industry, commerce, finance, and other walks of life are appearing before the committee to present their views. As master of the National Grange, it was my privilege to testify at one of these hearings on February 17.

The causes of this depression are many, some of them intricate and some not yet revealed, but the fundamental cause is apparent to all. We have violated the laws of God and the laws of economics and are paying the penalty. The measures necessary to restore normal conditions are some of them shrouded in mystery, but the essential step is that with common sense we apply social and economic justice to all groups alike.

CAUSES OF THE DEPRESSION

The prime cause of all our troubles can be traced back to the World War. This fire, started by ambition and hate, that burned in Europe until it consumed the accumulated savings of a century and burdened the world with debt, was extinguished only with the blood of millions of the best young men of the world. The aftermath of geographic dislocation, unwise territorial distribution, unsound burdens of debt and reparations, created such economic conditions that retribution was almost certain to over-

Second. The wild orgy of speculation that swept the Nation, leading many to believe that playing a bull market was the easy road to wealth and that the old-fashioned virtues of thrift, economy, and toll had become obsolete, contributed greatly to our difficulties. We are all now paying for this folly.

Third. The maldistribution of wealth that created millionaires like mushrooms and did not equitably distribute the wealth produced was an important factor in bringing on the depression.

Fourth. The machine age, inventive genius and scientific discovery caused productive ability to outrun consumptive capacity. We now know that mass production without mass consumption leads to disaster.

Fifth. Our failure to provide a stable medium of exchange added to national difficulties.

added to national difficulties.

Sixth. Next to the war, the most fundamental cause of the collapse of 1929 and the three years of disaster that has overtaken the Nation was the failure of America to do justice to agriculture. The farm problem was allowed to grow more acute until the purchasing power of agriculture was almost destroyed and large groups of our people were brought to the verge of bankruptcy while the Nation was yet in seeming prosperity.

Agriculture has been basic in every civilization. It produces the food, the clothing, and most of the shelter of mankind. No amount of invention, no amount of scientific discovery, no amount of congesting in cities ever has or ever will enable a nation to get away from its direct relation upon the soil. Farm prosperity is synonymous with national well being. Prosperity and stability can not return until the purchasing power of the and stability can not return until the purchasing power of the farmer is restored.

AGRICULTURAL DEPRESSION 12 YEARS OLD

While the depression is only a little more than three years old, so far as it relates to industry and finance, it is necessary to emphasize the fact that agriculture has been in serious distress for 12 years. In order to get a clear perception of the unparalleled difficulties confronting the farmer to-day, we must go back to the time of the World War.

The period of 1914 and 1917 found American agriculture in a fairly prosperous condition, because prices of farm products had been gradually advancing since the beginning of the century. The consuming power of our own people was overtaking farm production. From the time when the United States entered the war, in April, 1917, the highly important part devolving upon the farmer was emphasized in governmental and military circles.

Attractive posters bearing the legend, "Food Will Win the War," were on display throughout the agricultural sections of the war," were on display throughout the agricultural sections of the country. Prices were lifted, and appeals were made to the patriotism of the farmer, while production campaigns were waged in every nook and corner of rural America. Every possible effort was made by the Government to convince the farmer that it was his duty to expand his acreage, purchase improved machinery, and produce the largest possible amount of food. The farmers respected by the most recombination to this coult for inand produce the largest possible amount of food. The farmers responded in the most magnificent manner to this call for increased production, and in addition furnished more than one-fourth of the fighting men for the Army. The food produced on American farms helped save the cause of democracy and bring victory to the Allies. This speeding up of production resulted in the accumulation of large supplies of foodstuffs which, after the close of the conflict, had to compete with commodities that had piled up in Argentina, Australia, and other distant lands, and which were now moved to the markets of the world. which were now moved to the markets of the world.

HOW FARMER WAS DEFLATED

A crusade was launched through the office of the Attorney General to bring down the prices of farm products. Leaders of farmers' cooperative associations in many sections of the country were placed under arrest and prosecuted under the antitrust laws for trying to prevent price decline. Government stocks of food were advertised at bargain prices through the agency of the Post Office Department, and Government wool was sold at auction to the highest hidder. the highest bidder.

All this was in marked contrast to the treatment accorded industry by the Government. After the war the Government paid claims aggregating more than $500,000,000 to the holders of uncompleted war contracts. Approximately $500,000,000 was paid the railroads for injury claims to their property, and more than a billion dollars worth of war supplies were left in France and sold for a song. But there was no indemnity paid to the farmer. To add to the difficulties confronting agriculture under these circumstances, the Federal reserve system inaugurated a policy of deflation through successive advances in discount rates. Hundreds of thousands of farmers went bankrupt through no fault of their own during 1921–22. With slight interruptions the agricultural depression continued until the crash of 1929. Since then what had been a depression has become a disaster.

OUR OLDEST UNSOLVED PROBLEM

The oldest unanswered problem confronting the American people is the farm problem. In the famous document submitted by Alexander Hamilton to Congress in 1791, he recommended a protective tariff as an agency of developing our infant industries and providing revenues for the Government. He also pointed out that tariff legislation might handicap the producers of raw material, especially agriculture. To correct this inequality, he recommended that a portion of the tariff revenues should be used as a bounty on agricultural exports as a means of offsetting increased costs to agriculture. Congress adopted the first portion of Hamilton's agriculture. Congress adopted the first portion of Hamilton's l recommendation, later adding provisions for the drawback and for manufacturing in bond so as not to handicap American manufacturers in their efforts to compete in the markets of the world.

Unfortunately the second part of Hamilton's recommendation, the providing of some offset or means of doing justice to agriculture, was not enacted. Thus, with this complement to our tariff structure ignored, we have maintained a lopsided policy, leaving the products of the major portion of the plow lands of the Nation the products of the major portion of the plow lands of the Nation without direct tariff protection.

The opening up of new and cheap land, the limitless fertility of our soil, and the improvement in agricultural machinery enabled the American farmer to hold the export market for approximately a century without serious difficulty. In the nineties, David Lubin, of California, founder of the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome and one of the foremost agricultural economists of his day, brought forward the framework of the export debenture plan as an aid in making the tariff effective on our surplus crops but as an aid in making the tariff effective on our surplus crops, but it was not adopted.

The struggle for the equalization fee, the determined fight made by the grange in recent years for the export debenture, and the discussion of the domestic-allotment legislation in this Congress are all chapters in this century-and-a-half-old struggle to do justice and bring equality to the American farmer.

Ever since the first session of Congress our Government has been constantly tinkering with economic laws through patent grants, tariff acts, restrictive, permissive, and protective legislation, and during this century and a half most of these benefits have gone to others than the farmer. We have been spending hundreds of millions of collers in river and herby development. of millions of dollars in river and harbor development. We have spent millions of dollars in locks and experimental barge service. Large sums are spent in lighting airways across the continent. High prices are given for the carrying of the mail in the hope of developing the merchant marine. The Government delegated some of its constitutional authority of issuing money to the national banks and the Federal reserve system. Our Government has granted the right of eminent domain, has given large tracts of land, and has set up special machinery for the development of railroads and interstate commerce. In the way of protecting our ideals, we have set up stringent immigration restrictions. Authors and inventors have been protected by copyright and patent privileges

Thus for a century and a half our Government has interfered with the operation of economic laws, and in this program others have been benefited more than the farmer. In seeking to maintain on American soil a higher standard of living than obtains in the rest of the world, we have built such a fabric of protective, restrictive, and permissive legislation and administration that it can not be destroyed without affecting patients welfare. can not be destroyed without affecting national welfare. Agriculture must secure the same privileges and opportunities that others enjoy.

Supporting figures to prove the necessity of lifting farm prices are unnecessary. However, I submit the fact that the value of our farms and their equipment shrunk from $79,000,000,000 in 1919 to approximately half that figure at present-day levels. Farm income has declined from approximately $12,000,000,000 in 1929 to $5,000,000,000 to-day. The latest price index of the Department of Agriculture places all farm commodities at 51 per cent, and the things the farmer buys at 105 per cent of the pre-war level. In other words, the farm dollar to-day is worth approximately 49 cents. mately 49 cents.

STEPS FOR RECOVERY

The first step in the Grange program for stability and prosperity is lifting farm prices and increasing farm purchasing power. We have no choice in the matter. We are compelled to either demand the same type of price-lifting machinery and governmental assistance that is given to other interests, or we must seek a lowering of tariffs and a readjustment of all legislation granting special favors to other groups.

We must bring equivalent tariff benefits to surplus-producing commodities either through the export debenture, through a simplified domestic allotment, the equalization fee, or a combination of these methods. Foreign markets must be restored and new markets found. Through research we must develop new uses for farm products and guide production with intelligence and information.

Another step in lifting prices will come through reduction of distribution costs and in giving the farmer a larger share of the consumer's dollar. Cooperative marketing is yet in its infancy. The final solution of our marketing problems will not come until our major farm crops find their way to market through farmer-owned and farmer-controlled marketing agencies, beginning with the farmer-producer and approaching as pear the ultimate conthe farmer-producer and approaching as near the ultimate consumer as conditions will permit.

sumer as conditions will permit.

The second step to bring stability to agriculture, the Nation, and the world is a stable and honest monetary system. Agriculture demands a dollar worth 100 cents, no more and no less. A dishonest dollar is one that requires more than 100 cents with which to pay a dollar's debt, or one that permits the payment of the same debt for less than 100 cents. Uncontrolled infiation will lead to greater suffering and disaster than deflation. We must recognize the fact, however, that we shall either reflate or repudiate. Inexorable economic laws require reflation of our volume of currency and credit, or the tragedy of bankruptcy and possible repudiation will stalk through the land.

IRON DEETS AND RUBBER MONEY

Agriculture is suffering from iron debts and rubber money. What has happened to agriculture in the way of debt-paying ability at the present level of commodity prices is graphically told in the subjoined table. The Bureau of Agricultural Economics of the United States Department of Agriculture is authority for the statement that the farm barometer in January, 1933, stood at 51. Comparing to-day's farm prices with the former price index, the table below shows in terms of what the farmer has to sell just how much he has to pay in the way of farm crops for each dollar borrowed during each of the years indicated in the table.

A dollar borrowed in the year (if paid in January, 1933):

1917	3.45
1918	3.92
1919	4.10
1920	4.02
1921	2.27
1922	2.43
1923	2.65
1924	2.63
1925	2.88
1926	2.67
1927	2.57
1928	2.73
1929	2.71
1930	2, 29
1931	1.57
1932	1.12

(January, 1933, equals 100.)

The third step in our program is the reduction of interest rates, and providing an ample reservoir of credit to take care of the needs of agriculture in this crisis.

The wholesale foreclosures of farm mortgages which have been darkening our land and wrecking the homes and lives of our people must stop. The full power of the Federal Government must be invoked to bring this about in an orderly and effective way.

By reason of conditions for which in the main he is not responsible and which are utterly beyond his control, the American farmer to-day finds himself in the most difficult financial and economic situation that has confronted agriculture since the founding of the Republic.

The alarming increase of tax sales and foreclosures during recent months threatens the very foundations of American institutions. In the last six years every ninth farmer in the United States has lost his farm through mortgage foreclosure, tax de-

States has lost his farm through mortgage foreclosure, tax delinquency, or bankruptcy.

The 1930 census indicates a farm-mortgage debt of about $9,241,-000,000, with an average rate of interest of 6.1 per cent. All other farm debts approximate $3,000,000,000, and the interest rate on this additional debt ranges from 6 to 12 per cent. The total annual outlay for interest on the farm debt is more than $800,-000,000. The two chief cash crops of the American farm, wheat and cotton, were valued at approximately $600,000,000 for the year 1932, a sum just about sufficient to pay the interest on the mortgage debt alone. gage debt alone.

INTEREST RATES MUST BE CUT

A reduction of one-third in the interest rate on an amortized loan running for 33 years has the same effect as a reduction of more than one-third in the total face of the debt, and yet it will more than one-third in the total face of the debt, and yet it will not adversely affect general security values. It is apparent that the farmer can not continue to pay 6, 7, and 8 per cent interest at prevailing commodity prices. Farm prices must come up or interest charges must come down, and the first step toward security is a 30 or 40 per cent reduction in interest charges to carry farmers through this period of ruinously low prices. This can be done through emergency loans, through the reamortization of loans, and through the postponement of principal payments. Legislation now pending providing for simplified debt composition commissions should pass.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation act should be smended.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation act should be amended The Reconstruction Finance Corporation act should be amended and at least $500,000,000 appropriated to it as a fund from which farmers and small home owners can borrow at low interest rates to pay delinquent interest and taxes, thus preventing foreclosures and stabilizing rural conditions during this period of low prices. Our entire rural-credit machinery must be revamped, coordinated, and consolidated. It is unsound to have such a large number of scattered agencies making loans to agriculture. These should be brought under one head, providing a sound system of rural credit under cooperative farm control and providing:

(a) The unification of the two branches of the farm-loan system.

system.

(b) The retirement of present farm-loan bonds and substituting low interest-bearing Government guaranty bonds in their place.
 (c) Reduce interest rates on all farm mortgages from approximately 6 to 4 per cent or less.

(d) Provide an ample reservoir of credit to take care of the needs of agriculture and to provide for new loans for the marketing, producing, and long-time credit needs of agriculture.

This program will be of immense value to the Nation, stabilize real-estate values, which are after all the foundation of our credit structure, and do it without placing an undue burden on the Government or injuring any group.

OTHER NECESSARY STEPS

These three essentials of lifting prices, providing an honest dollar, and reducing interest rates are emergency steps that can not be postponed if agricultural conditions are to be stabilized. They alone will not cure all farm ills, but they are fundamental to re-covery and can be enacted into law at this session of Congress or in a special session later to be called.

A sound program of land utilization is essential to permanent agricultural recovery. We must recognize the conservational, recreational, and forestry uses of land, as well as that of producing food.

tional, and forestry uses of land, as well as that of producing food. Millions of acres of submarginal land should go into forestry. Stability in our banking structure requires revamping and reorganization of the credit machinery of the Nation. One of the dark pages of the last three years has been the story of bank fallures and staggering losses to depositors. We must give careful consideration and study to see if a system of Federal depositories can not be devised where the savings of the Nation will be safe and act as a Rock of Gibraltar in periods of depression.

It is apparent that there will be no stability or permanent re-

It is apparent that there will be no stability or permanent re-covery in prices until the discussion of foreign war debts is brought covery in prices until the discussion of foreign war debts is brought to a stop, and a definite policy is established. These debts are honest; they should be paid and should not be canceled. Nations that can not pay in full should be given credit on purchases of farm products or other commodities in the United States. Payments from the war debt should be used to open markets and promote international trade. However, America's greatest market is at home. Bring back the purchasing power of the millions of farmers and unemployed and they will absorb many times as much goods as was exported from the United States in our greatest veer year.

The farmers' crushing tax burdens are largely of local and State origin. Nevertheless agriculture is interested in economy and efficiency in government from top to bottom. Reorganization and efficiency in the Federal Government is essential. Hundreds of of dollars can be saved by further reorganization. Agriculture has as much at stake as any other group in this reorganization. We must demand that all departments dealing with the surface use of land be brought under the Department of Agrisurface use of land be brought dider the reparation, and sound national development can go forward in harmony with present and future needs of agriculture.

The farmers' transportation costs are greater than his tax bill. Highway development has been of incalculable value to rural life and to the Nation. The farmer is entitled to the cheapest type of transportation that modern science can bring. Rather than burden motor transportation with unnecessary restrictions, we should remove limitations and burdens from the railroads. Highways, railways, waterways, and airways all should be available to serve the best interests of rural life.

In our program for the restoration of normal conditions, we must not lose sight of the fact that health, education, and research must not be crippled by unwise pruning. There are some things that the Nation can not afford to do without even in this period of depression. We must protect the opportunities of generations yet unborn and so plan our reorganization and readjustment that we will preserve the largest measure of opportunity to the future youth of the open country.

CONFIDENCE MUST BE RESTORED

One of the greatest causes of the continuation and severity of the depression is the loss of confidence of many of our citizens. While there have been disappointments, severe losses, and heart-breaking suffering, yet we must remember that the resources with breaking suffering, yet we must remember that the resources with which nature endowed us remain unimpaired. Many of us do not now have property that we once thought we had, but the resources of soil, forest, mine, lake, and stream all remain. Our factories, our public improvements, our transportation machinery are here to serve us. There has not been lost anything that will be fundamental to the welfare of America a quarter of a century half tury or a half century hence, unless we permit ourselves to lose confidence, courage, and hope.

No amount of reflation or protective legislation, no amount of artificial stimulation will bring permanently better times unless we restore and maintain the confidence of the people of this country in our resources, in our Govenment, and in our ability to complete the task of readjustment and reconstruction.

Our difficulties are not insoluble. All necessary readjustments can be made if we have statesmanship and vision and at the same can be made it we have statesmanship and vision and at the same time recognize that the gravity of the situation calls for imme-diate action. A danger in this crisis is the constant tendency to look to Washington as a source of all relief, forgetting the power of individual initiative and organization and community self-help.

A hopeful sign of the present is found in the recognition of the American farmer of the power and necessity for organization. Since the National Grange was established in 1867, community helpfulness and the power of organized effort have been a continuing factor in rural development. The hour is at hand when farmers everywhere should join the farm organization that measures up to their ideals and should utilize the forces of education, organization, and cooperation in restoring and maintaining the morale, the courage, and the fighting spirit of the open country. We must guide our organized activities with the recognition that agriculture has a soul as well as a body and we must seek to touch those spiritual mainsprings that not only sustain in times of trial but build for the better days to come.

IN DEFENSE OF LOUISIANA

Mr. LONG resumed and concluded the speech begun by him yesterday, which follows entire:

Tuesday, February 21, 1933

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I had intended to have something to say on yesterday as a matter of personal privilege relative to a few statements which have been issued by a gentleman who styles himself "General" Ansell relative to the Louisiana so-called-to-be election probe. I could not see my way clear to interfere with the relief legislation which was being considered yesterday, and for that reason I waited until I could secure recognition on the floor to-day to discuss these matters.

Mr. President, the Senate adopted a resolution providing for the appointment of a committee to investigate expenditures and irregularities in primary and general elections of last fall, and I think I voted for that resolution. I conceded that under the resolution a committee of the Senate had a right to investigate expenditures and irregularities in the primary and general election occurring in all States. The committee was called upon to go into several States, but went into the State of Louisiana only.

When the subcommittee first went there I asked that some showing of irregularity be required. The campaign opposition insisted that it could not make any showing of irregularity at the time, but that the Senate would have to send investigators there to prove the charges that they were willing to swear to, but which they could not offer one line to prove themselves.

NO PROOF OF FRAUD DEVELOPED

That was back in the month of October, 1932. Before that time a horde of investigators was sent to Louisianaseveral of them, I understand seven in number. They investigated in the State of Louisiana through the months of October, November, December, January, and February-five months-and then another hearing was called. At the end of five months I asked, as a Member of the Senate and as a representative of the Senator elect-and the Senator elect, the Hon. John H. Overton, made the same request—that if the hearing was going to be held in Louisiana we be given the report and the charges which we were supposed to face. I was informed by the chairman of the committee that the committee had decided not to make the report accessible to anyone. I therefore requested that we be given a bill of particulars and specifications showing what was charged (as a result of the five months' investigation with the people's money) to have been developed in the State of Louisiana. I was informed again that none such would be forthcoming. So I yielded to that position.

I was told by one or two members of the committee that they saw no reason why we should not be furnished with such report. I was told by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead] that in his contest he was given the reports. I was assured by others that they would undertake to secure the same consideration for us as has been given in the Alabama and other cases. But I did not want to use my friends to the point where I thought it might be embarrassing to them, and I made no further request and yielded to the stand of the chairman of the subcommittee that no such information would be forthcoming.

So we went down to Louisiana, gentlemen of the Senate, after the State had been raked from center to circumference for five months, after every roll had been checked with Government money, after the State for five months had had from one to five newspaper reports in it every day that fraud was being discovered by leaps and bounds and merely awaited the coming of a senatorial committee to prove the disastrous calamity with which the investigation was then struggling.

RESCUED BY A BURGLAR

We waited five months. The committee saw fit to employ an attorney to assist it in developing the facts. They employed General Ansell, against whom no less report has been made than was made against Benedict Arnold the night he sold out West Point. They saw fit to authorize the chairman of the committee to employ an attorney, and I assume and believe the chairman acted in good faith and in good conscience in employing an attorney. The chairman sought assistance and rescue in the employment of his counsel. He might as well have prayed for a burglar to have delivered him from a holdup on the highway at night as to have employed the Hon. "Gen." Samuel Tilden Ansell, concerning whom I will give some belated information as to his career.

The lately designated Samuel Ansell is the famous Grover Cleveland Bergdoll pot-of-gold attorney. He was the gentleman who practically forged his own appointment as Judge Advocate General in 1917. We have it here from the files of the Government that in the year 1917 this man Ansell went to the then Judge Advocate General, Mr. Crowder, and asked, in view of the very heavy work that General Crowder was having to do, if he (Crowder) would not recommend him (Ansell) to be appointed Acting Judge Advocate General. The War Department records show that General Crowder told him that he would have to make that application to the Secretary of War.

The next record of the War Department shows that this man Ansell went to the Chief of Staff and told the Chief of Staff that General Crowder had ordered him to issue an order naming him (Ansell) Acting Judge Advocate General of the Army, and that the Chief of Staff actually ordered such an order to be issued, which was discovered by General Crowder, Judge Advocate General, and the Secretary of War ordered it stricken from the file and not to be published, and demoted Ansell back to brigadier general, and there was no trial, for later he resigned from the Army.

Mr. President, Grover Cleveland Bergdoll was a draft evader of the World War, a very rich young man, the son of very wealthy parents, living in Philadelphia, or near Philadelphia. He was of German-born parentage, I believe, at least on the father's side.

Near the close of the war this draft evader was apprehended and arrested. He was found shielded with considerable artillery in his own house, and it was after considerable risk and effort that he was arrested. He was tried and imprisoned as a military prisoner at Governors Island, N. Y., and while he was in the military prison many efforts were made to secure his release through the courts and by various other processes.

It was along about that time that "General" Ansell, as he calls himself—and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Clark] disputes his right to that title—it was along about that time that Mr. Ansell was employed in the case.

Mr. Ansell had been in the War Department. He had been in intimate contact and close association with the War Department generals and subordinates who would have had the right to grant release to the prisoner if release could have been granted for any temporary purpose. It was through Mr. Ansell's connections with the men in the War Department, with whom he had been in close daily association, that Mr. Ansell, upon resigning from the Army, was able again to contact them so as to secure the release of the prisoner, Grover Cleveland Bergdoll, from Governors Island, for the purpose of his escape, as Congress so saw it through its committee.

THE "POT-OF-GOLD" ESCAPE

While General Ansell was in the Army he would have been subject to court-martial for his conduct, so the congressional committee reported, but he resigned and took the Bergdoll case, putting himself outside of court-martial before the "pot-of-gold" scheme was advanced by him.

Mr. President and gentlemen of the Senate, it was through General Ansell that there was hatched up the pot-of-gold story, the story that Bergdoll, who was a prisoner at Governors Island, had hidden $150,000 in gold in the mountains of Maryland, and they wanted his release in order that he might go out and find the gold and bring it back, and it was stated that he would be returned to Governors Island.

The prisoner's release was secured through Mr. Ansell and the contacts which he had with men in the Army; and through the efforts of Mr. Ansell, under promises which he made, but did not keep and did not intend to keep, so the committee says, Bergdoll was allowed to escape. He never went within hailing distance of any mountains where he was

Canada and then found his way to Germany.

Mr. President, as the last part of the history, as the report which will be appended to my remarks will show, Bergdoll's escape was investigated by a committee of Congress, and they found and reported, as will be seen from the report which will be printed to-morrow morning at the conclusion of my remarks, that the master mind of the conspiracy and of the escape was Mr .- or "General"-Ansell, as he calls himself; and they found that the conspiracy was such that, while no punishment by court-martial could be meted out to Ansell for the hatched-up scheme and efforts which resulted in the escape of this prisoner, none the less, said the congressional committee, he ought never to be allowed to practice before a court or to appear before a committee of Congress or of the United States again. That is the report of the Congress I have submitted, which in detail goes further than I care to go at this time.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LONG. Certainly. Mr. CLARK. The Senator will recall that General Ansell's title is simply a courtesy title; that he was actually retired as lieutenant colonel in the Army.

Mr. LONG. He gives himself that title. I say that he has as much right to that as any other title. He has as much right to that title as he has to the title of honorable citizen. He has as much right to be called "General" as he has to be sent to the State of Louisiana, and I will show that in a minute. I will read the record, if that is disputed. He has been sent down to Louisiana. I will show in a moment what part his nefarious record has to do with what happened down in that State.

First I will read from the Literary Digest. They usually have pretty good logic when they are writing about me, my enemies will admit.

The Literary Digest's review of public act in Bergdoll case. September 3, 1921. Quoting from the Literary Digest,

THE WIDENING BERGDOLL SCANDAL

More malodorous than ever, many papers agree, is the case of the notorious draft dodger, Grover Cleveland Bergdoll, as illumithe notorious draft dodger, Grover Cleveland Bergdoli, as Illuminated by the investigation of a congressional committee, the majority of which report finds that his escape was made possible by a conspiracy of Army officers, of which Brig. Gen. Samuel Tilden Ansell was the "master mind." "As the case stands now," remarks the Houston Chronicle, "the country is disgraced not so much by the way Bergdoll flouted its authority, but because there were so many pretended patriots willing to help him."

Quoting the Literary Digest further-

Both the majority and minority reports, the one signed by three members, of whom two are Democrats and the other by two Republicans, "support the reported boast of that fugitive that 'he made the Americans look like a bunch of boobs,'" says the Pittsburgh Gazette Times, "the Americans referred to being those who should have kept him safely in custody."

Quoting the Literary Digest still further

While "there are many who participated in the conspiracy leading to Bergdoll's escape and the acquittal of those who brought it about," says the majority report, according to press quotations, "there are three who are more culpable than the rest." In this connection are named General Ansell, who was one of the draft dodger's counsel, Col. John R. Hunt, commander at Fort Jay, where Bergdoll was confined, and Col. Charles C. Cresson, who prosecuted Colonel Hunt when that officer was court-martialed. As for General Ansell, "he is now out of the Army," runs the report.

Then follows the report in these words:

He (Ansell) is beyond the jurisdiction of court-martial proceedings, but provision should be made against his future practice before any of the departments, before any court-martial, or in the courts of the District of Columbia, or the Nation above whose safety and integrity he has placed gold.

Instead of that, things lay quiet a while, and this year Mr. Ansell was called upon to go down to see if there were irregularities in the election of John H. Overton. This man Ansell, recommended for disbarment, a scoundrel and a thief of the deepest dye and lowest order of crookdom, according to a committee of Congress, was sent down to supposed to have hidden the gold, but he found his way into | investigate the private life, not of Overton, not of Broussard, but, as he construed his job, of a man who had been elected to every office within the gift of the people of the State of Louisiana-if it did happen to be me.

I want to give the Senate, before I go a little further into the conduct of this scoundrel, the advisor of the chairman, the select counsel of the chairman, picked by the chairman, condemned by the Government as a thief and a scoundrel and a crook-

The VICE PRESIDENT (rapping with his gavel). Senator from Louisiana must not reflect upon a Senator.

Mr. LONG. I am not reflecting on the Senator. I am trying to tell the Senator who he picked and who guided him. He might as well have gone to the galleys.

Thereupon this investigation recessed, or rather proceeded into Louisiana under the guidance of Mr. Ansell. The chairman of the subcommittee, the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Howell], and the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] were the only members of the subcommittee present. The ruling of the Chair was, therefore, final. Nothing that he did could be undone. I, as a colleague in the Senate, approached the chairman, and I approached the Senator from Wyoming. I was told by the chairman that regardless of whatever anybody else thought, he was absolute in the premises. I thereupon knew that that meant that Mr. Ansell was absolute in the premises.

For many years, Mr. President and gentlemen of the Senate, the conflicts that I have had in the State of Louisiana have been known to the world. They are as well known, I hope, as almost any other ordinary political matters. In those conflicts, if I may call them such-and they are scarcely less than that—when I have managed to be affiliated with men and with women who were able to put out certain opposing candidates and to elect others, I have had to wake up in the morning to find that my enemies made dextrous moves.

CAN NOT REPLY TO OR ATTACK OWN BLOOD

I have had, Mr. President, a rather unfortunate political career. If I had my political career to start over again, with the disappointments I have had, I never would start it. I had to wake up in the morning at times and find my blood brother on the ticket of the opposition unless I was willing to support him myself. This record again tells the story that unless I was willing to go out and try to elect the members of my family to certain public offices, I had to be faced with every kind of a charge on earth made against me by my own blood.

I have never replied to those charges, Mr. President; I have never had to. In no campaign have I ever denied a charge they ever made, and in no campaign, public or private, have I ever made a charge against one of them, and if my public career depends upon making any answer, direct or indirect, to a charge that is made against me by one of my own blood, or depends upon my making a countercharge, I can go out of politics as quickly as I came into it, and probably would be better off by so doing. I can not attack my own blood.

But I had managed to keep the newspapers from printing those canards they would tell. Why? Because if the newspapers printed them, they were on their face libelous, and I would not have had to draw an issue between me and one of my own blood in a public court to have received vindication from it.

But oh, no; when Ansell came down there he brought my brothers into the senatorial inquiry and he put them on the witness stand under privilege where they could tell the damnable tales they had been telling, so that the newspapers could print them, and I was without the slightest opportunity of relief and could not go anywhere to obtain any vindication of any kind. It was not relevant to the hearing. They went back 15 years to permit these men to take the stand and swear to canards they had told the electorate of that State in order that they could be printed in the newspapers of this country, and I would be remediless against that kind of attack.

SENATOR HOWELL'S MISTAKE

What did that have to do with this case? Do not think I am misstating the issue. I am ready to prove what I say from this record. I do not blame the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Howell]. He is a layman; he is not a lawyer; and when he got in the hands of Ansell, if he ended with any less results than Bergdoll did he was fortunate. If Bergdoll, through Ansell, put out that pot-of-gold story and left this country through that device, then the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Howell] has exhibited an unusual and cold intelligence not to have done as badly as Bergdoll did, having been under this man's tutelage for 14 days while they were away from home.

I want to read to the Senate how this proceeding went on. Here [indicating] is the testimony of a witness called to testify, Mr. President and gentlemen of the Senate, about an election that occurred in September, 1932. Here is testimony relative to that election as the committee received it after they had been proceeding for about 9 or 10 days. Speaking about me, the witness says—and I quote from his testimony:

I had him to move to Shreveport in the fall of 1918 for the purpose of establishing a law practice—

Speaking about me-

He did not establish it until I went there and practiced with him in December 1, 1920.

That was just 12 years ago. They are getting up rather close to the election.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. Yes.

Mr. CLARK. Is that part of the examination in chief or cross-examination?

Mr. LONG. It is the examination in chief. I was told not to interrupt this testimony. This is one part of it. Wait until I get down to the hard-boiled goods in this thing. [Laughter.]

I am going to read again from this testimony. This is the trial of the Overton-Broussard election as it has been conducted at an expense of $25,000 and five months' investigation in Louisiana:

I had him to move to Shreveport in the fall of 1918 for the purpose of establishing a law practice. He did not establish it until I went there to practice with him, December 1, 1920.

If I am not talking loud enough for the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Howell] I will move closer.

The first month we took in $7.50.

"He and I practicing law," that is a part of the Overton contest, and the committee are getting up to within 12 years of the time when the election occurred, and that is closer than they got most of the time.

After I got there the practice grew rapidly, but no more so than Huey's chest. The result was we had to dissolve.

This testimony occurred while the committee was investigating the election contest of John H. Overton, who was elected in September, 1932.

A few months after that dissolution I became the most active attorney in defending him against charges of slander and libel in Baton Rouge, La., sworn out by Governor Parker. When he ran for governor in 1924 I supported him.

I will now skip about seven pages and see then how the committee are getting along. I read again from the testimony of the same witness.

On his platform for governor he promised the laboring people of this State a reasonable workman's compensation act. He did not do anything of the kind. He absolutely ignored that.

We are now up to 1923; we are getting along better; we are within nine and a half years of the day the election took place.

Mr. CLARK. Is that still the examination in chief?

Mr. LONG. This is the examination in chief, and no interruptions were allowed. I did not interrupt the witness nor cross-examine him.

I saw telegram after telegram. We wrote him and never a response to that firm, sound pledge he had made to the laboring people of this State.

IRRELEVANT ATTACKS

I skip now about 10 more pages to see how far the committee have gotten in the direction of the Overton campaign in the Broussard race. The newspapers were taking it all down and printing every word of it. The committee took one day to a witness. "Great fraud developed," said the newspapers, that I had fought down there for 20 years and beaten them practically solidly for 20 years. Then the witness goes on, the testimony still being under examination in

That is when I was governor; the committee finally got. up, on page 2010, to when I was governor-

He took $1,800,000 at one time out of the highway fund illegally and bought a piece of land worth about $200,000 in order to give them that money-

Referring to the Louisiana State University-

He used most of that money in building a competing medical college. * * * He had no word of law or no letter of law. He went in there and took that $1,800,000 of the people's highway commission fund and gave it to the school in order to promote himself to that extent.

The committee are now getting up to within three or four years of the Senate race. The testimony was given notwithstanding the fact that the matter had gone to court and that the courts of the State had adjudicated it legally, without appeal. I will not read further from the testimony of this witness, but practically not a word of such a thing as evidence was even undertaken by that witness in his testimony, a witness who was brought on to the witness stand for no other reason on earth than that he happened to be a brother of mine.

Now I come to the Ku-Klux Klan part of it. The attorney, Mr. Ansell, decided he would go into the Ku-Klux Klan. I quote from the testimony:

Mr. Ansell. Do you know whether Senator Long is a K. K. K.

That, gentlemen of the Senate, was the question of the attorney of the committee in the Overton-Broussard contest down in Louisiana.

A Ku-Klux Klanner or not.

The witness answered:

I do not think he was a K. K. man; that is my idea; he was not. Mr. Ansell. Did he represent himself as being such?

He was talking about 1923, 10 years before the election.

Mr. Long. He did at one time.

Mr. Ansell. How did he so represent himself?

The witness answered:

In his campaign for governor in 1924 he sent out quite a lot of bogus information showing that HUEY LONG was a cyclops or something else.

[Laughter.]

The chairman became interested and examined the witness a little bit along that line.

Here is another one of the main witnesses. This gentleman had run for mayor and been beaten, and he had been beaten for chairman of the public service commission. was called to the witness stand, so the record shows, and he testified for nearly one whole day, or at least the better part of a day. Finally I said to the chairman:

Mr. Chairman-

This is the substance of my remark-are we not ever going to try the Overton-Broussard election contest? This is not according to my idea of matter which is material.

Mr. Ansell got up then and said:

In view of those facts—and they are facts—shall I be required to measure up to any requirement as to materiality—legal materiality—any technical rule as to pertinency? If so, this investigation in this atmosphere with this machine in control ought never to have been started. The money would be wasted.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir.

Mr. CLARK. Is it a fact, as reported in the public press, that public funds appropriated by the Senate for the use of this committee were actually expended by Mr. Ansell in pursuing an inquiry on the question of whether or not the junior Senator from Louisiana had Indian blood in him?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir. Oh, yes; I will get to the Indians. They took time to chase that down. Yes; they investigated whether I was a member of the Ku-Klux Klan, whether I had Indian blood, what I promised when I ran for governor, and went back to the railroad commission rates of 1918. Oh, yes; the whole thing, you know, had to be gone

SUPREME COURT RULING DEFIED

This man Ansell actually got up and said that if he had to measure up to any such thing as a rule that the testimony had to be either material or pertinent, the investigation ought never to have been started; that the money had been

We thereupon read from the Supreme Court of the United States. It did not do any good. It was useless to read it. We might just as well have thrown water on a duck's back in the springtime. We read this in view of this statement of this pot-of-gold attorney of Bergdoll, who was recommended for disbarment, who was found by the congressional committee to be a thief and a crook and a scoundrel, who had practically forged a commission in the Army and had to get out for doing it, who had put up that story, Mr. President and gentlemen of the Senate. This man Ansell wrote a letter in which he said that Grover Cleveland Bergdoll, at that time incarcerated in the United States jail, had hidden $150,000 in gold in the side of a mountain over in Maryland, and that if they would turn him out of the Army Bergdoll would go over there and get the gold that he had hidden, that nobody knew where this pot of gold was but Mr. Bergdoll, and that he would be responsible for his safe custody, and would go himself, or would have another lawyer go, with a guard, and get the gold and bring Bergdoll back to jail.

According to this pot-of-gold tale of Ansell, in his letter quoted by the House investigating committee, this $150,000 was supposed to have been hidden in one iron chest. According to the United States Bureau of Standards, it would have weighed about 550 pounds. This chest of gold Mr. Bergdoll was supposed to have taken his lone self and hidden in the mountains, and he was the only man who knew where it was; and Mr. Ansell, who had been in this office, according to this committee, schemed around and lied around and crooked around until he actually got Bergdoll out of that jail and then he got him into Germany!

This man Ansell, by reason of such Bergdoll fame as he had acquired, said to the chairman of this Louisiana pro-

If I have got to live up to any such requirement as materiality and pertinency, this investigation ought never to have started. The money would be wasted.

He was listened to a great deal more than the United States Supreme Court when it said this:

By our opinion-

Said the Supreme Court-decided since the indictment now before us was found, two propositions are definitely laid down: "One, that the two Houses of Congress, in their separate relations, possess not only such powers as are expressly granted to them by the Constitution, but such auxiliary powers as are necessary and appropriate to make the express powers effective; and, the other, that neither House is invested with "general" power to inquire into private affairs and invested with "general" power to inquire into private affairs and compel disclosures, but only with such limited power of inquiry as is shown to exist when the rule of constitutional interpretation just stated is rightly applied." And that case shows that, while the power of inquiry is an essential and appropriate auxiliary, to the legislative function, it must be exerted with due regard for the rights of witnesses, and that a witness rightfully may refuse to answer where the bounds of the power are exceeded or where the questions asked are not pertinent to the matter under inquiry.

And that case shows that while the power of inquiry is an essential and appropriate auxiliary to the legislative function, it must be exerted with due regard for the rights of witnesses, and that a witness rightfully may refuse to answer where the bounds of the power are exceeded or where the questions asked are not pertinent or relevant to the matter under inquiry; but that rule did not apply. The counsel stated that he could not comply with any such thing as the testimony being either relevant, material, or pertinent to the cause under inquiry; and, despite the ruling of the United States Supreme Court, they went again into the inquiry into the private life of a man who was not a candidate in the election that was under investigation.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATFIELD in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir.

Mr. CLARK. Is this the same Ansell who abused such public servants as William H. Taft and Newton D. Baker and Enoch H. Crowder like horse thieves, and who was scathingly rebuked by a committee of the American Bar Association for his conduct?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir; he is the same bird. [Laughter.] After he had been practically run out of the Army for fraud, when Judge William H. Taft saw a charge made against the administration of Newton D. Baker in the Democratic administraton, Judge Taft, who had been Secretary of War, thinking it was his duty to do so as a good citizen, in the interest of this country, gave information to show that the scoundrel was an infamous liar; and he came out and denounced Judge Taft and everybody else within range. He was hiding his tracks then, as he is now.

Then he went down in Louisiana to investigate me, with $25,000 placed at his disposal. He came back up here the other day and issued a statement and said that he had quit. He issued a statement containing all kinds of attacks, so I understand-I have not the right to use the statement-all kinds of attacks.

CHARACTERS REBUKED BY THE PEOPLE

In order that I may show this thing up a little differently. he put on the stand this man who had run for mayor, a man by the name of Williams. He had run for mayor of New Orleans, and he had been beaten for mayor. He had lately been deposed as the chairman of the public-service commission. He claimed to be a campaign manager for the opposition in a number of wards in the city. He was called to the stand. He testified that they beat up men by the score on the day of election; that they arrested them by the score; that they stole votes by the thousands; that they bought the commissioners, and paid them money. Oh, he testified to a list of crimes that would have been sufficient to put all the 2,000,000 people in Louisiana in the penitentiary if one-tenth of it was true. Then, after all of his testimony he was allowed to testify not only what somebody had told him but what somebody told somebody that told him, what he believed, what his opinion was-then, after he had gotten through with nearly a day's testimony, he was asked these questions, but meanwhile all he had said had all gone out in the newspapers. It had been read all over the United States under a privilege given to him by Ansell, through this committee. Then, after being asked all those questions—the day's testimony was gone, and the newspapers were out in which he had charged thievery, banditry, stealing, robbing-I was given about 20 minutes of the afternoon of the day. This was on cross-examination:

Senator Long. How many people did you see arrested on the day of the Broussard-Overton election?

Mr. Williams. I was in charge of the—Senator Long. Wait a minute. I ask, Mr. Chairman, that this witness answer the question, How many people he saw arrested? I do not want anything but that. I will ask him how many people he personally saw arrested and that is all. That is all I am asking him.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not testify I saw anybody arrested.

Senator Long. Did you see anybody arrested?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I did not.
Senator Long. Did you see anybody paid any money?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not. I got an affidavit of a man who does say so.

Senator Long. Now, I am asking this witness if he saw anybody paid. That is all I want him to answer.

None of those things that you testified to as to people who were arrested or people who were paid money did you see yourself?

Mr. WILLIAMS. None of what things?

Senator Long. None of those things about people who were arrested or people who were bought. None of those things you w yourself, did you?

Mr. Williams. You mean, did I see anybody get arrested?

Senator Long. Yes.

Mr. Williams. No. Did I see anybody get any money? No. Senator Long. Then, all of those things you have previously testified to as having seen done as to people being arrested and people being bought, those are not of your own personal knowl-

Mr. Williams. I have on file affidavits which are the basis of my statement.

And, Mr. President, they were allowed to put on the witness stand this man Williams, who, at the conclusion of his testimony, swore that he had not seen anything, that he had not heard anything, that he did not know anything; but that was after they had given a privilege to the newspapers of this country to print one volume of testimony that I will now show you was as false as the coinage of hell itself, and everybody knew it at the time. Here is the proof of that:

UNFOUNDED PERJURY

This man would swear to anything on God's earth. He did not have anything to hold him. He was swearing that he did not see it. He was swearing that he did not know it. He was swearing that there was nothing that he saw, heard, or by any sense of understanding or knowledge could possibly give before that committee or before anybody else; but he was given a day's time in which to do that, and in a few moments in the afternoon, though as to his testimony in chief no one has ever seen it denied up this way, at least, he said that he knew nothing about it, and made no denial of the fact that it was false, as I will now prove by the record.

Twelve days elapsed. I will discuss in just a minute other things in this record which could be said to be relevant to this case. There was a little stuff that would have been perfectly all right and legitimate inquiry. We indulged this thing, hoping that he was coming around that way. The thing went so far that citizens of that country went in to see judges of the United States court to ask what they ought to do, and I am informed, though I do not know it of my own knowledge, that those judges went out of their way, because the circumstances required it, to suggest that such persons tell the United States attorney about it, and that he ventured to tell the chairman of that committee in there that he could not put that kind of a thing over in a civilized community, and he did not pay any more attention to it than if he had not been told at all.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. LONG. Yes; I will yield to the Senator. What does he want to know?

Mr. HOWELL. I want to state that no judge in Louisiana called upon me to go into conference with him, and that the statement which has now been made by the Senator is absolutely without foundation.

Mr. LONG. I said the district attorney told the Senator. Mr. HOWELL. The district attorney?

Mr. LONG. Yes; Mr. Edwin E. Talbot, the district attorney, told me he told the Senator, and I believe he told the Senator.

Mr. HOWELL. The United States district attorney sent word that he would like to see me. He said that he had been called upon by Senator Long and several others for an opinion: that he did not want to get into this matter, and he wanted me to understand that he did not want to have any part in this matter. That was my understanding of all that he said to me, and I told him that I thought it was perfectly proper if Senator Long wanted to talk with him; but he gave me no admonition whatever, nor did he state to me that I should not do this or that I should not do that.

Mr. LONG. Did he not tell the Senator that he could not have him or anybody else put a man in jail for not answering irrelevant and impertinent questions there, and that he could not be expected to do anything of that kind? Did he not tell the Senator that?

Mr. HOWELL. He said, "I have been asked if this committee could put anyone in jail," and he said, "What is your view about it?" I understood it was an inquiry. I said, "This committee has absolutely no authority of that kind." I said, "All this committee can do is to report to the main committee in Washington, and that main committee would report and recommend to the United States Senate: that the United States Senate is the only body that might act to have some one prosecuted even for perjury, before the committee."

Mr. LONG. The Senator has not answered the question. Did he not tell the Senator that the inquiry had to be on pertinent and material matters?

Mr. HOWELL. He did not say so. He did not advise me as to how the inquiry should be conducted. He simply called me in there to assure me that whereas he had been importuned for opinions, he wanted me to understand that he was not interfering with this committee.

Mr. LONG. That is not the information I got. Of course, I take the Senator's word. The information I got was that the district attorney was asked by other authorities than me to call in the chairman and to tell him that he could not call those witnesses there and ask them to go back 18 years into their private records and into their private life and into the private life of somebody else and expect to have any court on earth stand behind that, and that he had no such authority under the law. That is what I was told the Senator was told.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. HOWELL. I want to make it very clear again that I received no admonition whatever from the United States district attorney or from anyone else while I was in New

Mr. LONG. Did the Senator receive the statement from the United States Supreme Court that it had to be material and pertinent? The Senator got that from me, did he not?

Mr. HOWELL. A statement was handed to the chairman during one of the sessions of the committee.

Mr. LONG. Did the Senator read that? Mr. HOWELL. I have it now, at present.

Mr. LONG. Did the Senator ever read it?

Mr. HOWELL. I read a portion of it.

Mr. LONG. Read a portion of it! At any rate, Mr. President, I have the highest respect for the intellect and good motives of the junior Senator from Nebraska. He has shown a motive that is very high and an intellect that is above that of any test. He has shown the power to come out of this situation with Ansell much better than Mr. Bergdoll did and with a more reasonable story. [Manifestations of laughter among the occupants of the gallery.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will proceed in order.

Mr. LONG. I have the highest praise for the Senator. I credit him with every motive pure, and I am confident that had the Senator had any counsel who would have advised him the same as any other layman in his condition, that the Senator's attitude would have been entirely opposite to what it was. I do not blame the Senator. With Ansell running the legal side of the matter and advising a layman what to do, I do not blame the Senator for it. With Ansell assuring him that he was leading up to something all the time, I can see how the Senator was beguiled. If Ansell was able to put over that pot-of-gold story, and make somebody believe that a man had hidden $150,000 in gold, and that he was getting him out of the "pen" so that he could go over and get the gold and then put him over in Germany-if Ansell could do that, what could he do with somebody out of the United States Senate under such circumstances, anybody, whether it is the Senator from Nebraska or myself, or anyone else?

Along what lines did this matter proceed? I hope I have not gone too far quoting the facts about the things of which I have been reading—that is, that we inquired into the rail1923 and 1924, into the governor's race of 1928, and into my race of 1930.

OUTSIDE QUESTIONS

That is not all. I am not going to read all of it, because what I state now is not nearly so far-fetched as what I have already read. They went into a trial of the session of the legislature of 1930. They went into a trial of the impeachment of 1929, when I was summoned up for impeachment as governor. They went into a trial of the legislature of 1926. They went so far as to try to prove that laws had not been passed on elections, and that the responsibility for laws not having been passed fell upon the governor because the legislature did not do it; and because the legislature did not do it, that the governor was responsible; and because the governor was responsible, that I was responsible; and because I was responsible, that the Senator elect was responsible. They tried to prove as a fact that a bill had been introduced in the Legislature of Louisiana which had failed to pass.

That is not all. Let me tell the Senate what they tried out for three days, and if I make any misstatement of the facts I want to be corrected. Let me tell the Senate what they tried out for three days.

In the year 1929 a constitutional amendment had been adopted by the electorate of the State of Louisiana providing that bonds could be issued to build eight bridges across navigable rivers in Louisiana. That was in 1929.

It was subsequently found that an amendment had been made to that bill between the two houses. It passed both houses by the two-thirds majority requisite before the people could vote on it, but an amendment was made in the house bill in the senate, and when it came back to the house for concurrence only 59 members were present, all of whom voted for the amendment. But there were not 67 men there, and the question arose as to whether or not the amendment was valid, inasmuch as there were not two-thirds of the members of the house of representatives present when the senate amendment was concurred in in the house. Therefore, the validity of the act, though it was ratified by the people 30 to 1, was somewhat in doubt. I am telling the Senate what they tried out.

This amendment was adopted in 1928. It had happened that, while I was governor of the State, Senator-elect John H. Overton had submitted a bridge proposal to build those bridges in the form of toll bridges until we could get through an amendment to buy them, agreeing to build them for less than our estimate was. After they had made their proposal for these bridges to be built as toll bridges until we bought them, the provision was that whatever they bid would be advertised to the public, and the contract would be awarded to the lowest bidder.

It happened that that contract never was consummated, not because I did not favor it-because I did-but because the highway commissioners did not want a toll bridge to be built State owned-private owned, whether it was to be taken over or not, they were against the policy altogether.

Three days' time of this hearing was taken up going into the matter of whether or not in 1929, three and a half years before the election, there had not been a toll bridge proposition submitted, what the details were, and what was my attitude on it, and what was everybody else's attitude on it, notwithstanding the fact that the toll bridge contract was not even finally let. That thing was advertised all over the country as though it was a terrible calamity, and this is what they did. They waited until the very eleventh hour, until finally, by accident, one of their own witnesses read the letter that the contract had to be advertised and let to the low bidder, and the right given to purchase it from the low bidder for the cost of construction plus 6 per cent interest per annum. Three days of the $25,000 time was taken up with that

What was the balance of this case? The balance of this case was this: They went into a trial of the campaign of 1930 when I was a candidate against Senator Ransdell. They went into a trial of dummy candidates. We thought road commission race of 1918, into the governor's race of admit anything on earth they wanted to put out about the system of dummy candidates. We tried to admit that they had voted them, that we had voted them, and proved they had filed them, but I want to read what their arbitrator swore after we had gotten to the matter of the dummies.

BROUSSARD'S REPRESENTATIVE'S TESTIMONY

I want to read the testimony of Mr. Viosca, the arbitrator of the opposition. After 12 days had been consumed, we were given two hours. We want to thank the chairman for that two hours. They did not have to give it to us, and we appreciate the two hours we were given. It was rather generous, and we realize that it was strictly within the discretion of the Chair whether we were to be given any time at all or not.

This is the testimony of the arbitrator, Mr. Viosca, a partner of J. Y. Sanders, who was the gentleman who led the opposition at the Chicago convention to unseat me and the delegation of which I formed a part at the time when we nominated Roosevelt for President. He said:

I served as a member-in fact, the chairman-of the arbitration election committee.

I want the Senate to notice this in connection with the hearsay testimony of the witness, Williams, that I told about a moment ago.

Senator Long. I will ask you to please state if you had the assistance of the police force of the city of New Orleans and others cooperating with you on that day.

This is the opposition arbitration commissioner who was made chairman of the election arbitration committee in the senate election that day.

Yes. On that day we had several problems that came up that required communication with the polling places, and the only means of communication we had with those places was through the police department. Chief Reyer was telephoned to on a number of occasions by a member of the committee.

He went on to state they got good cooperation, and that so far as he knew all of their messages were delivered to the various polling places.

I shall not read the testimony of this witness. This man swore that he had been the opposition arbitration commissioner in that city in many elections before that time. He swore that on that day they put them in the mayor's parlors at the city hall; that they gave them absolute, complete cooperation and conformed to every request that was made; and that everything he wanted to do had the unanimous backing of all the other arbitrators. He said it was the quietest election that was ever held, and that there were no arrests made or any disturbances on the day that were reported in the newspapers the next day, or to the police headquarters, that they did not handle in accordance with what they thought to have been fair to the candidates on that day.

But they put this man Williams on the witness stand, who swore that he did not even know there was an arbitration commission in the city hall. In order to show how far the arbitration committee went, I put into the record there that this arbitration committee had gone far enough in other elections, even to take boxes out of the hands of the commissioners and promulgate the election over in the police station and count the ballots themselves, and that they had been upheld in that kind of a proposition when there was danger of the thing not going right. Mr. Viosca, the Broussard arbitrator, testified there page after page that there had not been 10 per cent of the complaints in the Broussard-Overton election that had ever occurred in any other election held in the city of New Orleans within his memory; that there had not been 10 per cent of the complaints made that day that had been made in any other election before that time.

Yet the testimony of this fellow Williams, and of many other witnesses like him, hearsay, double hearsay, and opinion from beginning to end, was offered in the record of that case by the page and by the volume, notwithstanding the fact that the arbitrator who had absolute personal knowledge of the entire matter and was handling it on that day, who that matter would be very quickly disposed of and tried to was serving in the cause of the opposition to our forces, double hearsay opinion testimony was worth the air that it had taken to breathe it into the election probe.

FIGHTING THE DEVIL WITH FIRE

The next thing I want to discuss is the matter of dummy candidates. One of my good friends in the Senate may have said-I doubt if he said it-that probably I had done good work with bad instruments, rather indicating perhaps that some of the good we had done had been done with the weapons of the devil. I do not think any direct statement like that was made, but at least somewhere in the air I got the intimation that maybe we had done the work of the Lord, but with the instruments of the devil. I want to show where the instruments came from.

Mr. President, I got interested in the politics of that State many, many years ago. I got beaten a good many times. I took my beatings. Whichever side I was on was the side that was bound to be beaten. If a man wanted to know who was going to be beaten, all he had to do was to find out who I was supporting and he would know.

Two things have been brought up in this election probe, and I now revert to the only thing that, topside or bottom, touches within 14,000 cubic feet of the matter of inquiry. Two things were brought up-the matter of election expenses and the matter of commissioners of the polls. Under the heading of commissioners of the polls was brought up the question of what are known as dummy candidates.

There were no such things as dummy candidates for the United States Senate. A dummy candidate is this: A system has developed in that State going back so long that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, by which opposing factions have entered candidates for various offices that they knew were not going to participate really in the election. This was done for years before anybody here ever heard about Louisiana politics.

We do not have the commissioners appointed by the State authority. If we did, our faction would appoint them all, and the other faction would appoint them all when they were in office. That is the system in use in most States, I believe. A state-wide board of appointed election commissioners, and they appoint commissioners for the election. But our State abolished that system. It was done by men who thought more about it than I have ever thought about it. We have there this other system. Every man who is a candidate for a local office can put up the name of a prospective commissioner of election to be drawn out of the hat. If there are 16 candidates, and only 1 for the school board or 2 for the school board, then the school board should draw them all because they are local. But if there is no school-board candidate, then there would be a congressional or railroad commission candidate or some senatorial candidates, and they would put in the names for the prospective list of commissioners.

For more than 30 or 40 years that has been done. Opposing factions have gone out and gotten 3 or 4 men to file for the school board, 3 or 4 men or even 10 men to file for Congress, and they would put names in the hat from all the candidates, and draw for the commissioners of election. Those not commissioned as election commissioners were commissioned as watchers at the polls to see that things went right.

In this last senatorial contest, Broussard against Overton, we were opposed by the Sullivan-Williams faction. The Sullivan-Williams faction was behind the Broussard campaign and we were behind the Overton campaign.

Mr. President and gentlemen, I read this to the committee down there. In 1922 this matter went to court. The Senate has been told by this man Ansell that the whole judicial structure of Louisiana is rotten from top to bottom. He has come back here and said that the courts of Louisiana are in the hands of HUEY P. LONG; that it is a rotten, damnably controlled corrupt polluted condition of the judiciary from top to bottom, particularly the supreme court. They make no more bones about saying that every man sitting on that court is rotten, crooked, and corrupt than they do testified leaf by leaf and page by page that none of that | about taking a drink of water in the spring time-boldly and openly-and the people have to stand for it. They could not help themselves down there. They had to stand it for a while.

> Mr. President, seven members of that supreme court, all of them elected for terms of 14 years apiece, were elected before I became anything like a political factor in Louisiana. all except one, and I helped to elect him, and he is the one that decided against me. The only one that was ever elected after I was a political power at all in the State of Louisiana was Justice Odom himself, and he decided against me one time, and when I was on the other side he decided against me the next time. He decided in favor of dummies when I was trying to keep them out, and against dummies when my side was trying to put them in. That is the only one I had anything to do with since I became governor, and certainly they will not complain about him. He was the judge to change his mind in the case. The judges of the supreme court of that bench are elected for a period of 14 years. Ansell says they are in the control of myself and my friends. They were elected to the supreme court before I was ever heard of as a general political factor in the State of Louisiana. They will go off of the bench on a pension for life when they get ready to retire. I do not think there is more than one man on the bench who went on there before I was elected governor that does not go off the court on his retired pay whenever he gets ready to go and does not have to fear any man on God's living earth. He does not have to fear us anyway, because we have stood for the reelection of every judge on every court in that State. We have never opposed a judge on the bench. We have stood for the reelection of school boards and of the courts, and never allowed them to get into politics; but if we had, they would have been safe anyway.

> In 1922 this dummy candidate matter went to court. Who carried it there? It was the Sullivan faction that helped to oppose us in the last election. Here is a quotation from the newspapers. The Sullivan faction, in charge of the Broussard campaign in 1932, is the outfit that won this lawsuit in 1922. Here it is:

> Dummy case goes to high court. August 17, 1922. Supreme tribunal to pass on Judge Skinner's jurisdiction.

> The case went to the high court. The report goes on to say that the Sullivan faction which supported Broussard won, Williams himself on the witness stand admitting that he, having testified that the dummy candidate business was a malicious practice, admitted that he was a candidate in 1922 when his crowd put these dummies in and won out in court. Williams testified that he was good at that dummy business himself. This holier-than-thou gang they had up there, that we have put out of every office that they ever held or ever will hold, is a gang that this Senate could not elect to office if it tried—and nothing that can be done here in Washington can restore that gang. You could not do it, Members of the Senate, to save your lives.

> Williams was asked the question, "You have admitted that you put in some twenty-odd dummies in the last election?" and he said, "Yes; self-defense dummies."

> He filed 20, but back in 1922—this was in 1931 and 1932 he is talking about—when they filed dummy candidates the anti-Sullivan crowd, what would have been called the regular crowd which is with us now, went to court to get the court to disqualify those dummy candidates on the ground that men had filed as candidates for office that did not intend to run in order that they might participate in the drawing of election commissioners. But the supreme court said "no." It said the court was without jurisdiction, that it could not meddle or intervene. That was the decision of the supreme court. Who was the organ of the court? Judge Ben C. Dawkins, whom President Coolidge appointed United States district judge for the western district of Louisiana, confirmed by this Senate. They brought in the fact that the Senator elect had a brother on the Supreme Court of Louisiana, Judge Winston Overton. The Senator elect did have a brother on that court. That brother was on the court in 1922, and was one of the seven judges who decided that they could not disqualify dummy candidates; that the court did not have jurisdiction of the election question. That is not the only time he was on the bench.

In 1927 I went to court—I say "I went to court"—my little crowd went to court; we went to court to try to disqualify a man by the name of Melerine, and again the court said that the court could not take jurisdiction of that question at all; that it had to be placed before the committee and that the committee controlled it. In 1931 I was one of those who went to the court again, and again the Supreme Court of Louisiana, in the case of Hinyub against the Parish Democratic Executive Committee for the Parish of Jefferson, laid down the law, and I lost the case by a vote of 5 to 2 in the supreme court. In 1931 the supreme court, speaking through Justice Odom as the organ of the court—the only judge who was elected to the supreme court since I have been Governor of Louisiana who was not a member of the court previously—said, "It is not a matter that can be brought to the court." I lost that case by a vote of 5 to 2. I lost the Melerine case by a vote of 6 to 1. In 1922 the case grew out of a writ granted by Judge Ben C. Dawkins, without any dissent at all; and in 1932 what were we to do? Were we to sit down with that gang of scalawags that had beaten us in three lawsuits and not "fight the devil with fire"? Were we to go down there, with Sullivan winning in 1922, winning in 1927, and winning in 1931, beating us in three straight lawsuits, the court holding that nobody on the living earth could question those candidates; that once they filed and paid their filing fee they had a right to participate in drawing those commissioners—when we had tried to beat them in three lawsuits and had lost out in the three lawsuits, were we supposed to stand there and not abide by that ruling of the court and "fight the devil with fire"? that is the big point that they have made in this case.

Yes; the candidates on both sides filed dummy candidates. There was not any dummy candidate filed for the United States Senate; no; but there were dummy candidates filed for the school board and there were dummy candidates filed for Congress and there were dummy candidates filed for railroad commissioner. However, we did not lead in it. They filed as many as we did. We have photostatic copies of the filings, and they are in the record in this case, showing that they filed as many as 19 candidates in one little ward at one time for the school board where but one man was going to be elected; and they kept those candidates in the race until the time for drawing the election commissioners was over, and then they withdrew them and they got their money back. We have proved that they had a dummy candidate for railroad commissioner; we proved that they always had dummy candidates there; we proved that we had gone into court, and in each one of those cases Judge Winston Overton, the brother of Senator-elect John H. Overron, had decided against his brother's faction every time in favor of the dummy candidate ticket. Every time we went to court the judges of the supreme court, including Justice Winston Overton, decided that the court did not have jurisdiction to contest the right of the dummy candidate to file and participate in drawing the election commissioners, and Judge Winston Overton stood up with them and decided against his brother's side of the case in 1922, in 1927, and in 1931; and yet in the year 1932 this pot-of-gold character named Ansell has tried to make a veritable lion of skullduggery out of Justice Winston Overton because he decided the same way in 1932 that he did in 1931 and 1927 and 1922. He did not say anything against the only justice of the supreme court who changed his viewpoint about the case. There was only one, and that was Judge Fred M. Odom. He did not say anything about him because, when he contested the dummies in 1931. Judge Odom decided in favor of the dummies; and when they contested the dummies against us in 1932, Judge Odom decided against the dummies. He did not say anything about the only judge that I had anything to do with electing since I have been Governor of the State of Louisiana because he decided against us and every time, regardless of what the question was, he had been found deciding opposite to the factions rather than on the law. He had a right to change his opinion; I do not condemn him; it is very likely he saw it differently; that is his business. So much for the dummy-candidate question.

NO CORRUPTION EVEN MENTIONED

There is one thing, gentlemen of the Senate, that I want the Senate to note, and I hope I will have particular attention in what I am now going to state. There is not a line of evidence—top, side, nor bottom—reaching one single act of misconduct against John H. Overton, Senator elect. There is not a line of pretended evidence which has been written into this record undertaking to show the slightest misconduct of action or inaction on the part of Senator-elect John H. Overton—not a line. I challenge anyone to produce one line of such proof that was ever offered in this record.

However, before I go into that there is one point that has been mentioned. You have been told by the newspapers that one witness by the name of Weiss declined to answer questions of counsel for the committee. You have not been told the truth by the newspapers. The newspapers had to take what they got from the reports down there in New Orleans, and I know the kind of reports which were sent out. I remember when they were trying to impeach me down there; they tried me for murder for one week, to show that I had hired a man to go and kill another man, and at the end of the week's testimony they just dropped the case entirely and never did vote on it. But one week's testimony had gone into the newspapers of this country, under a privileged hearing, undertaking to show that I had been implicated in a charge of murder when there was not enough to it even to cause a single one of the members of the House of Representatives of Louisiana to propose a vote on that charge.

What did they do in this matter? We had a bank situation in New Orleans. I received some cooperation from the committee in that situation, particularly from the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Carey]. I called the Senator from Wyoming to my house at night and I told him that there would not be a bank, perhaps, which would open in my town the next day if I did not get some help. I knew I could get it from nobody but him, and I had to have a day in which to work. We sat up in my room on Friday night on the day selected to start this hearing and we drafted a proclamation for a holiday, because we knew the banks could not open up the next day. I can say that much here now, but I can only say here now what I think is discreet.

In order to find a ground upon which to declare the holiday, we spent the night looking up things that might have happened on the 4th of February, but could not find anything. About 1 o'clock in the morning somebody phoned that diplomatic relations with Germany had terminated on the night of February 3. Well, I was not very strong, as Senators perhaps know, for the war; I had been making some pretty recent remarks that I was not strong for America having to pitch into that war in Europe; but a holiday had to be a holiday. The 3d of February was not the 4th, so we drew on our imagination and decided that the proclamation severing diplomatic relations was drawn in the nighttime between February 3 and 4, and we declared a holiday for the 4th day of February in order to get a Saturday holiday. We worked all day and all night Saturday; we worked all day and night Sunday; we worked night and day; there was no such thing as anybody sleeping an hour all day Saturday and all Saturday night and all day Sunday and Sunday night. We received wonderful help from the authorities here in Washington, particularly the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The banks opened up on Monday morning. One or two of the banks were crowded, the line reaching away out into the street. I would have to go down there and argue with the crowd and then go back to the hearing and then go from the hearing back to the crowd and then from the crowd back to the hearing and go into conference through the night and then go back to the dad-gummed hearing the next morning and back into conference all night, working night and day and day and night trying to keep that community from a calamity that had practically come on us and that we could not avoid.

DOG SON OF A WOLF

In the midst of it was this gentleman by the name of Ansell, whom I can never describe except as Victor Hugo described some individuals. Hugo said, there is an animal for every human; there is not a human that you can not look at long enough, if you know animal life, without finding his counterpart among the animal kingdom. There is an old fable, Hugo says, that with the birth of every litter of wolves there is one dog born, and the mother immediately devours the dog that is born with the litter of wolves for fear that he will be vicious enough to eat up the balance of the litterthe dog son of a wolf. Put the face on Ansell and you have got the dog son of a wolf. That rascal, so found by the committee of the House, was allowed the next day to ask the witness Weiss about this banking situation. And Weiss refused to answer. I instructed him not to answer. We had all the trouble on earth that we could possibly handle. He was asked why he had not deposited certain accounts, and I called the gentlemen aside and told them why we could not afford to answer that kind of a question. I will say that the committee was kind enough to understand, at least for the time, and immediately resumed the hearing without asking the witness to testify any more about any banking situation, direct or indirect. Lo and behold! On the last day of the hearing the same question was asked again, and the witness was told to answer it; and the witness said:

I will answer any question on earth regarding a campaign fund of Overton or Broussard, directly or indirectly relating to it, but I will not answer any other question of any kind regarding a deposit made in a bank, or money kept anywhere else, unless it is a question affecting the Overton and Broussard campaign.

The witness was clearly within his rights.

Then Ansell was not satisfied with that. Why, nothing on God's earth would have pleased that man Ansell like closing up New Orleans. Nothing on God's earth would have been so pleasing to this scoundrel, who had got Bergdoll out of jail and sent him to Germany on the pot-of-gold tale, as congressional committee reports. He would have had something to his renown if a cluster of stagnation, rampant ruin, and squander could have blazed the trail of this scoundrel, who imposed himself on the chairman of this committee, because the chairman of this committee is too honorable a man to have hired this rascal if he had known that the House committee said he ought to be disbarred. The chairman of this committee would not have hired him if he had known that.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir. I should like to know about that, if you would have hired him if you had known that.

Mr. HOWELL. Certainly the Senator does not want to have this banking matter misunderstood. His memory is at fault.

Mr. LONG. Mine is at fault? Not a bit on earth.

Mr. HOWELL. I will simply make a statement now which the Senator can correct if I am wrong.

Mr. LONG. I am going to read it now.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. Weiss testified that he was the clearing house for the Democratic association in Louisiana of which Senator Long was the head; that he received the moneys that were paid in on account of campaign matters, and that he paid them out, but that he was not an officer of any committee or of any association. He said that he received money only in cash and he paid it out only in cash.

The only reference to the banking situation that was made at this hearing, as I recall, was this: The question was put to Mr. Weiss why he did not deposit these large sums of money in a bank, and have a bank account, and have some accounts of these receipts and expenditures.

Mr. LONG. Yes.

Mr. HOWELL. He said it was because he did not want to.

Mr. LONG. That is right; yes, sir.

Mr. HOWELL. Then the question was asked, "Why did you not want to?" I think I am correct in that.

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWELL. And he answered, "I refuse to answer."

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir; that is right.

Mr. HOWELL. That was the only reference made to banking at that time.

Mr. LONG. Oh, no, it was not! Oh, no, it was not, any such thing! That is the last day you are quoting now.

Mr. HOWELL. No; I am quoting the first day.

Mr. LONG. Oh, no! I have it here.

Mr. HOWELL. I am quoting the first day, and I think if you will look at the testimony you will find that my memory is in accord with the facts.

Mr. LONG. All right.

Mr. HOWELL. When he refused to answer as to why he did not, I notified him that he should understand that no one could protect him from the results of refusing to answer. Then it was suggested that he would be willing to tell the committee in confidence why he did not deposit his funds in a bank. I was reluctant to receive any information from a witness in confidence, because I recognized the fact that I was merely acting for the Senate of the United States. However, upon the urging of Senator Long, Senator Carev and myself took a recess and went into a room, and there Mr. Weiss gave his reason. I did not think it was a valid reason, and, as a consequence, Mr. Weiss was subsequently questioned, and again he refused to tell us why he did not keep accounts and did not deposit the political funds in his hands in a bank.

Mr. LONG. That is not the correct statement, Senator. The facts are that we went into the room, and I related to the Senator myself, in Mr. Weiss's presence, the circumstance that he would require that witness to tell, and we went back, and the witness was then excused from answering the question, and I will show it here by the record. You did not mention that again for 12 days, when you came back on the closing afternoon and tried to do what you had excused him from doing 10 days before. Now, if your mind has failed you, I will read it to you.

Mr. HOWELL. True.

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir; true. I know it is true, and so do you know it is true.

Mr. HOWELL. Just a moment.

Mr. LONG. Wait just a moment. I am not through yet. I am going to read the record. Your memory can not fail you at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Fess in the chair). The Chair would suggest to the Senator from Louisiana—

Mr. LONG. I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; but the Chair is making a statement. No Senator can refer to another Senator in the second person.

Mr. LONG. All right, sir; I beg pardon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Instead of saying "you," the Senator should say, "The Senator from Nebraska."

Mr. LONG. I will say, then, "The Senator from Nebraska." I will get it back in whatever person it means. It has to be right because I am going to read from it.

Here is what happened, Mr. President. The Senator from Nebraska will know the circumstance that I told him in that room:

The Chairman. I think it is a perfectly proper question.

Then we rowed around.

The CHARMAN. We will take a recess for five minutes.

(At this point a recess was taken, after which proceedings were resumed, as follows:)

The Chairman. The committee will come to order. Counsel for the committee will proceed.

And thereupon, in accordance with the proceeding in private, Mr. Ansell propounded a brand-new question and left the subject:

Mr. Ansell. Mr. Weiss, were you also the clearing house for the Louisiana Democratic Association?

And the question was never asked any longer.

This was on the 7th day of February, 1933. The time | when Ansell finally came back and asked the witness to answer that question was on the 17th day of February, 1933. The witness did not say on the 7th day of February, 1933, "I do not want to." It was on the 17th day of February that he said, "I do not want to." And here is the question. This was on the 17th:

Mr. Weiss. I have also testified, your honor, I have no bank account in which I kept any political funds; that I kept no books. I do not know that that is any more of his business—I do not care what he makes, but suppose I would ask him if he was getting $10 a day. That would be overpaying him; but suppose I did ask him that—

Mr. Ansell. Let us examine this witness and let him decline to answer or not, as he sees fit.

Then we had a row over the conference. No; this is not the place. If the Chair will bear with me just a moment, what happened was this. I will read the record here to prove it, Mr. President, because I remember it very well:

On the day of the 7th, when Mr. Weiss was on the witness stand, and declined to answer these questions, we asked for a recess. The recess was given. We came back to decide whether or not the witness would be made to answer the question, and instead of being asked the question the witness was asked a brand-new question a million miles away, so that nothing would be noticed about it; and I remember what happened in the room. I told the chairman myself of an incident that had occurred there in New Orleans, and I told him he would not want to bring that matter out, and they did not, and we left the matter on the 7th.

Then on the 17th we came back, and Ansell came back with the same question he had asked before, and then is when the witness said he would answer any question on earth about the Overton-Broussard political campaign funds, directly, indirectly, remotely, or otherwise affecting them, but that he would not answer any questions outside of that scope; and that is the question that I will read here in a moment.

I will put these questions and answers in the RECORD, Mr. President. There are over 2,000 pages of this testimony, 2,200 or 2,400 pages. I will put in the RECORD to-night the questions and answers of the two days. I ask that I be given permission to put the questions and answers at the conclusion of my remarks, to show what happened on the 7th and what happened on the 17th.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

(See Exhibit B.)

Mr. LONG. Now, that is not all this man Ansell asked the witness. I want to read you something else. Mr. Ansell said to Mr. Weiss:

How much property, real and personal, do you yourself own?

Mr. Weiss. Not 5 cents' worth. Mr. Ansell. You own nothing now?

Mr. Weiss. I said I own nothing. Mr. Ansell. What property did you personally own in the year

Mr. Ansell. My question said properties, which includes both personal and real property.

Mr. Weiss. You mean personal; a suit of clothes? Mr. Ansell. Personal and real property.

He was asking Mr. Weiss what he owned, now, back in 1932.

Mr. WEISS. Explain it.

Mr. Ansell. Did you have any personal and real property in the year 1932? If so, of what did that property consist?

Mr. Weiss. I am not quite as smart as you are. What is personal property?

Mr. Ansell. You know what it is. Mr. Weiss. I am asking you to explain it.

ANSELL. Money, checks, stocks, bonds, notes, clothing, neckties

Think of calling upon a man to go back a year or two and say how many neckties he had, how many suits of clothes he had, how many this, and how many that.

Mr. Weiss. That is none of your business.

Mr. Ansell. Pocketbooks or what not.

Mr. Weiss. If that is what it means, that is none of your

I do not think there is a court or a committee or a chamber on the civilized earth that would stand for that kind of a battering and kangaroo proceeding that man tried to pull off down in that country.

That was not all. He had already asked about what he had no right to ask about. He did not fail to get any information, as Senators may have been led to believe. Nothing of the kind occurred. I will show Senators that the first day they had Weiss on the stand, Ansell asked him all about that. This is what he said. He said to him, "Can you tell this committee what moneys you received on account of Long's political organization during that political campaign?" These are the questions he subsequently asked him, after the meeting in the room.

He said: "As well as I could remember, I received just enough to defray the expenses of Senator Overton's campaign."

Mr. Ansell. Did you keep any record of the moneys received for that purpose.
Mr. WEISS. Yes, sir.

Mr. ANSELL. Have you that record with you?

Mr. Weiss. No. sir.
Mr. Ansell. Where is the record?
Mr. Weiss. I dictated the record to Mr. Peltier and Mr. Ellender when they made up the record for the committee, sir.

Mr. ANSELL. What did you dictate from?
Mr. Weiss. From my memoranda on my desk.
Mr. ANSELL. Have you those memoranda?
Mr. Weiss. I have not, sir.

Mr. Ansell. What became of them afterwards? Mr. Weiss. I destroyed them.

ANSELL. How long after your dictation did you destroy your memoranda?

Mr. Weiss. When I gave them the information I had no further use for them. Mr. Ansell. Did you think you would need those memoranda up to that time?

Mr. Weiss. I did not. Mr. Ansell. Were those memoranda kept in the due course of business?

Mr. Weiss. No. sir: they were not.

He asked all about the bank business, about which he had no right to ask, after the whole thing had been asked and answered.

He said to Mr. Weiss, "What is your salary?" I do not know where they got the right to ask a man what he was making, but when he got Mr. Shushan on the stand he said, What is your business?"

"My business is the wholesale dry-goods business."

"How much is your concern worth?"

"It is rated from $350,000 to $500,000."

"How much money did your business make last year?"

"We lost $7,500 last year."

"How much money did your business make the year before?"

"It lost $12,000 the year before."

"Well," he said, "that does not seem to be much of a busi-How much money did you make out of the State?"

"I did not make any money at all."

"Is it not a fact that you have been selling the State a lot of goods?"

"No. Whatever I sold the State I had to bid low to get it."

"When did you start bidding on contracts?"

"When I was working under Gov. John M. Parker they did not have any bids for the purchase of goods, but since the Long administration in 1928 we had to have bids submitted, and I had to be the low bidder, and before I sold the State of Louisiana I got it on my low bid."

He went into that man's business from top to bottom, asking him what he made, whom he worked for, who his customers were, and Mr. Shushan went on through his private business.

Then he got Mr. Weiss on the stand and asked him what his salary was.

Mr. Weiss said that was a hard question to answer. He said, "I do not think I can answer the question." I then said to Mr. Weiss, "I want to ask the witness to go on and tell him. Tell him what you get."

Mr. Weiss. It is a very hard thing to determine my salary. I get my rooms, my food, my garage, and my pressing.

Mr. Mr. ANSELL. In money? Mr. WEISS. $10,000.

Mr. Ansell. Is your salary paid by check or in cash? Mr. Weiss. In checks. Mr. Ansell. Do you deposit your salary in any bank?

Mr. Weiss. I do not.
Mr. Ansell. You keep it in cash?
Mr. Weiss. Yes, sir; part of it.
Mr. Ansell. Do you receive any salary from any sources other than that from the hotel?

Mr. Weiss. None at all, sir.

DEFENSE FOR SENATOR HOWELL

He did not have anybody to put on the stand to prove anything by. In the case of every witness he called there. he took the liberty of going into their personal and private accounts, to make himself as obnoxious as his general demeanor would indicate, conducting a regular kangaroo outlawry proceeding, going into every irrelevant hearsay proposition he could think of. That is the kind of testimony to be found in this record. He asked this man all about his bank account in this hearing, asked him where he kept his bank account. The witness told him of every bank account he had, told him everything he ever kept, told him everything from the height and color of the kitchen stove to the description of the cradle in which he was rocked when he was a baby. And still this scoundrel, as the congressional committee found him to be, came back there day after day, this Bergdoll man. By the way, a few minutes ago I said that if the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Howell] had known what the congressional report had been regarding Mr. Samuel Tilden Ansell, he would not have had him down there advising him as to his conduct in those proceedings. Thereupon the Senator from Nebraska rose, and I thought he was about to enter what I had already entered for hima disclaimer for inflicting on the people of that State the conduct of a rascal who had been impeached by the House of Representatives because of his low-down effort to deprive the country and when the Senator from Nebraska rose, I thought he was going to confirm what I had thought—that if he had known these things he would not have employed him to browbeat the people of that section of the countrygood, honorable citizens.

I know too much about the Senator from Nebraska to think that he would have taken this man down there as counsel of the committee if he had known he was one who was guilty of a misrepresentation in an effort to make himself Judge Advocate General and who dug up that pot-ofgold story, the story that Grover Cleveland Bergdoll had buried over in Maryland a pot of gold and got him loose and sent him to Germany. I know that if the Senator from Nebraska had known that a committee had said that he never ought to have been allowed to go before any civilized court, he never would have picked an outlaw of that character and carried him to Louisiana.

It is necessary that I make this defense of my colleague. It is necessary that we get this thing straight.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield. I want the Senator to tell us about it this time, whether he would or would not have taken this

Mr. HOWELL. I had never met General Ansell until the matter of his employment arose. And I want to say this for General Ansell: He is a very able man. He served the committee and gave the best that was in him. He is learned in the law. I know nothing about the matters to which the Senator from Louisiana refers.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield just a moment?

Mr. HOWELL. In just a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana has the floor.

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I want to ask the Senator from Nebraska if he considers it was an evidence of great ability for Colonel Ansell to be spending public funds in going into such irreleSenator from Louisiana had Indian blood in his veins and into the feuds of the Long family?

SENATOR HOWELL EXPRESSES REGRET

Mr. HOWELL. Let me say this: General Ansell spent no public funds afforded by the United States Senate except what he was entitled to have, and his per diem.

Mr. CLARK. Will the Senator yield for just a moment?

Mr. HOWELL. It has been suggested that General Ansell had money with which to accomplish this and accomplish that in New Orleans. He had no money from the committee whatever.

Mr. CLARK. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. HOWELL. I merely want to say respecting General Ansell, as I have stated before, that I had never met him prior to that time, but I was greatly impressed with his ability as an attorney, and his industry and fidelity to the work he had in hand.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I would like to ask the Senator from Nebraska if he approved of the unprecedented conduct of the counsel of his committee, a servant of the United States Senate, in the middle of an investigation giving out a statement attacking a Member of the United States Senate and a Senator elect, so vicious in its insinuations and so scurrilous and libelous in its assertions that it was not carried by the great press associations of the United States?

Mr. HOWELL. I presume the Senator refers to a statement issued by General Ansell-

Mr. CLARK. On Sunday; yes.

Mr. HOWELL. Which has not been published, as I understand.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator has seen it, has he not?

Mr. HOWELL. I beg pardon?

Mr. CLARK. Did not the Senator from Nebraska see it? Mr. HOWELL. I saw a copy of it. Mr. CLARK. The only reason why it was not published was on account of its contents. Mr. HOWELL. I regretted very much that General Ansell gave out a statement. It was wholly without my knowledge. It had not been discussed with me. But he did it, and it was his act, and, as I say, I regret that he did it. Mr. CLARK. Does the Senator think that was proper conduct on the part of an employee of the Senate in the midst of an investigation? Mr. HOWELL. So far as that is concerned, I have stated that I regretted his act.

Mr. CLARK. Was the Senator correctly quoted yesterday in the New York Herald Tribune, after reading that statement, when he said that there was no disagreement between the committee and counsel?

Mr. HOWELL. I made no such statement as that.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator was so quoted in the New York Herald Tribune of yesterday morning.

Mr. HOWELL. That there was no disagreement between committee and counsel?

Mr. CLARK. Yes; and that was after Colonel Ansell had given out this statement.

Mr. HOWELL. No; there was no such statement given out by me, that there was no disagreement between the committee and counsel.

Mr. CLARK. Then the Senator has been misquoted.

Mr. HOWELL. Unless it was in reference to what had taken place.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the Senator seems to think he is very proud of his counsel. He is apparently very proud of the Bergdoll record of the counsel he has picked for the committee, from what he says, unless he means to disclaim it. I gave the Senator credit for better intentions than that.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield again?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Just for the purpose of the RECORD, I read from the New York Herald Tribune of Monday, February 20. vant matters as the question of whether or not the junior After referring to the statement given out by Colonel Ansell and the statement jointly issued by the Senator from | Nebraska and the Senator from Wyoming, Colonel Ansell said:

"That is the way I feel about the matter," he said.

He added he had been retained for 30 days and that period was up. Senator Howell told newspaper men there was no disagreement between the counsel and the members.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. HOWELL. I had two calls by telephone on Sunday. However it affects the situation, I want to state that, when I had the interview, as I recall, with the reporter representing the Herald Tribune, I had not seen General Ansell's statement.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, since the Senator from Nebraska says he is impressed with General Ansell, I want to read the Senator from Nebraska and the other Members of the Senate whom the Senator from Nebraska has picked for his charming angel of this inquisitorial kangaroo business of trying out the feuds of the Long family, the race of 1918 for railroad commissioner, the governor's race of 1924, the issue of the Ku-Klux Klan, the governor's race of 1928, the Long race of 1930, the legislative sessions from the time I was able to get to one to the time I was able to lead them, and various other things which are in this record-I want to read him what they said about this gentleman. I want to read him the record of the man he says he is impressed with.

Here is the report from the United States Congress, the majority report of the committee, and I want to say that the minority report does not do any credit to Mr. Ansell. The minority report differs in some respects, but it did not do any good to Mr. Ansell. It said his conduct was just about as bad as the other one said it was. Let me read what the House said about this man Ansell and about the pot-of-gold story he fixed up for the War Department.

It is interesting to know that General Ansell, until a short time before his employment in the Bergdoll case, had been an officer in the regular Army of the United States for about twenty-five years, and that during the war he was the next officer in control to General Crowder, the Judge Advocate General. However, during the war General Crowder was more directly concerned and employed in preparing and executing the draft law, thus virtually leaving General Ansell as the Judge Advocate General.

They produced two letters that General Ansell wrote to the War Department for Bergdoll, the one he dictated and did not send, and the one he wrote with a pencil and did send, and they showed here, two Democrats and one Republican, from a comparison of those two letters, that there was nothing but a thief at the bottom of them both. Then they go on to say:

The conclusion is irresistible that General Ansell was then using with emphasis the name of Judge Westcott to bring influence to bear upon the Secretary of War should the communication ever reach him.

It never reached the Secretary of War, however.

General Ansell had said that he was going with this man, or else one of the other lawyers, under guard. Here is what the committee said:

General Ansell knew several days in advance that the expedition would start May 20; and he knew that Gibboney himself did not contemplate making more than a part, if any, of the journey. So, there is no escape from the conclusion that General Ansell knew, at least two days and two nights before the journey started, that his pledge made to General Harris in this respect was to be violated.

I wonder how that sounds to the Senator from Nebraska?

When General Ansell was on the witness stand the question was put to him a number of times, and by different members of the committee, to indicate at least one specific act done by him looking toward the redemption of the pledge. To each and every one of those questions he was either nonresponsive or evasive.

Quoting further:

The two letters—the one which was sent and the one which was not sent—when taken in connection with all the other happenings in the case, show that General Ansell was not only taking advantage of his long association in the Army with General Harris, but was actually misleading him into having Bergdoll released for the purpose of seeking the alleged hidden gold.

Quoting still further:

The question naturally arises that if one or the other of them was to go—and Bailey admits that he had agreed to join the expedition at Hagerstown, Md.—why was there a change of mind, pedition at Hagerstown, Md.—why was there a change of mind, just following Bailey's return from a visit to Bergdoll, to the effect that neither was to go at all. And, further, why was not General Harris so advised? He was within a stone's throw of them during these two days and two nights. What happened between May 11 and May 17 that did away with the necessity of even Bailey's going? Was information received by either Ansell or Bailey at Governors Island, where Bergdoll was confined under Colonel Hunt that the gold was not buried at Hagerstown, or that the expedition would not proceed beyond Philadelphia, where Mrs. Bergdoll says the gold was buried, and at which point Bergdoll escaped?

Right here I want to pause to ask the junior Senator from Nebraska if he thinks there is one word of truth in the story of the pot of gold that Bergdoll had buried over here in Maryland? Does the junior Senator from Nebraska mean to say that he would believe there is one word of truth in it or that any sensible man believes such a cooked-up story that Ansell knew would put Bergdoll in Germany, or that there is a word of respectable truth in that pot-of-gold story? I have heard these old pot-of-gold stories ever since I was born, that there is a pot of gold over at the foot of the rainbow, and somebody, it was said, has ridden his life out hunting for the pot of gold. But here comes General Ansell and palms his way into the United States Senate and imposes himself on this good learned and conscientious Senator, after having defrauded the United States and put over that pot-of-gold story. If I had known this about that man when he left Washington with the junior Senator from Nebraska, I would have feared for the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Howell] coming back with his shoes on, if that man could put that kind of a pot-of-gold story over on the United States Government.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir.

Mr. CAREY. I happen to be a member of the subcommittee that conducted the hearings. Before General Ansell was employed I was consulted by the Senator from Nebraska. General Ansell was employed on the recommendation of an old friend of the Senator in Nebraska, a man who had previously practiced law in Omaha and in whom the Senator from Nebraska had every confidence. It was through him that General Ansell was employed.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir.
Mr. CLARK. I would like to ask the Senator from Wyoming a question. Does the Senator realize that at least 80 per cent of the testimony taken in the hearing down there was wholly irrelevant?

Mr. CAREY. I would rather not discuss the case until we have reported.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator has permitted his counsel to discuss it in the most public manner.

SENATOR CAREY SAYS TESTIMONY NOT RELEVANT

Mr. CAREY. I admit there was testimony that was not relevant.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I can not do the Senator from Wyoming too much honor in this matter. I want to say further that I agree that his statement, I think, clearly forces the conclusion that the Senator from Nebraska in good faith employed Ansell. I think the Senator was in good faith. I do not want him to make another similar mistake at least when I am to be the intended victim. If there is to be any operation performed on me, please do not go to the galleys to get the surgeon.

I read further about this Ansell:

On the 19th of April, 1920, General Ansell prepared a contract fixing the fee which the firm of Ansell & Bailey was to receive as attorneys for Bergdoll. That tentative contract was submitted by General Ansell to Mr. Gibboney for his approval, but Mr. Gibboney declined to approve it. Thereafter, on the 23d day of April, Mr. Gibboney himself, representing Bergdoll with carte blanche authority, submitted a counter, tentative contract to General Ansell.

Under the terms of the first tentative contract Ansell & Bailey, according to the construction put upon it by Mr. Bailey, could have received $60,000.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again? The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Fess in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator from Nebraska stated a moment ago that he did not know about the statement which Colonel Ansell had issued until after it had been issued, and he was not consulted about it, and, of course, everybody in the Senate will accept that statement. I ask the Senator from Nebraska if he considers it proper procedure for the committee counsel to be giving out statements of that sort in the midst of the investigation, and whether he had given Colonel Ansell any authority to make such a statement as that? I ask that question in view of the Senator's statement that he has very high admiration and regard for Colonel Ansell.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I will read from a copy of the statement signed by the subcommittee that conducted these hearings, composed of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY | and myself. This was given out on February 19,

The undersigned, a subcommittee of the Senate appointed to investigate campaign expenditures and other matters in connection with the recent election, returned from New Orleans this morning after holding public hearings in that city covering a period of about two weeks. The subcommittee will report at an early date to the full committee and will subsequently report to the Senate. Other than this the committee has not or will not authorize any report or statement.

That answers the Senator's question. I read this statement in answer to the Senator's question.

Mr. CLARK. It is not in answer to my statement. The Senator said he had high admiration and respect for General Ansell. I am asking the Senator if he considers such conduct on the part of committee counsel as proper?

Mr. HOWELL. I have stated that I regretted that General Ansell issued a statement.

Mr. CLARK. Does not the Senator think that the committee's counsel has been guilty of flagrantly improper con-

Mr. HOWELL. I have gone as far as I will in the statement I have made.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Missouri that that is one of the most civil acts he did in that whole matter; this statement was more civil than many other things he did.

I have clean hands in one part of my conduct in public life. I was once in a fight with the Fuqua administration in Louisiana, attacking the highway commission, when a brother of an important member of the highway commission came to me and wanted to volunteer a statement against his brother's conduct. I declined to receive the statement against my personal and political enemy coming from his brother, and I can give the names and dates and

And for a committee to have allowed this man Ansell to call brothers of a man who was not a party to the contest, who was not a candidate for office, to have allowed this scoundrel, condemned for every phase of crime that Congress could find in the career of a living human being, to have permitted him to call the brothers of a man to testify to irrelevant matters against a man not connected with the case in order that they might have the privilege under the law that what they said could be published without there being a remedy for anyone-I want to say that that was much more low down, and that the day of the cutthroat had come into its own when Ansell was in charge of the matter.

Now I want to read a little more about Brother Bergdoll in order that the Senator from Nebraska may slumber more soundly than he has been doing. Quoting:

Anybody who has seen or heard all of those associated, either directly or indirectly, with the plan or manner of Bergdoll's escape, not only must recognize General Ansell as the master mind of them all but also as their dominating and controlling spirit * * *.

Bergdoll's escape was the direct result of the proposition submitted by General Ansell to General Harris. Even if General Ansell did not conceive the plan, he presented it and pursued it to its accomplishment. The others had exhausted all remedies known to them as attorneys practicing in the civil courts. It was General Ansell, resourceful and conversant with military possibilities, who must have conceived it who must have conceived it.

Then I skip a little and get back to Brother Ansell again:

The broad, well-defined trail leading to the escape did not become unmistakably evident until General Ansell induced General Harris to authorize the expedition to search for the gold. There can be no doubt about General Ansell's ability and learning, but it can be no doubt about General Ansell's ability and learning, but it is certain he did not get into the case because of that ability and learning alone. * * * The large fee contemplated by him evidently was based not only upon what he might accomplish through legal channels but, in addition, by exercised influence.

The many fees to be gotten from others, and the big one to be paid by Bergdoll, lured him into questionable paths.

While there are many who participated in the conspiracy leading to Bergdoll's escape and the acquittal of those who brought it about, there are three who are infinitely more culpable than the rest. Those three are General Ansell, Colonel Hunt, and Col. C. C. Cresson. * * *

General Ansell is now out of the Army. He is beyond the jurisdiction of court-martial proceedings, but provisions should be made against his future practice before any of the departments, before any court-martial, or in the courts of the District of Columbia or the Nation above whose safety and integrity he has Columbia or the Nation above whose safety and integrity he has placed gold.

And yet he is the bird who was sent down to Louisiana, who stood up before the chairman and invited one United States Senator out for a fist fight and who stood up and invited a Senator elect out for a fist fight.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am not familiar with the Ansell-Bergdoll case except very hazily, and I was wondering what action was finally taken in regard to General Ansell. Was he discharged from the Army or disbarred or censured or what was done to him?

Mr. LONG. He got out of the Army just in time to avoid it. The fact of the case is-I am not quite sure-that he took a position as Judge Advocate General and he got out of that and resigned from the Army. Then he got into this.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, may I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that prior to his resignation from the Army he had been demoted for misconduct by order of the Secretary of War from brigadier general to lieutenant colonel, which was his regular Army status.

Mr. TYDINGS. Was that the result of his conduct in the Bergdoll matter?

Mr. CLARK. That was prior to his conduct in the Bergdoll case.

Mr. LONG. He had misrepresented facts, and, as a result, he got a commission from the Chief of Staff.

Mr. TYDINGS. May I ask how long it was after the Bergdoll case that he resigned?

Mr. LONG. He resigned before that.

Mr. TYDINGS. He resigned before that?

Mr. LONG. Yes; he resigned before the Bergdoll case. Instead of being retired, he resigned and took the Bergdoll

Mr. TYDINGS. Did the bar associations in the locality in which he belonged take any action because of his conduct?

Mr. LONG. I do not know what the bar associations did, but I have just read excerpts from what the congressional committee said.

Mr. TYDINGS. Did anybody inflict any punishment upon him except what was said by the congressional committee?

Mr. LONG. No; he seems to have gone scot-free, and never bobbed up again until he bobbed up in the company of the Senator from Nebraska. [Laughter.] The next I heard of Ansell after the time he led the united army into Maryland searching for the pot of gold, when he was recommended for disbarment as a scoundrel and a thief, was when he bobbed up as the personal, political, and financial escort of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Howell] to investigate me from the cradle to the grave in somebody else's election probe.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. I have rarely, Mr. President, heard anyone so vituperated and abused anywhere as I have heard the counsel for the committee investigating the Louisiana election. It is ex parte; it is by a Senator under his privilege of immunity, I take it, and in his character as attorney in the case, as I understand.

Mr. LONG. I do not claim any privilege.

Mr. BAILEY. That is what I wish to ask.

Mr. LONG. No, sir; I do not claim any privilege from this scoundrel anywhere on earth under God's living sun.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator claims no privilege?

Mr. LONG. None at all.

Mr. BAILEY. And no immunity?

Mr. LONG. None at all.

Mr. BAILEY. And the Senator invites the man accused by him to test the truth of his accusations in the courts? Mr. LONG. Anywhere on earth.

Mr. BAILEY. And the Senator agrees not to claim any immunity or any privilege?

Mr. LONG. Anywhere on earth. That is, however, I invite him to sue me in any court of competent jurisdiction, and I will not defend the suit except on the ground that he is a scoundrel and a thief and a rascal and a crook and has been determined to be such by an investigating committee of Congress. Does the Senator mean to say that the committee of Congress should be censured for its report on him?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, this Senator did not mean to say anything about any committee.

Mr. LONG. I am reading from the report. I will read the Senator what the Literary Digest said. Did the Senator hear what the Literary Digest said about him?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I might call the attention of the Senator from North Carolina to the fact that these remarks of the Senator from Louisiana were preceded by a statement from Colonel Ansell in his capacity as counsel for the investigating committee which was so scurrilous and so libelous that the great press associations of the United States refused to carry it.

Mr. BAILEY. I think the Senator from Louisiana directed a question to me. What was the question?

Mr. LONG. Was the Senator here when I read from the report of the congressional committee?

Mr. BAILEY. I was.

Mr. LONG. Was the Senator here when I read from the Literary Digest?

Mr. BAILEY. I was.

Mr. LONG. I hope I have not said anything about him that is not contained in that report and in the Literary

Mr. BAILEY. Let me say once more that I have heard a great many expressions of the personal opinion of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAILEY. I am content-

Mr. LONG. I think he is one of the lowest scoundrels that has ever been allowed immunity of law, and I have the authority of Congress to back me up in that statement.

Mr. BAILEY. I am content with the Senator's statement that he waives all privilege and immunity.

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir; I invite that rascal to sue me in a court of competent jurisdiction; and I will tell you now that there is not any more danger of him suing me than there is report of every investigator you have, and see if you can of my being made Pope of Rome; and I am a Baptist. [Laughter.]

No, sir; he is not going back to Louisiana to sue anybody. He can sue me in a Federal court, but he is not going down there to sue anybody. He invited me out to a fist fight; he invited the Senator elect, Overton, out of the room for a fist fight; but when the witness Weiss took the stand and told him he could invite him out to a fist fight he knew whom to invite out. He knew neither of us could afford it; so he did not ask the witness to go out. He made a great, big, hocuspocus play there over a police officer coming in there with a gun. A terrible thing—a policeman had a gun on him! He hauled up witnesses and made one of the greatest plays, that an armed gunman had walked in; that his life was in danger!

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. LONG. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. Would the Senator object to this investigation if counsel other than General Ansell were employed?

Mr. LONG. I did not object to the investigation at all within the limits of the law and what the Senate resolution

Mr. TYDINGS. The point I make is that evidently, assuming that what the Senator from Louisiana says is true-I have not read the testimony, and know nothing about itassuming that it is true, the point is, the Senator feels that the counsel was incompetent and not wisely selected. I should like to elicit from the Senator whether or not he would object to a comprehensive investigation of the proper charges by another counsel whom the committee might or might not select.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? Mr. LONG. Yes; I yield. Mr. CLARK. In line with what the Senator from Maryland has suggested, I should like to ask the Senator from Louisiana if it has occurred to him that having squandered $25,000 of public funds in an investigation that is almost wholly irrelevant, it might now be the intention of the committee, if it could be voted another $25,000, to devote it to the merits of the case, if any there be.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to ask the Senator from Louisiana that question.

Mr. LONG. I did not object to the investigation. They have investigated for 12 days. They have spent $25,000. They have brought there every enemy I have had; and if the Senator from Maryland will read this record and say that there is any ground, after having squandered $25,000, for squandering $25,000 more, I shall be glad to answer the Senator.

I say this: I have not objected to any investigation-

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I do not want to inject myself into this matter, because I know nothing about it; but what interested me was this:

It seems, from the remarks of the Senator from Louisiana, that the proper kind of an investigation was not made, and that it was made by the improper kind of an investigator. I am simply asking him, if the proper kind of an investigator is selected by the committee, as to whether or not he would have any objection to the proper kind of an investigation?

Mr. LONG. I say that everything that could have properly been brought out has already been brought out. They brought in every record, they brought in every archive, they brought in everything that could be brought in. Do you mean to ask whether I want another gang like that down there in Louisiana? No. There is not any more reason to investigate Louisiana than there is to investigate Maryland—not a bit on earth. Our man did not even have opposition at the general election. He was not even opposed. There was not a single contest filed before the State central committee-nothing at all. The arbitrators gave out a report saying that it was the fairest, the squarest election that was ever held in New Orleans. You have gone down there. You have produced everything you could. Take the find anything in it that justifies the spending of the funds. Oh, no! I think I understand things.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. LONG. Yes; I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Understand, I have not read the testimony.

Mr. LONG. No; I know the Senator has not, and the Senator is not going to read the testimony.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes, I will.

Mr. LONG. I hope the Senator does.

Mr. TYDINGS. But I was just trying to analyze what was the argument of the Senator from Louisiana—

Mr. LONG. I am arguing the facts.

Mr. TYDINGS. That he felt, first of all, that the investigator was not a proper investigator, and he seemed to make out a pretty fair case. Then he brought out the point that the investigation was not relevant, and he seemed to make out a pretty fair case.

Mr. LONG. All right.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not want to pass upon that kind of investigation, and all I was hoping to do was to give the Senator the kind of an investigation that he wanted.

Mr. LONG. I never asked for any investigation. [Laughter.] I never asked for any. Was there anybody here in the Senate who asked the committee to investigate his State? I did not ask for it.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LONG. I do.

Mr. CLARK. In answer to the Senator's question, I will say that I and another one of the leading candidates for the Democratic nomination in Missouri asked this committee to come into Missouri before the primary, at a time when there was evidence of the excessive use of money on every hand; and the committee replied that they would not come in unless we would get proof and send it to them, in which case we would not need the committee to come in. What we needed was process. If we had had the process and had had the proof, of course we could have proceeded under the criminal laws of the State of Missouri.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LONG. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HOWELL. A good deal has been said here about the large sums of money that have been spent upon this investigation. I desire to state that I am chairman of the committee to investigate campaign expenditures and other matters in the recent campaign; and all the expenditure that I have made, including this investigation—

Mr. LONG. You have not made any anywhere else.

Mr. HOWELL (continuing). Including this investigation—

Mr. LONG. That is all you have.

Mr. HOWELL (continuing). Amounts to $12,000.

Now, Mr. President, I also want to make another statement. We received complaints from Missouri. All they urged was that sums of money were being spent down there; and they wanted us to come down and investigate. Of course that is claimed in every State. We asked them for some details that could justify an investigation—sworn complaints, details, something to investigate about.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOWELL. Just a moment. We received no reply. I presented the matter to the full committee; and the full committee decided, as the minutes will show, that no investigator should be sent into that State.

Mr. CLARK. Now will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, of course if we had had the detailed proof in the form of affidavits, it would not have been necessary to have a Senatorial investigating committee come in. I take it that the purpose of creating this committee, in addition to the ordinary Committee on Privileges and Elections, is to serve particularly that purpose; to go into States and supply senatorial process to prevent violations of the law by the excessive use of money before the offense has been committed, instead of waiting until after the offense has been committed and then going in and going through the silly process of locking the barn door after the horse has been stolen.

The Senator's committee refused to come into Missouri in a case where two of the three leading candidates were joining in that request; and now it goes down here to Louisiana on a wild-goose chase in a contest in which the contestant himself stated on the floor of the Senate that he did not even contend that he had been elected.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Louisiana further yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I have not time enough to yield for all this argument. It is now 5 o'clock. I want to wind up. As to the merits of the Missouri matter, and any controversy with the Senator's investigating committee, that can be argued out later. I want to complete my statement about this matter.

I want to find out, however, who has poured the holy oil to exculpate this thimble-rigging crook who has been denounced by the House of Representatives as a crook and a thief. I want to know who has poured the oil over this man that Congress says, through its committee, is a crook and a thief and a rascal. I want to know if he has been made holy by going down and pulling off a kangaroo court in Louisiana. I want to know if it makes one holy if he calls in the political opponents of Huey P. Long.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir; I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. Do I understand the Senator from Louisiana to say that the investigating committee made up of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Howell] and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Carey] have conducted a kangaroo court?

Mr. LONG. I did not say any such thing, and the Senator did not understand any such thing.

Mr. BAILEY. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. LONG. All right. I said Maj. Gen. Samuel Tilden Ansell did that. The Senator did not understand me to say anything different than that. If he did, he is mistaken. I said, what had made this crook holy? Let him sue me. Go down there and bring suit. Let this crook bring suit—this man that Congress says is a thief, a crook of every kind, who has been so adjudicated after hearing by honorable men—and it has never been answered. It has never been denied. It has been published in the Literary Digest. It has been published in the public press that he had put up that pot-of-gold story, and sneaked this scoundrel Bergdoll over into Germany, and had received an immense amount of money to do it, and had resigned from the Army, and could no longer be served with process from it; yet he has been picked to go down there.

I did not complain against the investigation. I want the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Typings] to understand that. There is part of the investigation that was entirely relevant; and they went into everything they could get testimony on, that the investigators could find, so far as it was relevant, and I did not make any protest. They had the report of the investigators; and I want the Senator from Maryland to understand that the chairman of the committee announced that they had produced all the testimony they had there at the time. I did not object to that. I am not objecting to all that they went into; but after they had concluded that, and had no more evidence of that nature or description, to have gone in and put on the witness stand the men who had run against you for office, and have them repeat the old tales that they had told the people of that State for years, and have the privilege under law to compel your relatives that you could not support for public office to take the witness stand and remake the slanderous charges that they had made for years, that the people would not believe, and thereby make them whereby they could be published in newspapers, where you would be remediless—that is what I objected to; trying out the issue as to whether I was a member of the Ku-Klux Klan, back in 1923; going into the slander that they did not dare utter except under a privilege which would permit publication without a remedy to the man that was the victim of it. That is what this committee was used for.

I did not object. They had the report. For five months they had been in the State of Louisiana. After five months, and having a hearing there, without producing anybody to show anything at all, we are yet to have the kind of molestation we have had there, where they have brought in everybody they could.

Why, I will read you what the chairman of the committee said. Give me the last volume and I will read you what the chairman of the committee said. There is only one more matter. Here is what the chairman said:

This investigation by the Senate committee appointed to investigate campaign expenditures and other matters has been in progress since early in October, when a subcommittee composed of Senators Connally and Bratton recommended, after a preliminary hearing, that a full investigation be made. A corps of investigators has been in Louisiana since that time, and the present subcommittee has now completed 12 days of public hearings in New Orleans and has largely completed its work in this city. However, much data has been accumulated respecting out-State conditions, but hearings for the development of further facts must be deferred for the present.

But, Mr. President, this did not exactly state all the facts. They had brought witnesses there from Opelousas; they had brought witnesses there from Winnfield; they had brought witnesses there from Shreveport; they had brought witnesses there from Hammond; they had brought witnesses there on every point at all relevant and irrelevant from all over the State of Louisiana; and the Senator's statement there that they had not produced out-State testimony was not exactly according to what had been done, through an error of the Senator, which I know was made in good faith.

Now, here is what I said:

Counsel for Senator Overton was not given any particular notice that he would be permitted to produce witnesses to-day, but, having the opportunity for some two hours or more, has produced the testimony that has gone into the record, and counsel stands ready now to refute by competent testimony any charge of any irregularity that may be charged; and if the committee so desires, counsel for Mr. Overton will bring to Washington, D. C., public records of every kind, nature, and description and the witnesses that may be necessary at any time to show the falsity of any charge of irregularity or any other misconduct that may remotely be said to be connected with the Overton-Broussard campaign.

I ask the Senate this, when they have gone down there and received hearsay testimony for two weeks to prove nothing, if at the end of that time it is treating us exactly fair for them just to have pulled up stakes and left? It was just because there was nothing to be proven. With everything said there that could be said on these irrelevant and extraneous things, they were not able to prove anything.

(At this point Mr. LONG yielded the floor for the day.)

Wednesday, February 22, 1933

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I have received a little note, which I shall send to the desk and ask the clerk to read. It has something to do with the length of the speech I delivered here yesterday and what I propose to say to-day. I ask that the clerk read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Without objection, the clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Horace says:

"Be brief, so that the thought does not stand in its own way, hindered by words that weigh down the tired ears."

Huey, I commend the above sentiment to your consideration.

WALLACE H. WHITE, Jr.,

United States Senator.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, in view of the admonition which the distinguished Senator from Maine has seen fit to go back some two or three thousand years to get and give me, I shall undertake to condense my remarks into a very few minutes.

I wanted to read the majority report of the House on the escape of Grover Cleveland Bergdoll. Instead of reading that I send it to the desk and ask that it be incorporated at the conclusion of my remarks as Exhibit A.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LONG. Further, Mr. President, I should have stated in the beginning of what I said yesterday some matters of fact which I presumed Members of the Senate and the public at large understood a great deal better than it appears they do understand them.

I ask leave of the Senate to insert what I say in these few words relative to the history of the Bergdoll case at an appropriate place in the beginning of my speech of yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I further wish to say, since the matter was mentioned by the Senator from Missouri, not by me, that the statement issued by Mr. Ansell upon his return from New Orleans, I am informed by a member of the subcommittee, was issued without any consultation with or notice to any member of the committee whatever. I am informed that "General" Ansell, as he calls himself, wired to Washington, D. C., stating to the press that he would give a conference, and that he had actually wired that before he left New Orleans, without mentioning it to any member of the committee whatever; that he came here on a Sunday and called in the newspaper reporters and handed out a prepared statement which, I am informed, was never mentioned and never read to any member of the committee, with no notice given in any way, shape, manner, or form to any member of the committee that he was going to issue it until he did it here in Washington, an act which the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Howell] has said he regrets, and an act which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK! has described as highly infamous, to say the least.

Mr. President, I should conclude what remarks I desire to make, because I have undertaken to discuss only what I have termed the irrelevant matters of this inquiry. I did not go into the matter of the expenditure of money or of any opprobrium on the part of the candidate Overton, because I conceived that those were legitimate matters of inquiry under the resolution. Therefore I have not, in advance of the committee reporting, undertaken to go into these matters at all, and I hope I will not. But I wish to say a word further, and I am required to take some few minutes of the Senate's time.

LOUISIANA ACCOMPLISHMENTS

Mr. President, I do not conceive that the administration of Gov. O. K. Allen, of Louisiana, and of myself as Governor of Louisiana are appropriate objects of inquiry on the part of the Senate. I do not conceive that the merits or the demerits of our administrations as governors of that State are in any respect pertinent. But so much has been printed about these administrations of mine and my successor as governors that I am required to answer, hoping that some of the facts which I mention here may gain their way into the publications of this country to answer what was testified in the hearing and printed, but which was not, I contend, relevant.

Mr. President, I wish to say that when I became the Governor of Louisiana in 1928 the State was committed to a penitentiary losing some years to around a million dollars a year. At the conclusion of my administration and during the administration of Governor Allen that penitentiary, which had been losing a million dollars a year, is on a self-sustaining basis, and perhaps a paying and profitable basis.

I wish to say, Mr. President, that that penitentiary, along with the other penitentiaries of the United States, was investigated by a committee sent out by the N. E. A. newspaper services, and they reported on the penitentiary systems of the 48 States. When they reached Louisiana they stated that the penitentiary of Louisiana was the most ideal, from every standpoint, among all the penitentiaries of the United States. That was printed through- increased my allotment even in these hard times by apout the world in all newspapers, except in the newspapers of the State of Louisiana

Mr. President, the next thing which I hope will find its way into print to counteract what has been printed as a result of this hearing, under privilege, is that when I became the governor of that State, Louisiana was at the bottom of the list as the most illiterate State in the United States, according to statistics of the census of the United States. When I left the governor's office, we had opened up night schools to educate the illiterate people who were 20 years old and older. We sent them to school when they were 20 years old, 40 years old, or 70 years old, and when I retired from the governor's office in 1932 to become a Member of the Senate, illiteracy in that State had been reduced to such a point that Louisiana was among the States recognized for the education of the people, from the top to the bottom, regardless of age. The educational system had been so improved that the illiterates had been reduced from 238,000 by 150,000 adults being educated in night schools.

Mr. President, that is not all I wish to say in order that my State and my administration may not be stabbed unfairly in this proceeding. There was an improvement among the Louisiana colleges. The Louisiana State University, particularly, was rated by the Intercollegiate Association of State Universities as a third-rate college, and when I retired from the office of governor of the State of Louisiana it was rated as an A No. 1 university of the United States, as good as Harvard, Yale, Johns Hopkins, or any other university.

Criticism has been made in the record of the committee hearing of the fact that I built a medical college for the Louisiana State University. That is true. In 1905 a law had been passed providing that a medical college should be built. I completed that work, under that act, in 1931 or 1932, but I wish to say that, regardless of the criticism that has been put into the record, that medical college only a few days ago was given the highest rating that can be given by the American Medical Association to a medical

Then, Mr. President, a great deal has been said about the highway work that has been done in Louisiana. When I became governor of that State we had just a few mfles, perhaps 30 or 40 miles, of paved highways. Up until this day, as a result of what was done under my work as governor and under Gov. O. K. Allen, the State of Louisiana has about 2,000 miles of paved highways and about 9,000 or 10,000 miles of farmers' gravel road. The State of Louisiana stands out to-day when its program is completed, particularly, as the best State in America and the best community of the world for highways to accommodate its citizens, and no one has to go any further than the United States Bureau of Public Roads to find it out.

But that is not all. The roads built in the State of Louisiana, the concrete-paved highways of the best standard type. cost an average of $27,000 a mile, including ordinary bridges, and we had to build many bridges in that low country. They not only were the standard construction, but, whereas the United States Bureau of Public Roads require a tensile strength of 3,500 pounds to the square inch, some of the highways of Louisiana developed from 8,000 to 12,000 pounds tensile strength per square inch, as shown by tests. The highways of Louisiana cost an average, including the bridges, of $27,000 per mile, which is the lowest general average cost of highways in any of the 48 States of the American Union built at or before that time. They were built the least expensively, they were built the strongest, under the most adverse conditions of any State; they cost the least, the State has the most complete system, and yet that work has been marked as a matter of discredit and brought into an election investigation that had no more to do with it than the flowers that bloom in the springtime. So much for the highways.

In the matter of education, in order that the facts regarding my State may be known, we adopted the free school-book system in Louisiana, and under my administration I gave the schools, out of the State treasury, $1,000,000 more than ever had been given them before, and Governor Allen has propriating out of the treasury $1,500,000 a year to the school children more than I appropriated when I was governor, and I appropriated $1,000,000 more than my predecessor.

Whence does the money come? An effort has been made to show that the State of Louisiana is overbonded. Mr. President, the State of Louisiana has never defaulted on a bond nor on a maturity nor on the interest on her bonds. The State of Louisiana is not half overbonded. It is said that we issued something like $60,000,000 worth of highway bonds. North Carolina issued $135,000,000 and we have a better road system than North Carolina. North Carolina has a good road system, but not as good as ours. Arkansas has a good one, too.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. LONG. I yield. Mr. BAILEY. I rise to express profound gratitude for the Senator's confession. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONG. When I make such a confession it is a compliment. [Laughter.]

Not only that, Mr. President, but in Louisiana those waterways, which are streams in Nebraska and Michigan, are rivers. By the time they get to our part of the country, that which one may step across in Minnesota, is a mile wide in its ordinary stages. At flood stages it may be 10 miles wide. That means that we have to build a bridge by dumping out a certain length and then making a bridge that is 2 miles in length for a river 2 miles wide. That is what we have done down there in Louisiana that we are being criticized for and investigated because a man was elected on a ticket we happened to favor.

We are building to-day a bridge across the Mississippi River that has been promised the people for 40 years. We are undertaking to start to build another bridge at Baton Rouge. We are building a big, but not so long bridge over the Red River at Shreveport. We have already built a bridge over the Red River at Moncla. We are building another one at Moncla. We are building another one at Alexandria, La., and another one over the Black River at Jonesville. We are building another one over the Ouachita River at Sterlington; another one over the Ouachita River at Monroe—that one has been completed, however. We are building another one over the Ouachita River at Harrisonburg. La.

We have built bridges and are building bridges the like of which can not be found in the length or breadth of this country, under soil conditions such as no other State has had to contend with. We have built the best in the world, we have built the strongest in the world, we have built them at the least cost, and yet all the condemnation that could be poured upon the State and upon her governors has been brought forth in this irrelevant fashion.

TAXES ON THOSE ABLE TO PAY

Where does our money come from? Much has been said about taxation in our State, and after this reference I shall conclude. Where does the money come from? It did not come off the backs of the little man, not a dime of it. We reduced the property assessment in that State. The total assessment of $1,700,000,000 has been reduced to something like $1.400,000,000, meaning that the ad valorem assessed basis of property was reduced in that State somewhere between 16 and 20 per cent, meaning that we were receiving that much less in taxes off of the physical property of the little homes of the State and other property, big and little.

But where did the money come from? Mr. President, we put a severance tax on oil. That is where a part of it came from. We put a manufacturers' tax on carbon black. That is where some more of the money came from. We put a tax on the sales of tobacco. That is where some of the money comes from. We put a tax on malt. That is where some of the money comes from. But, Mr. President, under Governor Allen we did the terrible thing of voting a corporation franchise tax to get $1,000,000 or so, and the still worse thing of voting a tax on the manufacturer of electrical power and energy, which gives our State 2 per cent of the gross receipts derived from the manufacture of electricity and does not permit or allow it to be charged on the bills of the customers consuming it.

We also put a tax upon the natural gas severed from the soil of one-fifth of 1 cent per thousand cubic feet. As a result we have lowered the taxes on the little man, we have collected from the corporations, who should have paid and who are willing, I think, now to pay. They can not help themselves if they are not willing. Also, we have lowered the taxes on the little man. We have put the taxes on the corporation franchises. We have put the taxes on electricity, which taxes we have not allowed to be charged upon the bills of the consumers. We have put the taxes upon the elements and interests that could best bear the taxes. have taken the State out of illiteracy. We have raised the standards of its colleges. We have reformed the penitentiary to where it is on a self-sustaining basis. We have gone into the hospitals, where they were taking care of 1,600 patients a day in one hospital, and improved conditions so that to-day they are taking care of 3,800 patients in the same hospital. Where the death rate before I became governor was 4.1 per cent, the death rate has been reduced to 2.7 per cent, a reduction of 1.4 per cent that has been made in the death rate at that hospital.

JUSTICE FOR A STATE

Mr. President, I wish to say further, because I want my State to have the credit, that I am merely undertaking to erase the kind of publicity we have been given. We have built there a home for epileptics. There was no such thing in existence before I became governor of that State. When I became Governor of Louisiana our hospitals and asylums were treating the mentally sick, some of them in chairs in which they were locked, in strait-jackets; some of them had chains tied around their hands locking them to plow handles. We have abolished these barbarous practices in Louisiana under my administration and the administration of Governor Allen. There are three insane asylums in the world rated first class to-day that America knows of, and one of those is in the State of Louisiana.

Mr. President, with this statement I am not going to discuss the matter further unless occasion should arise. am prepared, however, to discuss the matter in such other and further detail as may be made necessary. I wish to say only this further word. We have undertaken to keep our State from receiving that kind of unfair and unfavorable publicity. It is a known and open fact that certain of the newspapers of that State have tried to break the credit of that State. They have sent over their wires and printed in their publications every line of misinformation that could possibly be spread. The State has a balanced budget; it has every finished picture; its university, which had 1,500 students, has now between 4,000 and 5,000 students. have built everything modern that a State could have. have come out of it with a State that has less taxes, Mr. President, than any State in America to-day, taking it from one side of the country to the other, that has anything like the improvements that we have in the State of Louisiana with the property we have.

So, Mr. President, I want to thank the Members of the Senate for their attention and hope these remarks will be justified but, at least, will suffice.

[House Report No. 354, Sixty-seventh Congress, first session] ESCAPE OF GROVER CLEVELAND BERGDOLL

Mr. Johnson, of Kentucky, from the Select Committee to Investigate the Escape of Grover Cleveland Bergdoll, submitted the following report:

On the 18th day of April, 1921, the House of Representatives adopted House resolution 12, reading as follows:

"Whereas one Grover Cleveland Bergdoll, recently convicted by Army general court-martial as a draft deserter and sentenced to confinement for five years in the United States disciplinary barracks at Fort Jay, N. Y., has escaped from confinement; and "Whereas charges are made, and there is reason to believe, that a plot and conspiracy existed among and between divers and sundry persons unknown to consummate the escape of the said Bergdoll from confinement under his said sentence: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That a select committee of five Members of the House be appointed by the Speaker of the House to investigate and procure all facts relevant to fixing responsibility for said escape and for the failure to recapture the said Bergdoll, and particularly to determine whether relatives, friends, counsel, or attorneys of the said Bergdoll participated in a plot or conspiracy to effect or give aid to said escape or to prevent recapture; or whether officers, noncommissioned officers, or privates of the Army or other persons connected with the Army or with the administration of the said disciplinary barracks or any other person participated in a plot or conspiracy to effect or give aid to said escape or to prevent recapture or were derelict in the performance of any duty devolved or devolving upon them which contributed to any duty devolved or devolving upon them which contributed to making said escape possible or prevented or hindered recapture or made it more easy for the said Bergdoll to elude recapture.

made it more easy for the said Bergdoll to elude recapture.

"That the committee so appointed may conduct such investigation by subcommittee or otherwise, may hold sessions during the recess of the House, may employ whatever assistance, either clerical or legal, it may deem necessary to aid in conducting said investigation, may administer oaths, may summon and compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of papers and documents, may employ a stenographer or stenographers to report the same, and have the reports of said hearings printed for use.

"That any and all expenses in connection with such inquiry shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee and by the Committee on Accounts: Provided, The expenses of said investigation shall not exceed the sum of $10,000.

"That said committee shall report its findings to the House at the earliest possible date, together with such recommendations as it shall deem pertinent and advisable."

Under that resolution the Speaker appointed the following it shall deem pertinent and advisable."

Under that resolution the Speaker appointed the following special committee: Messrs. John A. Peters, Maine; Clifton W. McArthur, Oregon; Oscar R. Luhring, Indiana; Henry D. Flood, Virginia; and Ben Johnson, Kentucky.

The committee held hearings on April 29, May 2, 3, 4, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 17, 18, 19, 23, and 24, and again on July 19, 22, 23, and 25; the latter hearings being for the purpose of inquiring into the conduct of Maj. Bruce R. Campbell. From the evidence and testimony given in those hearings the following report is made by the undersigned, a majority of the committee, to the House of Representatives:

A very brief statement of the case under investigation is as follows:

Grover C. Bergdoll, now about 28 years of age, was subject to the draft made during the recent World War. He evaded the draft, became a fugitive as a slacker, and continued such for something more than a year and a half. During that time he was in the United States, and frequently sent taunting and defiant letters to the highest authorities of our Government. His residence was in Philadelphia.

After the armistice was declared young Bergdoll returned to Philadelphia; and, it seems, spent at least a part of his time at his residence there. Just prior to January 7, 1920, the authorities received information to the effect that for several weeks he had been at one or the other of some four or five residences in or near Philadelphia. On the morning of the 7th of January, 1920, officers Philadelphia. On the morning of the 7th of January, 1920, officers went to each of these residences, surrounded them, and made search of the several premises.

When the officers went to the residence owned by Grover C. Bergdoll, his mother refused them admittance, although the officers had a search warrant with them, and so told her. After spending considerable time endeavoring to get into the house one of the officers placed his pistol against the door look and shot it off. When, in this way, they had gained entrance into the house they were confronted by Mrs. Bergdoll, who held them off with an automatic pistol. However, they managed to get that away from her and then proceeded to search the house. When every part of the house had been searched and they were about to leave without finding Bergdoll, one of the party lifted up the top of a small window seat and found Bergdoll concealed therein, although it seemed next to impossible for a man of his size to get into such small space. small space.

When Bergdoll had come out of the window box he was hand-

When Bergdoll had come out of the window box he was handcuffed to one of the officers, and another of the officers kept the key to the handcuffs. In this manner he was transported to Governors Island at New York, where the Government had a military, disciplinary prison in charge of Maj. John E. Hunt. In due course of time he was tried, convicted, and sentenced to five years' imprisonment for violating the draft laws.

Under usual circumstances he would have been sent immediately to Fort Leavenworth, Kans., to begin serving his term. However, under one pretext or another, his being sent to Leavenworth was deferred. On May 20, 1920, he was permitted to leave the prison at Governors Island, accompanied by a guard composed of two sergeants, for the alleged purpose of going into the mountains of western Maryland to secure something more than $100,000 in gold which he claimed to have buried there. When he reached Philadelphia on that pretended mission he made his escape, drove through the country in an automobile, accompanied by one Ike Stecker, to the Canadian line, there abandoned the automobile and went to Winnipeg, Canada. At that place, by false representations, he secured passports for himself and Stecker to London, from which place they found their way to Paris and thence into Germany; where, according to the best information, they still are.
Shortly after Bergdoll's incarceration at Governors Island it was urged that he was of unsound mind, and, therefore, should be released. However he was declared to be of sound mind.

Next, habeas corpus proceedings were instituted for the purpose of securing his release. The writ of habeas corpus failed to bring his release. Having been convicted, and both the insanity plea and his release. Having been convicted, and both the insanity plea and the habeas corpus proceeding having failed, some other means of securing his escape had to be resorted to.

Until that time D. C. Gibboney, of Philadelphia, was chief counsel for Bergdoll. It is generally conceded that Gibboney was not much of a lawyer but more of a practical manager for better lawyers. It is in evidence, and undisputed, that Gibboney, representing Bergdoll, sought to employ Judge John W. Westcott, a very eminent New Jersey lawyer. Westcott denies vigorously that he ever accepted the employment; while Gen. Samuel Tilden Ansell and his partner, Edward S. Bailey, testified emphatically to the contrary.

It is admitted that Judge Westcott wrote a letter to the Secretary of War, stating that he (Westcott) was "enormously" interested in Bergdoll's court-martial trial, and would be glad to have the Secretary of War give his personal attention to the case. The Secretary of War courteously replied, but said that the case had not come to his personal attention, and would not unless it reached him through the regular course of business.

It is also admitted that upon a certain occasion Gibboney gave Judge Westcott a $1,000 bill in payment of "a" fee. Judge Westcott denied that it was in payment of any fee on account of any employment by Bergdoll, stating that it was in payment of other employments.

employments. Bergdoll testified that at one time she paid Gibboney $10,000 in currency. While she would not state that she ever gave Gibboney a $1,000 bill, she did state that she kept large sums of Gibboney a $1,000 bill, she did state that she kept large sums of money in her house and that upon different occasions she had many $1,000 bills. Putting those circumstances together it is possible that the $1,000 bill which Judge Westcott received was paid to Gibboney by Mrs. Bergdoll and then by Gibboney to Judge Westcott, but not necessarily on account of Bergdoll.

After Bergdoll had finally escaped and had fied the country, the grand jury was about to meet in Philadelphia for the purpose of returning indictments against all those engaged in the conspiracy through which Bergdoll escaped. Either just prior to the meeting of the grand jury or during their sittings, Judge Westcott wrote a letter to the Attorney General of the United States, confidently expressing the opinion that Gibboney was as innocent of any part in the conspiracy as an unborn child.

in the conspiracy as an unborn child.

That letter was forwarded by the Attorney General to the district attorney at Philadelphia. Gibboney was not indicted.

The law firm of Ansell & Bailey was employed in April, 1920, by Gibboney to represent Bergdoll in an effort to have the court-martial conviction reversed or set saids.

Gibboney to represent Bergdoll in an effort to have the courtmartial conviction reversed or set aside.

As already stated, both Ansell and Balley testified that Westcott was cocounsel, but only in "an advisory capacity," or as "advisor of Mr. Gibboney." General Ansell fell out with Judge Westcott over this question and quit speaking to him because of differences in their statements concerning it. But their falling out has nothing to do with the real issue in the case. Westcott contended for none of Ansell's fee. He merely declined to claim any of the honors (?) accompanying the victory won, not through the courts but through the gold-hunting expedition.

For the purposes of this investigation it is not deemed important whether Judge Westcott was a regularly employed and paid counsel for Bergdoll, or whether, as a friend to Gibboney, he merely was counseling him. But it can not be disputed that he was acting in either one or the other of those capacities. Neither is it considered important whether General Ansell knew in which was acting in either one or the other of those capacities. Neither is it considered important whether General Ansell knew in which of these two capacities Judge Westcott was acting, as General Ansell could have made and did make the same use of Judge Westcott, regardless of the capacity in which he was acting. It is interesting to know that General Ansell, until a short time before his employment in the Bergdoll case, had been an officer in the Regular Army of the United States for about 25 years, and that during the war he was the next officer in authority to General Crowder, the Judge Advocate General. However, during the war Crowder, the Judge Advocate General. However, during the war General Crowder was more directly concerned and employed in preparing and executing the draft law, thus virtually leaving General Ansell as the Judge Advocate General.

At the time above indicated General Ansell resigned from the

At the time above indicated General Ansell resigned from the Army and associated himself with the law firm of Ansell & Bailey, making a specialty of military law.

Somebody conceived the idea of concentrating Gibboney's cunning and energy, Westcott's influence with the then administration, and Ansell's standing with the Army officials into one general scheme of defense or escape. Each of these three agencies—purposely or unwittingly—was effectively and concertedly at work at the same time on either one or both of these two propositions. It was known to Gibboney, Westcott, and Ansell that during the preceding October and November, Mrs. Emma C. Bergdoll, mother of the draft dodger, had in full compliance with law, exchanged $105,000 in currency for that amount in gold at the exchanged $105,000 in currency for that amount in gold at the exchanged $105,000 in currency for that amount in gold at the Treasury of the United States, which gold she claims to have buried. It must be that the mind of one or more of the attorneys just mentioned turned to Mrs. Bergdoll's alleged buried gold; and, upon that story, built the one to which reference is made in a letter sent by General Ansell to Adjutant General Harris, dated Tuesday, May 11, 1920. That story was not used by any of the Bergdoll attorneys, nor did it have any semblance of plausibility until General Ansell was employed in the case, nor until it had been colored and recolored by his fertile imagination.

It is admitted that General Ansell called upon Adjutant General Harris in the afternoon of May 11, 1920, and that later that afternoon, at his office dictated a letter to Adjutant General Harris relative to the conversation which they had just had about Bergdoll's release. That letter, as dictated, seems not to have been sufficiently strong for General Ansell's purposes. Consebeen sufficiently strong for General Ansell's purposes. Consequently he directed Miss Sisson, his stenographer, not to type-write the letter until the next morning. General Ansell that night at his home, with lead pencil, wrote out another letter. Next morning that was typewritten by Miss Sisson, signed by General Ansell—not by the firm of Ansell & Balley—and sent to The Adjutant General.

Miss Sisson, the stenographer, preserved her shorthand notes of the letter dictated on the afternoon of May 11, 1920. That letter was not sent. In her testimony before the committee she read those notes and reduced them to typewritten copy, reading as follows:

"MAY 11, 1920." MY DEAR GENERAL HARRIS: I wish to confirm, in this informal "My Dear General Harris: I wish to confirm, in this informal way, the statement I made to you a few moments ago orally in support of the request that I am making of you and the Secretary of War. I am counsel for Grover Cleveland Bergdoll, a so-called draft deserter, now in imprisonment at Fort Jay pending the review of his case by the War Department. Bergdoll is represented in Philadelphia by Mr. D. C. Gibboney, a gentleman of the highest standing in that city and a lawyer of unquestioned probity. Judge Westcott, formerly attorney general of New Jersey, and who doubtless is well and favorably known to Mr. Baker, is a consulting counsel in the case and adviser of Mr. Gibboney.

"Last Friday Mr. Gibboney, accompanied by Judge Westcott, came to my office and conferred with me about a situation concerning young Bergdoll's property, which was so strange that the truth of it under normal circumstances would hardly justify belief. In view of the fact that Mr. Gibboney believes Bergdoll's statement to be true, and in view of the numerous circumstances tending to support it, I myself believed it to be credible and such as to justify counsel in making of the department this present request.

"This young man has unquestionably inherited a very considerable property from his father. He has not heretofore developed that sense of responsibility required for the care and proper use of a large sum of money. I understand that the control and influence of his mother have not tended to the development of an inhuence of his mother have not tended to the development of an adequate sense of responsibility in such matters. I am advised also that there have been family difficulties which seem to have produced a desire in this young man to get a physical control over his property, ungoverned by the other members of the family.

"The motive for his action was probably complex and not easily understood, but I am advised that at different times he took two large sums of money in gold coin and plead them in took two large sums of money in gold coin and placed them in large metal containers; one, I am advised, he left with some person in western Maryland. This has been recovered. The other, Bergdoll states, he took, all alone, and buried it in an out-of-the-way place on some mountainside, at a place within a day's railway place on some mountainside, at a place within a day's railway travel from this city. This sum amounts to about $150,000 gold coin. He is quite unable to direct Mr. Gibboney or me how to find it, and of course, assuming his statement to be true, it can be found only by him in person. He is now thoroughly perturbed with the apprehension that he may never recover it, and is intensely anxious to be permitted to go with counsel and under guard to find it. He wishes to recover it and turn it over to some proper custodian for safe-keeping and investment.

"And such is my request. Upon all the facts before me. it proper custodian for safe-keeping and investment.

"And such is my request. Upon all the facts before me, it seemed entirely reasonable to me, and so it seemed to you. I hope and believe it will seem so to the Secretary. I do not desire to ask the privilege, but only that which is necessary for this man to conserve what is his. There can be no danger of escape. The department will, of course, send such guard as it sees fit, and all expenses will be borne by us. In addition, I shall hold myself, as counsel, responsible for the safe return of this prisoner to his place of confinement and that no advantage will be taken of such leave as is granted other than that which is the object of this request.

"May I ask that this communication, for the time being, may I ask that this communication, for the time being, will be kept within the knowledge of you and the Secretary alone, and may I ask you to take it up at your very earliest convenience with Mr. Baker and let me know the result?

"With very kindest regards, I am,

"Very sincerely, yours."

The general tenor of the above letter, which was not sent to General Harris, should, by all means, be compared with the one which was sketched out that night with lead pencil, and which was sent the next day to General Harris. The charges made were most adroit and clever; were not authorized by other counsel in the case whose names were used; in some instances, were not warranted by the facts.

The letter actually sent reads as follows:

Ansell & Bailey, Attorneys at Law, Suite 710-712, Riggs Building, Washington, D. C., May 11, 1920.

My Dear General Harris: Please permit me, in compliance with your helpful suggestion of a moment ago, to place before you in this manner my request, concerning which I have just spoken to you, in behalf of Grover Cleveland Bergdoll, together with a brief statement of the reasons therefor.

This man, in virtue of his conviction and sentence as a so-called draft deserter is now imprisoned at Fort Jay, pending the review of his trial by the War Department. I am his attorney. His home counsel in Philadelphia is Mr. D. C. Gibboney, of unexcelled repute as a man and a lawyer. Of counsel, also, in a consulting capacity, is Judge Westcott, of New Jersey, whom doubtless the Secretary well knows. These gentlemen visited me last Friday and related to me a situation which we believe to be true and and related to me a situation which we believe to be true and which impels us to submit this request.

This young man was reared fatherless under family conditions which, even when partially revealed, throw considerable light upon conduct of his that, to say the least, is strange if not unintelligible. From his father he inherited wealth. Apprehending the family desire to control his share he at times has openly submitted and at others has become secretive of his wealth. This latter, perhaps, is the most influential of the many complex motives for his actions in the instance I now speak of. In any event, it is now known that he did secrete one large sum of money which was known that he did secrete one large sum of money which was recovered a year or so ago. He now declares that he also hid a second large sum, the remainder of his fortune ($150,000), in a lonely spot on a mountainside, distant about a day's journey from this city; that he placed the gold coin in a metallic container and took it himself, unaccompanied, and hid it in a spot which he alone can identify. Circumstances indicate the truth of his statement.

He is now wrought up with fear and anxiety lest he may never recover the money, and accordingly earnestly asks me, other counsel joining him, to endeavor to arrange it that he may go, under guard and with his counsel, to recover the money and place it in safe-keeping; all expense to be borne by us.

We are requesting no privilege—only the necessary liberty of action under guard. This prisoner has no desire to escape, nor could he if he wanted to. Notwithstanding the guard, as his counsel, I stand responsible for his prompt return to prison without advantage to him other than that involved in the object of this request.

I hope this request may be granted immediately. It seems reasonable and right to me, and also to you, and I hope—and doubt not—that it will seem so to the Secretary.

May I ask prompt action upon this request? May I also ask that, if possible, knowledge of the contents of this communication, for obvious reasons, be confined to you and the Secretary, and further that you notify me personally at the first practicable moment after you have decided upon this request?

With kind regards for your many courtesies, I am,

Sincerely.

The purpose of these changes is obvious when the two papers

Ine purpose of these changes is obvious when the two papers are compared and the end to be accomplished considered.

In the first sentence of the letter, which was not sent and which afterwards was pruned and put into more seductive form, he made the request of both General Harris "and" the Secretary of War; while the letter which was actually sent used this language:

"It seems responsible and right to language:

"It seems reasonable and right to me, and also to you, and I hope—and doubt not—that it will seem so to the Secretary."

If the letter had been sent as first written, it would have been necessary that the request go to the Secretary of War. The second letter—the one that was sent—merely expressed the hope that the request might seem reasonable to the Secretary, but omitted the specific request that the matter be referred to the Secretary.

Another sentence in the letter which was not sent reads as follows:

"Judge Westcott, formerly attorney general of New Jersey, and who doubtless is well and favorably known to Mr. Baker, is a consulting counsel in the case and advisor of Mr. Gibboney."

That sentence was changed to read as follows in the letter that was sent:

"His home counsel in Philadelphia is Mr. D. C. Gibboney, of unexcelled repute as a man and a lawyer. Of counsel also, in a consulting capacity, is Judge Westcott, of New Jersey, whom doubtless the Secretary well knows."

General Ansell is a man of extraordinary native ability, wonderfully improved by training and education. No man better knows the exact use of words and their effect than does he. The conclusion is irresistible that General Ansell was then using with emphasis the name of Judge Westcott to bring influence to bear upon the Secretary of War, should the communication ever reach him; and, just as certainly, to bring to bear additional influence with General Harris.

Also, in the letter first dictated, he said that Judge Westcott Also, in the letter first dictated, he said that Judge Westcott was "advisor of Mr. Gibboney." That expression or assertion is left out of the letter which was sent. Is it possible that General Ansell, even at that time, was giving more or less thought, with the view of later dividing responsibility, to the attitude of non-employment which Judge Westcott assumed? Westcott admitted that he "advised" with Gibboney, but denied that he was employed by Bergdoll, and there is no contradictory proof.

In the letter which was not sent General Ansell used this language:

language:

"Last Friday Mr. Gibboney, accompanied by Judge Westcott, came to my office and conferred with me about a situation concerning young Bergdoll's property, which was so strange that the truth of it, under normal circumstances, would hardly justify belief."

Upon consideration by General Ansell that language must have appeared too strong. No doubt he was apprehensive that that language might raise with General Harris a question as to the stated, in substance, that Gibboney and Westcott had conferred with him about a situation which "would hardly justify belief." So, if the story about which Ansell, Gibboney, and Westcott "conferred" would "hardly justify belief," it must be changed, if General Harris was expected to accept and act upon it.

General Harris was expected to accept and act upon it. Then General Ansell's statement was changed into being such a plausible one that all of them—including Ansell—believed the story; and, in consequence, were "impelled" to make the request.

The changed or altered statement reads as follows:

"These gentlemen visited me last Friday and related to me a situation which we believe to be true and which impels us to submit this request."

When General Ansell dictated the statement that "would hardly justify belief," that statement being the result of a conference with Gibboney and Westcott, one must wonder whether or not those two gentlemen, or either of them, consented to the change from lack of belief to one so certain that they were "impelled" by it to ask for Bergdoll's release. It is a self-evident fact—the others not being in Washington—that Ansell made the change without consulting the others. He attributed to each of them a "belief" which, perhaps, neither entertained. In the first draft it is not stated that either believed the story, but in the second all are represented as believers in it.

It is interesting to note the reasons assigned by General Ansell

It is interesting to note the reasons assigned by General Ansell for the burial of the gold. In the letter not sent he uses this

I understand that the control and influence of his mother have not tended to the developand influence of his mother have not tended to the develop-ment of an adequate sense of responsibility in such matter. I am advised also that there have been family difficulties which seem to have produced a desire in this young man to get a physical control over his property, ungoverned by the other members of the family."

In the letter actually sent to General Harris, General Ansell gave the following as an explanation of the unusual conduct of Grover Bergdoll:

Grover Bergdoll:

gave the following as an explanation of the unusual conduct of Grover Bergdoll:

"This young man was reared fatherless under family conditions which, even when partially revealed, throw considerable light upon conduct of his that, to say the least, is strange if not unintelligible. From his father he inherited wealth. Apprehending the family desire to control his share, he at times has openly submitted and at others has become secretive of his wealth. This latter perhaps is the most influential of the many complex motives for his action in the instance I now speak of."

In the letters not sent, General Ansell speaks of certain vague "family difficulties," which "seem" to have caused Bergdoll to desire a physical control of his property. These paragraphs clearly illustrate the difficulties, which even the astute mind of Ansell could not overcome, in giving adequate and sufficient explanation of the motives which prompted Bergdoll to bury the gold. Some excuse for this conduct had to be given, and the labored efforts of Ansell have only tended to make confusion worse confounded.

The letter which was not sent used the language, "There can be no danger of escape." That was changed in the letter which was sent to, "This prisoner has no desire to escape." That change makes the statement stronger to General Harris and also lays the foundation for denial of personal responsibility in the future for counsel not attending the expedition.

It should be noted that General Ansell did not merely express the opinion that the "prisoner has no desire to escape." Instead he made the unqualified statement to that effect. How did he know the prisoner had no desire to escape? According to his own admissions, he then had had no communication with the prisoner relative to the expedition for the buried gold; and consequently no direct information upon which to base that statement as fact. It admissions, he then had had no communication with the prisoner relative to the expedition for the buried gold; and consequently no direct information upon which to base that statement as fact. It may be that the other attorneys who consulted with General Ansell about the release to get the alleged buried gold agreed to the statement that "there can be no danger of escape"; but it is possible at least that they would not have approved the statement as fact that Bergdoll had "no desire to escape." The former statement, no doubt, was based on the then—but afterwards violated—arrangement that one of counsel was to accompany the expedition; that the prisoner was to be handcuffed; that a commissioned officer was to go along; and that the guard was to be both ample and properly instructed.

missioned officer was to go along; and that the guard was to be both ample and properly instructed.

The first proposition, accompanied by the foregoing considerations, is quite different from the one that "the prisoner has no desire to escape," especially since each and every one of the conditions just related were to be utterly disregarded.

It is going a long way for one of the counsel to make such a wide departure from the original statement without having the environment of the counsel whose names were used in the communication.

wide departure from the original statement without having the approval of the counsel whose names were used in the communication conveying the changed representations.

In the letter which was sent there is something that does not appear in the one which was not sent. That language is this:

"He (Bergdoll) is now wrought with fear and anxiety lest he may not recover the money, and accordingly earnestly asked me (Ansell), other counsel joining him, to endeavor to arrange it that he (Bergdoll) may go, under guard and with his counsel, to recover the money and place it in safe-keeping; all expenses to be borne by us." borne by us.

borne by us."

When it is considered that General Ansell stated that he had no communication with Bergdoll after he saw him at Governors Island on April 17, when, according to General Ansell, no mention was made of the proposed search for the buried gold, was very remarkable, to say the least.

It will be noticed that General Ansell says in the above quotation that Bergdoll earnestly asks him to endeavor to arrange it so that he (Bergdoll) may go, under guard and with his counsel, to recover the alleged buried gold.

If, at that time, General Ansell had had "no communication" with Bergdoll relative to the matter, how is it possible that Bergdoll so "earnestly" made that request of him? General Ansell can not claim that that request was conveyed to him through either Gibboney or Wescott, for the reason that he himself says in the above-quoted paragraph that the request was made by Bergdoll, "other counsel joining him" in the request. Nothing of that sort was said in the letter which General Ansell dictated to his stenographer immediately after he left General Harris on May 11. That must have been an afterthought, originating in his mind, and not warranted by the statement of either Gibboney or Wescott was sent—deneral Ansell stated that he would be responsible for the return of the prisoner.

In both letters—the one which was not sent and the one which was sent—General Ansell stated that he would be responsible for

General Ansell in his testimony repeated several times the statement that General Harris "did not expect" him to accom-pany Bergdoll on the expedition; but that he did expect some one pany Bergdoll on the expedition; but that he did expect some one or more of counsel, to accompany it. Both General Ansell and his partner, Mr. Balley, testified that the agreed arrangement was that Mr. Balley was, at least, to meet the expedition at Hagerstown, Md., and accompany it during the remaining 20 or 25 miles of the proposed journey to the spot where the gold was said to be buried. The law firm of Ansell & Balley was employed by Bergdoll, but General Ansell did not pledge the firm to see to it that Bergdoll was returned. Instead, the pledge was General Ansell's personal one Ansell's personal one.

been admitted by General Ansell and by everybody else It has who testified upon that point, that at least one of Bergdoll's attorneys was to accompany the expedition.

General Ansell himself did not state that he told General General Ansell himself did not state that he told General Harris that he himself would not accompany the expedition. He merely expressed the opinion that General Harris "did not expect" him to do so. If General Ansell himself was not to go, but counsel was to go, then the question arises: Whom did General Harris "expect" would go? Neither of General Ansell's letters—the one which was sent nor the one which was not sent—indicates that Westcott was to go. In the letter which was sent, Westcott is referred to as an attorney "in a consulting capacity," while in the one which was not sent, Westcott was referred to as an "advisor of Mr. Gibboney." In addition, Westcott is an old, palsied man, not physically equal to the trip outlined by General Ansell.

General Ansell himself did not in his testimony make even the General Ansell himself did not in his testimony make even the slightest claim that Westcott was to go. Therefore, according to General Ansell, no attorney except Gibboney or Bailey could have been expected to go. General Ansell says he himself did not contemplate making the trip; and since he knew that Judge Westcott could not, if he would; and, further, since he knew two days and two nights before the expedition started that his partner, Mr. Bailey, was not going, he was bound to know that the only one of counsel who might possibly accompany the expedition from beginning to end was Mr. Gibboney.

General Ansell knew several days in advance that the expedition would start May 20; and he knew that Gibboney himself did not contemplate making more than a part, if any, of the journey.

contemplate making more than a part, if any, of the journey. So, there is no escape from the conclusion that General Ansell knew, at least two days and two nights before the journey started, that his pledge made to General Harris in this respect was to be violated.

When General Ansell was on the witness stand the question was put to him a number of times, and by different members of the committee, to indicate at least one specific act done by him looking toward the redemption of that pledge. To each and every one of these questions he was either nonresponsive or evasive. To some of them he replied, in substance, that he had sought to have Bergell recentured after the escape had been every one of these questions he was either honresponsive or evasive. To some of them he replied, in substance, that he had sought to have Bergdoll recaptured after the escape had been accomplished. In other words, all that he specifically claimed to have done was to undertake to lock the stable door after the horse had gone. He plead, in extenuation, after Bergdoll had escaped, that he offered a reward for his recapture. If he had been recaptured and the reward had been claimed, no doubt every one of the many who furnished information here and there would have claimed all or part of the reward, and litigation over it would have claimed all or part of the reward, and litigation over it would have been interminable, and the day of payment far in the future, if at all. Then, it is most probable, indeed, that an officer, and not a private citizen, would have made the arrest; and an officer can not maintain a cause of action to enforce the payment of a reward for making an arrest which he should have made regardless of the reward.

The two letters—the one which was sent and the one which was not sent—when taken in connection with all of the other happenings in the case, show that General Ansell was not only taking advantage of his long association in the Army with General Harris but was actually misleading him into having Bergdoll released for the purpose of seeking the alleged hidden gold. It also is clear that he undertook to use Judge Westcott for the purpose of bringing to bear a political influence upon anybody in the then administration who might be needed to make sure of the gold-hunt release which at last spelled Bergdoll's escape. Then when Judge Westcott, in response to General Ansell's urging, had not seen the Secretary of War in person, Ansell, still using him, had him write a letter to the Secretary of War, asking him to take Bergdoll's case under personal advisement.

It was known to General Ansell that Judge Westcott had put Woodrow Wilson in nomination for the Presidency of the United States, both at Baltimore and four years later at St. Louis, and that Westcott was a personal friend of both the President and The two letters -the one which was sent and the one which the Secretary of War. Knowing that, he took particular pains to inject Westcott's name into the letter which he wrote General Harris, and then, in his presence, had Westcott write a letter to the Secretary of War in Bergdoll's behalf, based upon Westcott's alleged "enormous" interest in the case.

It was made clear that Westcott's services as active counsel in the case were sought by both Gibboney and the Bergdolls, and the case were sought by both Gibboney and the Bergdolls, and just as clear that Westcott declined to act in that capacity.

Since Gibboney, practicing only in the civil courts, and Ansell, practicing as an expert in military law, met, it matters little which found the other, or how, as both were on a hunt for the Bergdoll gold, and each got much of it.

After the employment of the firm of Ansell & Reliev both found the other, or how, as both were on a hunt for the Bergdoll gold, and each got much of it.

After the employment of the firm of Ansell & Bailey, both Ansell and Bailey visited Governors Island and saw Bergdoll, their visits being made at different times. Mr. Bailey returned from Governors Island to Washington and reported to General Ansell at his residence on the night of the 17th of May, at which time it became understood and agreed between them that neither was to go upon any part of the expedition. The question naturally arises that if one or the other of them was to go—and Bailey admits that he had agreed to join the expedition at Hagerstown, Md.—why was there a change of mind just following Bailey's return from a visit to Bergdoll, to the effect that neither was to go at all. And further, why was not General Harris so advised? He was within a stone's throw of them during these two days and two nights. What happened between May 11 and May 17 that did away with the necessity of even Bailey's going? Was information received by either Ansell or Bailey at Governors Island, where Bergdoll was confined under Colonel Hunt, that the gold was not buried at Hagerstown, or that the expedition would not proceed beyond Philadelphia, where Mrs. Bergdoll says the gold was buried, and at which point Bergdoll escaped?

The fact has been established by Treasury officials that Mrs. Bergdoll, during October and November, 1920, exchanged $105,000 in currency for that amount in gold; and it is conceded that she took that gold by automobile from Washington to Philadelphia.

About a month and a half after Mrs. Bergdoll got the $60,000 in gold, which was the last amount gotten, young Bergdoll was arrested in his mother's house in Philadelphia. Shortly after his arrest and his transfer to Governors Island, he there commenced telling about having buried two different amounts of gold. His arrest and his transfer to Governors Island, he there commenced telling about having buried two different amounts of gold. His mother had gotten two different amounts of gold—$45,000 and $60,000—and she has testified that she made two different burials of these amounts. She further states that her son neither knew that she had gotten gold nor that she had buried any.

It is admitted by Mrs. Bergdoll that young Bergdoll had been at her house in Philadelphia quite a little between the time she got the gold and the time when he was arrested and taken away to Governors Island. It is strikingly strange that he should be telling his associates in prison and counsel that he had buried two sums of gold amounting to more than $100,000; while, if we believe the mother, she had actually buried the two different sums aggregating approximately the same amount of which Berg-doll himself was speaking.

The conclusion is not an unreasonable one that, if Mrs. Bergdoll did bury the gold gotten from the Treasury and did make two different burials of it, then young Bergdoll must have known of the whole transaction. Otherwise he only imagined or dreamed of a condition that exactly coincided with the undisclosed but actual doings of his mother.

On the 19th of April, 1920, General Ansell prepared a contract fixing the fee which the firm of Ansell & Bailey was to receive as attorneys for Bergdoll. That tentative contract was submitted by General Ansell to Mr. Gibboney for his approval, but Mr. Gibboney declined to approve it. Thereafter, on the 23d day of April, Mr. Gibboney himself, representing Bergdoll with carte blanche authority, submitted a counter, tentative contract to General Ansell.

Under the terms of the first tentative contract Ansell & Bailey.

Under the terms of the first tentative contract Ansell & Bailey, according to the construction put upon it by Mr. Bailey, could have received $60,000. Still, according to Mr. Bailey, under the tentative countercontract submitted by Mr. Gibboney, Ansell & Bailey could have received $55,000.

Bailey could have received $55,000.

General Ansell stated in his testimony that the tentative contract submitted by Gibboney to him was never executed, notwithstanding the fact that he also stated that the terms of that tentative countercontract were agreeable to him. Now the question arises: If Gibboney prepared and submitted a paper whereby $55,000 was to be paid, and that paper was fully acceptable to Ansell, why was it not executed? Gibboney, when submitting the countercontract, was personally present with Ansell. All that was necessary was for both of them to sign it. Something, we know not what, only by surmise, must have become understood between those two men upon that occasion that caused them to abandon the execution of a contract agreeable to them both. But it is certain that after that date, from all the committee has But it is certain that after that date, from all the committee has been able to gather, neither that are, from an the committee has been able to gather, neither the execution of that contract nor any other was ever mentioned or pressed by either of the proposed parties to it. General Ansell had gone to the trouble to prepare a contract for employment, and Gibboney had done the same about a counter one; yet, when their minds met in full agreement, all attempts to conclude the contract were abandoned by both by both.

For all that the committee really knows, General Ansell was employed by Gibboney to represent Bergdoll only in the then pending litigation between the United States and Bergdoll. General Ansell refused to even look at the first papers until he had been paid $100, and he refused to have anything to do with the case until he had been paid $5,000 more. Yet we find him departing from that employment and taking up another important piece of work, that of securing the expedition, without disclosed fee or contract for fee, when the actual work to be done by himself and partner, including the visit to Governors Island and the agreement to accompany the expedition for many miles in a mountainous region, to say nothing of the obligation for the prisoner's return, was bigger and more onerous—besides being fraught with the danger of questionable ethics—than was the original proposition, for which he proposed to charge $50,000.

The absence of a fee or a contract for one must be significant when taken in connection with one whose ever first thought seems to have been given to the payment or securing of a large fee.

The suggestion that Bergdoll's escape defeated the collection of the Ansell fee is fallacious. Bergdoll had nearly $1,000,000 worth of property within reach with which to pay fees at any time, either for the preparation of the brief in the military case or for either for the preparation of the brief in the military case or for procuring the gold-hunting expedition. Consequently it was not necessary to find the gold in order to get the fee.

Already it has been shown that neither Ansell nor Bailey contemplated going with the expedition after Bailey's return from Governors Island, where he saw Bergdoll two days before the expedition started. The only remaining attorney who might be expected by anybody, even by General Ansell himself, to go upon the expedition was Gibboney, and he even falled to accompany the expedition from New York to Philadelphia.

When Bergdoll arrived at the railroad station in North Philadelphia from Governors Island, Gibboney was there to meet him with a letter of identification from Colonel Hunt. However, Gibboney rode only a few blocks in the automobile with Bergdoll and his guards, when he abandoned the party never to join it again.

guards, when he abandoned the party never to join it again.

Mrs. Bergdoll testified that on the next morning, after she received each of the sums of gold, she had her chauffeur to drive her ceived each of the sums of gold, she had her chauffeur to drive her away from her residence to a point where she said she buried it. The Bergdolls owned a farm about 11 miles out of Philadelphia. Mrs. Bergdoll stated that she took the gold in her automobile and took along a shovel with which to bury it. She stated that when she had reached the spot of burial she sent her chauffeur away from the automobile to gather apples, and that while he was gathering apples she buried the gold. If that be true, the gold was buried on the Bergdoll farm, and it was not contemplated that the expedition procured by General Ansell was to go beyond Philadelphia. Can it be possible that an ascertainment of the fact that the gold which Mrs. Bergdoll had gotten from the Treasury had been buried on the Bergdoll farm, not far from Philadelphia, caused all of counsel to repudiate the pledge that counsel was to accompany the expedition?

The fact has been established that when Bergdoll and his guard fact has been established that when Bergdoll and his guard The fact has been established that when Bergdoll and his guard arrived at North Philadelphia, under directions of Mr. Gibboney, who held Colonel Hunt's letter of identification, they went to the Bergdoll residence, accompanied by "Judge" Romig and Ike Stecher. Stecher is the man who fied with Bergdoll and who now is in Germany with him. The further fact has been just as well established that on that very afternoon these same parties drove out to the Bergdoll farm and roamed about over it, instead of going on to Hagerstown, Md., as represented to General Harris by General Ansell would be done.

General Ansell would be done.

In view of the foregoing, how is it possible to hold General Ansell blameless? Being 46 years of age, he is just in the prime of all of his abundant faculties. He is both able and alert. Intellectually he is wonderfully endowed; and, having spent 25 years in the Army, where he had every phase of humankind to deal with, we must believe that he was fully equipped to counter any attempt at deception upon the part of Bergdoll, Gibboney, or the guards. He was far from being such a novice in the affairs of the world that Gibboney, Bergdoll, Romig, or the guards could have pulled the wool over his eyes and blinded him as to the inevitable result of the expedition which he alone had procured. Anybody who has seen and heard all of those associated, either directly or indirectly, with the plan or manner of Bergdoll's escape not only must recognize General Ansell as the master mind of them all but also as their dominating and controlling spirit. He is not the kind of man that will merely follow. Upon the other hand, his is the character of one who must lead. His ability, his experience, have equipped him to lead even the most intelligent of associates.

equipped him to lead even the most intelligent of associates.

Bergdoll's escape was the direct result of the proposition submitted by General Ansell to General Harris. Even if General Ansell did not conceive the plan, he presented it and pursued it to its accomplishment. The others had exhausted all remedies known to them as attorneys practicing in the civil courts. It was General Ansell, resourceful and conversant with military possibilities, who must have conceived it.

In fact Gibboney Rowling and the Bergdoll family convenience.

In fact, Gibboney, Romig, and the Bergdoll family, conspiring among themselves, were unable to bring about the order for Bergdoll's release. Such, of course, was the object of the conspiracy, but in order to successfully accomplish it it was absolutely necessary to have the active assistance and cooperation of Ansell and Bailey and Colonel Hunt. Without the aid of these latter Bergdoll could not have left Governors Island could not have left Governors Island.

When Bergdoll was arrested on January 7, 1920, as already said, he was taken, in handcuffs, directly to Governors Island, N. Y., and put in charge of Colonel Hunt, commandant of the military disciplinary barracks at that place.

While Bergdoll was confined there Colonel Hunt was several times apprised of the dangerous character of Bergdoll and of the probability of his attempting to escape. The police authorities at Philadelphia well knew Bergdoll's character as a dangerous, reckless fellow. Notwithstanding that advice, Colonel Hunt, according to his own testimony, preferred to rely upon a board of psychiatrists as to Bergdoll's character.

When Bergdoll was arrested on January 7, 1920, after he had been a fugitive for more than a year and a half, approximately 30 guns and pistols were found in the house in which he was arrested. One of those guns was a rifle equipped with a Maxim silencer. All these weapons were removed from the house by Government authorities. However, immediately after his final escape from the same house on May 21, 1920, it was discovered that the supply had been replenished, as seven shotguns in the that the supply had been replenished, as seven shotguns in the meanwhile had been brought in. In addition there was a pistol or two and a blackjack in the house. After his escape to the Canadian line had been accomplished, and he had abandoned his automobile there, a large revolver and a Lueger repeating pistol were found in his automobile. These facts bear out the Philadelphia police in their opinion that Bergdoll was a dangerous man and would do violence if the occasion for doing so presented itself, the contact of the contact of prophilary for the contact of the contact of prophilary for the contact of the cont the opinion of Colonel Hunt's board of psychiatrists to the contrary notwithstanding.

Colonel Hunt admitted that he disregarded the admonitions and warnings as to Bergdoll's character and his possible escape; and, instead, relied upon the diagnosis made by his board of psychiatrists. When testifying in his own behalf during his court-martial trial, and while referring to the warnings about Bergdoll,

Colonel Hunt said:

The weight of those two warnings—the legal obligations contained in them—was just about the legal obligations of a communication from the mayor of Timbuctoo." (P. 260, court-martial trial of Colonel Hunt).

One of the warnings given to Colonel Hunt was dated March 8, 1920, and was signed by William Weigel, colonel, General Staff.

The communication reads as follows:

"1. Attention is directed to letter from the department adjutant dated January 20, 1920, addressed to you and relating to Grover C.

Bergdoll.
"2. In addition to the precautions directed in the letter referred "2. In addition to the precautions directed in the letter referred to above, the department commander directs that at all times when Bergdoll leaves the walls of Castle William, he be guarded by two armed sentinels. Whenever Bergdoll in his present status leaves the island, the commanding general directs that he be handcuffed to one sentinel and guarded by another sentinel. The dangerous character of this prisoner has been reported by the police authorities of Philadelphia, who are in a position to know the amount of force which is probably necessary for his restraint, and this direction is made because of the information gained from these experienced police officials."

Relative to those warnings Colonel Hunt, in his court-martial trial, testified as follows:

"Q. I asked you if you considered him a dangerous prisoner?—

A. During the time of his trial I had more accurate information and was in better position to judge, in my opinion, of the dangerous character of Bergdoll, of his criminal mind, than the judge advocate, than the judge advocate's office, or the judge advocate advocate, than the judge advocate's office, or the judge advocate of the department, or anybody else; I had received full information from a careful and scientific investigation, conducted by a board of officers, who inquired into his sanity. I received information from Major Baker, who was my psychiatrist, and I regarded it as absolutely dependable. At the time I received these two communications I knew all about Bergdoll. I had received the official and scientific opinion of an authority in regard to Bergdoll. official and scientific opinion of an authority in regard to Bergdoll. Those letters were worth to me just as much as they were based on facts, and they were not based on any facts at all. So far as this information was concerned, there wasn't anything in that." That was one of the several instances of his defiance of superior authority in Bergdoll's favor.

In addition to the court-martial trial with which we are now dealing, Colonel Hunt was court-martialed three times on the charge of drunkenness. In one of these court-martial proceedings he was sentenced to be dismissed from the service. Appeal was charge of drunkenness. In one of these court-martial proceedings he was sentenced to be dismissed from the service. Appeal was made to President Taft, who, in his usual good nature commuted his punishment to that of a reduction of 50 files. Upon one of these three occasions he undertook to anticipate and prevent conviction by making a solemn pledge that he would not indulge in any intoxicating liquors for a period of 10 years. That promise he failed to keep.

There can be no better nor more convincing proof of Colonel Hunt's defiance of authority and ignoring of instructions than is

Hunt's defiance of authority and ignoring of instructions than is found in his own testimony before his court-martial trial on ac-

Throughout that whole court-martial trial he contended that Bergdoll should have been treated like the least offending prisoner, notwithstanding the information which had been conveyed oner, notwithstanding the information which had been conveyed to him relative to Bergdoll's dangerous character, and his probable attempts at escape. His contention to that effect was based entirely upon the report of the psychiatrists, the actual and patent facts to the contrary notwithstanding. Besides Colonel Hunt was conducting the prison on an "uplift" policy. He introduced witnesses to prove, in effect, that it was better to trust Bergdoll to the extent that he did well-known harmless prisoners than to keep him confined or under close survivillence as he had been keep him confined or under close surveillance, as he had been instructed to do.

He resented every suggestion made to him relative to keeping a He resented every suggestion made to him relative to keeping a close watch over Bergdoll. His determination to pursue his own narrow way about things, his ignoring directions and defying instructions from the higher authorities at Washington are not short of being criminal; and Bergdoll's escape is traceable directly to that criminality as one of the several important happenings contributing to that deplorable end.

Colonel Hunt first endeavored to excuse what, justly, may be termed the insufficient guard, by claiming that he alone had the right to determine how much of a guard should accompany the prisoner, and that nobody else had any right even to make suggestions as to the sufficiency of the guard. Throughout his testimony in the court-martial trial he constantly exhibited that resentment and defiance.

When that attitude had aroused criticism, he sought shelter under the assertion that he did not have a commissioned officer who could be spared when the expedition started.

He said that one commissioned officer was absent on leave, and that another had just returned from taking some prisoners out to Leavenworth, and was too fatigued to then go upon this expe-dition; and that, in consequence, he sent the prisoner out ac-dition; and that, in consequence, he sent the prisoner out accompanied by only two sergeants.

When he made that statement he must have thought that other people would overlook the fact that he himself could select the day and the hour when the expedition should start. Therefore, he, after a conference with Bergdoll's counsel and some of the convicted conspirators, chose a day when, according to his own statements, he knew he could not comply with the instructions of his superior officers by sending a commissioned officer along. Except that he was acting in defiance of instructions, and in collusion with the prisoner, his friends, and his attorneys, he would have selected a day for the expedition when all instructions could have been complied with, including the sending of a commissioned officer.

Bergdoll received surprisingly considerate treatment from Col-

Bergdoll received surprisingly considerate treatment from Col-

Bergdoll received surprisingly considerate treatment from Colonel Hunt. A man named Speicher slept in the same cell with Bergdoll. Speicher made many trips to New York during that time. There is no doubt that Bergdoll kept in close touch with the outside world through Speicher, as well as through others.

Harry Weinberger, the New York lawyer, testified that Speicher upon one occasion came to his office and brought a note from Bergdoll. About that time Speicher got into some trouble and $200 was necessary to get him out of it. That amount was paid by Bergdoll through his mother. If Speicher was receiving that gift and probably others from Bergdoll, and delivering communications to Weinberger, it is reasonably certain that he was delivering communications from Bergdoll to outsiders and from outsiders to Bergdoll. siders to Bergdoll.

siders to Bergdoll.

Mrs. Bergdoll testified that she was permitted to place $700 in the prison at the disposal of her son, in order that he might purchase knickknacks for his fellow prisoners.

When O'Hare, one of the sergeants who was to accompany Bergdoll upon the expedition, was about to start thereon, he asked Colonel Hunt for handcuffs, but they were refused.

While in prison Bergdoll and the other prisoners were clothed in prison garb, easily distinguishable, and upon the clothing of each was a prison number. Colonel Hunt sent other prisoners than Bergdoll to Philadelphia, and he sent them in the prison garb, bearing their prison numbers. But when he came to send Bergdoll on his buried-gold mission he had the prison garb removed and clad him in the uniform of an honorable soldier, except there was no cord around the hatband. It is quite easily seen that if Bergdoll had escaped in his prison garb, bearing a except there was no cord around the hatband. It is quite easily seen that if Bergdoll had escaped in his prison garb, bearing a prison number, many persons would have been willing to halt him and bring him to account, but the fact that he was clad in the uniform of a soldier of our country threw off suspicion and, instead of blocking his escape, made it easier, as all respected the uniform of the country. Every direction which looked toward Bergdoll's safe-keeping was rejected by Hunt, and everything that might facilitate his escape was done without question or quibble. There is some conflict between the testimony of Colonel Hunt and that of Sergeant O'Hare relative to the instructions given by Colonel Hunt to O'Hare when he was told that he was to go on the expedition as one of the two guards. Notwithstanding this conflict it is quite certain that the main instructions given to O'Hare by Colonel Hunt were given merely by submitting to him, and by Colonel Hunt were given merely by submitting to him, and having him read the official letters from Washington.

It appears that Colonel Hunt called Sergeant O'Hare into his office and told him that the expedition would start on the morning of the 20th, and that he and another sergeant were to constitute the guard; but that as between himself and the other sergeant, he (O'Hare) was to be the principal officer.

Then Colonel Hunt gave the official letters to Sergeant O'Hare and told him to read them. While O'Hare was reading the letters Hunt turned to his desk and wrote with pen and ink.

When O'Hare had finished reading the letters Hunt turned to him and asked him if he understood them. O'Hare affirmatively.

Colonel Hunt never asked O'Hare a single question for the pur-Colonel Hunt never asked O'Hare a single question for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not he correctly understood them. He made no effort whatever to learn whether O'Hare understood them just as he, himself, did. As a matter of fact, O'Hare left Colonel Hunt and went upon the expedition as the principal guard, with only his own construction of the letters, without having them explained by Colonel Hunt, and without ascertaining whether the two of them understood the letters alike.

Whether the two of them understood the letters alike.

O'Hare testified that when he asked Colonel Hunt to give him handcuffs so that Bergdoll might be handcuffed, Hunt replied that handcuffs would make Bergdoll "too conspicious."

To test O'Hare's capacity to correctly understand the letters which Major Hunt, without explanation, had shown him, he was asked to spell the word "conspicuous," a word used by Hunt in talking to O'Hare. He spelled it "c-o-n-p-i-c-i-o-u-s."

The following colloquy during the hearings will clearly show O'Hare's lack of education and his consequent lack of ability to properly interpret the letters:

Mr. Johnson. What did you say that Colonel Hunt said about the handcuffs?

- "Sergeant O'Hare. Yes, sir. When I read a sentence I can almost make out what it is, or read a paragraph."

 It will be noticed by the last question and answer that O'Hare admitted that he did not know the meaning of many of the words in the letters. According to his own statement the best he can do is "almost" make out what it means.
- York, the sergeant who, with O'Hare, constituted the guard, admittedly was given no instructions whatever. If anything had happened to O'Hare, York would have been absolutely without any sort of instruction.
- As said, while O'Hare was reading the two letters, Hunt was writing a letter in longhand to Gibboney. That letter was shown by Hunt to O'Hare, that O'Hare might be able upon reaching North Philadelphia to identify Gibboney, by whom the letter was to be shown to O'Hare when he reached Philadelphia to report to Gibboney. That letter reads as follows:

GOVERNORS ISLAND, N. Y., May 17, 1920.

Mr. D. CLARENCE GIBBONEY.

Sir: This letter is to serve the purpose of your identification in the matter which was arranged in my quarters on Governors

Very respectfully.

JOHN E. HUNT, Major, Infantry.

When O'Hare, with his prisoner, arrived at the North Philadelphia station, Gibboney went to O'Hare and presented the letter which had been written by Hunt, and which O'Hare had seen before it was mailed to Gibboney. O'Hare states positively, and the above letter and every other circumstance bears him out, that when the expedition reached North Philadelphia Gibboney. when the expedition reached North Philadelphia, Gibboney, as Bergdoll's attorney, was to have control as to where the party should go. O'Hare, following his construction of the letters, including the one of identification written by Hunt, clearly showed that Hunt intended that O'Hare should report to Gibboney at Philadelphia, and there receive instructions from him as to the rest of the journey, since it is admitted by all that O'Hare knew neither the road nor the destination.

Believing, and correctly so, that from that moment Gibboney was to control their movements, O'Hare followed Gibboney's instructions and took Bergdoll to his own residence.

It seems clear that it never was intended that the expedition should proceed beyond Philadelphia; and it is no difficult matter to determine who knew in advance that it was not to proceed

Two days and two nights before the expedition started both Ansell and Balley abandoned any intention to go that either may have had, as well as any understanding with anyone in authority that either of them was to meet the party at Hagerstown or anywhere else. Hunt did not direct O'Hare and York, the two guards, to compel Bergdoll to go farther than Philadelphia. Instead, he wrote the letter above referred to; showed it to O'Hare; then mailed it to Gibboney, and had Gibboney present it at Philadelphia to O'Hare, in order, as Colonel Hunt says, that O'Hare might be able to identify Gibboney.

be able to identify Gibboney.

The question arises: For what purpose was Gibboney to be identified by O'Hare? Was it that he might merely make the acquaintance of Gibboney; or was it that Gibboney, just as O'Hare says, was to tell O'Hare where the party should go? That letter was not written as an introduction of Gibboney or for any other unimportant matter. It was written with the serious and important intent of having O'Hare report to Gibboney for instructions not given him by Hunt himself. There can be no doubt about that.

about that.

Following Gibboney's directions the party entered an automobile. Scarcely were they seated in the automobile until Gibboney gave directions to proceed to the Bergdoll residence, he himself leaving the automobile at a convenient place to go to the court room, where Mrs. Bergdoll was then being tried.

Neither Gibboney, Romig, nor Ike Stecker, all of whom said they were going on the journey to Hagerstown, Md., on a mission which required them to be out several days, had any baggage whatever when they met Bergdoll and the guard at North Philadelphia.

Mrs. Bergdoll, although a millionaire, usually does all of her Mrs. Bergdoll, although a millionaire, usually does all of her own work, cooking, washing, and ironing, and other household duties. Notwithstanding this fact, on the day before Bergdoll arrived at her residence in Philadelphia, she arranged for Mrs. Stecker to come to her house on the following day to cook dinner. The next day—the day when Bergdoll and the party actually arrived at the residence—Mrs. Bergdoll had put part of the dinner on the stove to be cooked. Other provisions for the dinner were already in the kitchen Mrs. Bergdoll purchases her meager supply of groceries from day to day, if not from meal to meal.

On this day there would have been nobody at the house for dinner if Bergdoll, O'Hare, and the others were not to be there, except Mrs. Bergdoll, her mother, and the gardener. But, in addidinner if Bergdoll, O'Hare, and the others were not to be there, except Mrs. Bergdoll, her mother, and the gardener. But, in addition to those three there were present for dinner, Mrs. Stecker, Grover Bergdoll, "Judge" Romig. Ike Stecker, Sergeant O'Hare, and Sergeant York. Yet there was ample dinner for all nine. Still, all those who were helping young Bergdoll, including Ansell and Hunt, disclaim that there was to be a stop at Philadelphia. It was testified that Gibboney stated that the journey was not to be pursued farther than Philadelphia that day because the automobile which the party was to use was "knocking." No immediate steps, if any at all, were taken to repair the car.

When O'Hare, with his prisoner and the others, arrived at the Bergdoll residence nobody was there except Mrs. Bergdoll's mother, who was more than 80 years of age.

who was more than 80 years of age.

Bergdoll proposed that they take a ride through the city until dinner time, they having reached the Bergdoll house about 10 o'clock. This they did, returning to the Bergdoll residence about In the meantime Mrs. Stecker had arrived and was 12 o'clock. In the meantime Mrs. Stecker had arrived and was preparing dinner; not for three persons, but for nine.

After dinner was over it was proposed not to have the automobile repaired, but to take another ride. This also they did, and during that ride they visited the Bergdoll farm, 11 miles out in the country. What happened there can be only surmised, but it should be remembered that if Mrs. Bergdoll or Bergdoll himself ever buried any gold it must have been on the Bergdoll farm.

After the visit to the Bergdoll farm the party returned to the Bergdoll residence in Philadelphia. After supper was over there was nothing done by Ike Stecker, the chauffeur, looking toward the repair of the car; but, instead, the party took another ride in the alleged disabled car, during which time they went to a show and

A bottle or bottles of gin were placed in different parts of the Bergdoll home, where any of the party could partake of it at will. It is conceded that all except O'Hare drank some of it. This will be mentioned again further along.

It must be noticed that Gibboney, one of the Bergdoll attorneys, and who had long been a friend and attorney for the Bergdoll family, was out in town and not at the Bergdoll residence. It must also be noted that "Judge" Romig, an intimate friend and confidential adviser of the family, was within the residence with must also be noted that "Judge" Romig, an intimate friend and confidential adviser of the family, was within the residence with O'Hare, York, and the prisoner.

It is interesting to see who Gibboney and Romig are. Gibboney was an attorney at law with but little knowledge of the law. His principal profession or occupation was that of a self-styled "uplifter" or reformer. In the latter capacity he pretended to be stamping out the liquor traffic and other evils. The Bergdolls owned a brewery, and some twelve hundred or fourteen hundred saloons dispensed their beer. By and by, Gibboney, as uplifter and reformer, came to be recognized by the authorities as one who, for the sake of peace, should be consulted about the issuing of licenses for these and other saloons. His opinions relative to issuing licenses to the Bergdoll saloons not only did not cause a rupture between himself and the Bergdolls but it brought him and them closer together. He was the man to whom Colonel Hunt delivered Bergdoll and the two sergeants—York and O'Hare. In addition, Gibboney was the man who was on the outside of the Bergdoll residence to observe, while "Judge" Romig was within to report, which he did by telephone.

Who is "Judge" Romig? He was never a licensed attorney. He acquired the title of "judge" because he was a justice of the peace, before whom offenders in the Bergdoll saloons were tried for minor offenses. His conduct as justice of the peace so greatly endeared him to the senior Bergdoll that he, when upon his death bed, asked "Judge" Romig to look after Grover when he was gone. From that day until this "Judge" Romig has been a constant visitor at the Bergdoll residence and their confidential adviser. It was he who accompanied Mrs. Bergdoll and drove her automobile from Philadelphia to Washington upon the two occasions when Mrs. Bergdoll got $105,000 in gold from the Federal Treasury.

Up to this point it is seen that General Ansel procured the release of Bergdoll from Colonel Hunt; and Colonel Hunt placed

Up to this point it is seen that General Ansell procured the release of Bergdoll from Colonel Hunt; and Colonel Hunt placed Bergdoll in the hands of Sergeants O'Hare and York; and they, by Hunt's orders, delivered him to Gibboney, and Gibboney turned him over to Romig, the foster-father, who accompanied him to the Bergdoll residence from which he escaped. All that was not accident; it was design.

General Ansell in his letter to General Harris extolled the virtues of Gibboney. Yet, when he came to testify, he disclosed that his information as to Gibboney was acquired after the escape and not before. So, his statements were made as facts when he lacked the necessary information upon which to base an opinion as to Gibboney's real character. If General Ansell had said as much to General Harris about Gibboney as he virtually admitted to the committee, no doubt General Harris would have refused, under those circumstances, what he granted under the other unqualified representations.

Almost immediately after the receipt of the letter sent by General Ansell to General Harris on May 11, Hunt, at Governors Almost immediately after the receipt of the letter sent by General Ansell to General Harris on May 11, Hunt, at Governors Island, was advised over the telephone by Colonel Penn, that Bergdoll was to be released. On Sunday, May 16, "Judge" Romig went over to Governors Island. He saw Bergdoll upon that occasion. As to whom else he saw, and what was said, the committee is not advised. However, "Judge" Romig testified that upon that occasion Bergdoll spoke to him of the contemplated expedition to recover the buried gold. According to "Judge" Romig's own testimony he all but flew up into the air as soon as Bergdoll mentioned "gold" to him; and he reprimanded Bergdoll for having even mentioned "gold." "Judge" Romig had accompanied Mrs. Bergdoll from Philadelphia to Washington in her automobile upon the two occasions when she got, in the aggregate, $105,000 in gold. He helped her to carry it from the Treasury Building at Washington into the automobile; and in Philadelphia he helped her to carry it from the automobile; and in Philadelphia he helped her to carry it from the automobile; and in Philadelphia he helped her to carry it from the automobile into the Bergdoll residence. But, for some unaccountable reason he said he would not permit young Bergdoll, while at Governors Island, to even mention "gold." By reference to Romig's testimony, it will be seen that when asked if he believed the story of buried gold he stated that he believed the gold to be where he had last seen it; that is, in the Bergdoll's release and the expedition were not a hunt for gold, but intended for Bergdoll's escape, and he commenced in time to disclaim participation.

As ugly as are many phases of this whole matter, none is more defenseless than the conduct of Colonel Cresson in his pretended prosecution of Colonel Hunt.

To turn those loose who turned Bergdoll loose but adds insult to injury, and Colonel Cresson was the principal one of the instruments through which this latter offense was perpetrated.

The charges upon which Colonel Hunt was tried, as set out in |

The charges upon which Colonel Hunt was tried, as set out in the specifications, were:

"He suffered and permitted the * * * said general prisoner, Bergdoil, to leave said barracks on the date aforesaid, not properly and suitably guarded, and not accompanied by at least one of said counsel, in view of said information, and warning, in that he did send said Bergdoil from said barracks in the custody of the paragraphics and officers, namely, Servis, John O'Hare and he did send said Bergdoll from said barracks in the custody of two noncommissioned officers, namely, Sergts. John O'Hare and Calvin York, Ninth Disciplinary Company, United States Army, whom he had detailed as guard over said prisoner for and during the journey contemplated by the instructions of The Adjutant General aforesaid, and then and there failed to instruct said guards, or either of them, to handcuff said prisoner or to direct that the said guard be provided with handcuffs for that purpose in case of need therefor, and failed and neglected to give said guards, or either of them, sufficient and adequate instructions as to their journey, the care and safeguarding of said prisoner, and guards, or either of them, sufficient and adequate instructions as to their journey, the care and safeguarding of said prisoner, and their course of conduct in charge of said prisoner, and otherwise failed properly to instruct said guard, and also in view of said information and warning as to said character of said prisoner as aforesaid, failed to send a commissioned officer with said guard as suggested in the instructions of The Adjutant General as aforesaid; by reason of all of which said carelessness, negligence, failure, and neglect of duty in the premises on the part of the said Lieut. Col. (then major, Infantry) John F. Hunt, United States Army, retired, and commandant as aforesaid, and as a result thereof said general prisoner Bergdoll did escape from the custody of said guard at Philadelphia, Pa., on or about the 21st day of May, 1920."

Concretely put, Hunt was charged:

Concretely put, Hunt was charged: First. With not having the prisoner and the guard accompanied by at least one of the counsel.

Second. That he failed to instruct the guard to handcuff Bergdoll, or direct that the guard be provided with handcuffs in case of need thereof.

Third. That he failed and neglected to give the guard sufficient and adequate instructions as to their journey and safeguarding of the prisoner.

Fourth. That he failed to send a commissioned officer with the uard, as directed in the instructions of The Adjutant General. Fifth. That he failed to send Bergdoll out with a suitable guard. Colonel Hunt plead "not guilty" to each of those five charges;

Colonel Hunt plead "not guilty" to each of those five charges; but when testifying in the court-martial trial, and also before this committee, he admitted that he did send the prisoner out without any of the counsel accompanying the expedition from New York to Philadelphia, and the expedition did not proceed beyond Philadelphia. The prisoner and the guard were actually unattended by any of the counsel during any part of the journey except for the few city blocks while Gibboney was in the automobile with them, which was just before he turned the party over to either Romig or to Bergdoll himself.

As to the second charge, Colonel Hunt admitted he did not instruct the guard either to handcuff the prisoner or to take handcuffs along. On the contrary, he forbade both.

struct the guard either to handcuff the prisoner or to take handcuffs along. On the contrary, he forbade both.

As to the third charge, which relates to instructions, it is not claimed by Colonel Hunt that he gave any instructions whatever to York, who was one of the two sergeants in whose charge the prisoner was placed. The only other guard was Sergeant O'Hare. The lack of instructions to him already has been commented upon. However, Colonel Hunt claims that he gave O'Hare verbal instructions in addition to having him read the letters already referred to. Everything that was said and done by either of them, and by all others who were connected with the unfortunate affair, goes to corroborate O'Hare and to discredit Colonel Hunt in this respect. respect.

As to the fourth charge, Colonel Hunt admits that he did not send the commissioned officer, as he was told to do by the higher military authorities at Washington.

The fifth charge is that Colonel Hunt did not send a "suitable"

guard.

O'Hare testified that he is 5 feet 5½ inches tall and that he weighs 130 pounds. Unquestionably he would have been an uneven match in a grapple with Bergdoll, who was a physical giant in comparison. It may be argued that O'Hare had a pistol; but what could he have done with a pistol if Bergdoll had seized him for the purpose of taking it away from him?

It has been clearly demonstrated that he did not have sufficient education to certainly understand the written instructions. One look at him discloses that he is a man far below the average in intelligence.

intelligence.

That he, without sanction or approval, permitted Bergdoll to be driven to the Bergdoll farm; that he accompanied Bergdoll to a show at night; and then, late at night, permitted Sergeant York to go into a saloon is conclusive proof that he was not a "suitable" guard. That he permitted Bergdoll to get out of his sight while in the Bergdoll residence is but a finishing incident to while in the Bergdoll residence is but a finishing incident to establish his total inefficiency.

Sergeant York was the other of the two guards. As said, it is admitted by Colonel Hunt himself that he gave no instructions to him. Receiving no instructions whatever from Colonel Hunt, the charge must be true, as stated in the specifications, that he was not properly instructed. Colonel Hunt was not only delinquent in not instructing York, but he was such in selecting him. He made a great boast that in O'Hare he knew he had a sober man. He lays no claim to knowing anything of the habits of York. As just stated, on the night of the first day that the party reached Philadelphia, York went into a saloon in the presence of O'Hare, who was York's immediate superior. Next we find that in the Bergdoll residence a bottle of gin just "happened" to be wherever York went about the house, and it is not denied that both he and the prisoner drank freely of it.

The charge in the fifth spetification, the one with which we are now dealing, relates to the "suitableness" of the guard. The question well may be asked, "Who, when made acquainted with the facts, will be willing to answer that the guard was 'suitable' for any purpose except for the easy escape of the prisoner?"

As to the five charges made in the specifications against Colonel Hunt, notwithstanding the fact that he plead "not guilty" to each of them, he specifically admitted three of them in his testimony, and the other two were established. Notwithstanding his admission of his guilt as to the first specification, the court acquitted him. acquitted him.

Another count in the specifications was, that Colonel Hunt failed to provide the guard with handcuffs. To that charge he also plead "not guilty"; yet, upon the witness stand, he admitted the truth of the charge. In the face of that admission

To the third count Colonel Hunt again plead "not guilty"; but, in his testimony he admitted that he did not send a commissioned officer. Still, as to that count the court again held him not guilty.

The other two counts in the specifications related to insufficient instructions to the guard, and to the suitableness of the guard. Those two were established by the proof, but not by Hunt's admissions.

So, all five counts were proven, three of them by Hunt's admissions, and yet the court found him "not guilty" on each and every one of them.

every one of them.

There can be no question that Sergeant O'Hare was imposed upon by Colonel Hunt. However, there can be no excuse made for the opportunity of escape which O'Hare gave Bergdoll. O'Hare was guilty of unpardonable negligence during the night spent in the Berdoll residence, in that he permitted Sergeant York to go upstairs and sleep with a bottle of gin, while he remained downstairs and sleep tin the same room (in another bed) with Bergdoll. Unless Bergdoll had had a safer and just as certain plan of escape, he either would have taken O'Hare's pistol from him while O'Hare was asleep, or he would have covered him with one of his seven shotguns, compelled him to hold up his hands and remain silent, and then go away in the automobile, possibly taking O'Hare with him and throwing him out in the road at such point as might best suit his purposes.

such point as might best suit his purposes.

There can be no defense whatever made for Sergeant York.
On their arrival at Philadelphia he got out of the automobile and On their arrival at Philadelphia he got out of the automobile and went into a saloon. During that night and the next day at the Bergdoll residence, on several occasions, he drank gin, not only by himself but with the prisoner. He too, is just as blamable as is O'Hare for letting Bergdoll get out of sight. He even did not sleep in the same room with the prisoner. Besides, when the telephone bells were ringing—no doubt as a signal to Bergdoll that everything was ready—York says he went to another floor of the house to get a drink of water, when there was water on the floor which he was leaving.

house to get a drink of water, when there was water on the floor which he was leaving.

Lieut. Col. C. C. Cresson, as said, was the judge advocate detailed to prosecute Colonel Hunt in the court-martial trial.

Even before any testimony was introduced Colonel Cresson made the following statement to the court:

"The Government disclaims, and personally and on behalf of the prosecution, any idea of there being anything crooked or any collusion on the part of Colonel Hunt in this matter, or that any money was used, the only charge in the matter being simply neglect of duty and failure to take due precautions in the matter."

(P. 7, Hunt's court-martial trial record.)

By that declaration Colonel Cresson gave notice that he would not, if he could, prove that he did not furnish a sufficient guard if he was bribed not to do so.

if he was bribed not to do so.

In the same way this prosecuting attorney served notice that he would not prove, even if he could do so, that Colonel Hunt had failed to send a commissioned officer along with the guard if he had been paid not to do so.

had been paid not to do so.

The inevitable conclusion is that Bergdoll bought his way out; yet Colonel Cresson, the prosecutor, boldly announced that he would not prove that to be the case even if he could.

That statement by Colonel Cresson clearly shows what a shocking mockery the rest of the trial was.

On pages 16 and 17 of the record of the court-martial trial of Hunt it is shown that the defense undertook to prove by General Harris that he had inspected the prison on Governors Island, of which Colonel Hunt was commandant, on June 11, following May 21, when Bergdoll escaped; and that Colonel Cresson objected to the testimony, but afterwards withdrew this objection and permitted the condition of the prison, after the escape, to be inquired into. All of which had nothing whatever to do with the case, except to avoid the real issues.

On page 18 of the same record it is shown that the prosecution

On page 18 of the same record it is shown that the prosecution, without objection to the question, permitted General Harris to testify relative to an inspection of the prison made by him on April 10, 1918, as if the condition of the prison more than two years

April 10, 1918, as if the condition of the prison more than two years before the escape of Bergdoll had anything to do with his escape. Again, that record shows on page 19 that General Harris was permitted, without objection on the part of the prosecution, to testify as to the condition of the prison in April, 1919, more than a year before the escape.

General Harris declined to say that the release of Bergdoll to go find the gold was not a precedent. The case he cited as precedent was where permission was given a prisoner to go to see his dying mother. No instance was cited where a man had ever before been permitted to go hunt for any instrument or for gold; gold buried to aid him in avoiding capture in the first place, and to be used toward his escape in the next place.

Attention is invited to that part of the answer of General Harris when he said, "It is not infrequent—it is not a common occur-rence to give consent for a man to go to his house to recover some effects or papers, particularly papers, but they are always sent under guard." In that sentence we have General Harris saying, first, that it is "not infrequent" and next "it is not a common So, no precedent for the Bergdoll release could be occurrence." found.

It is to be taken as granted that the permission which was referred to as a precedent, where papers were to be gotten, that they were not such as could be used by the prisoner in effecting his escape, as the gold was to be used by Bergdoll.

On page 24 of the same record, in the testimony of Colonel Penn, we find the following question and answer, neither of which was objected to by the presecution:

objected to by the prosecution:

"Q. Up to the time of the 20th of May, this year, what would you have to say as to the administration of the disciplinary barracks by Colonel Hunt; was it satisfactory or otherwise?—A. It had been entirely satisfactory to the department."

Again, the question may be asked: What did the administration's opinion of the condition of the barracks have to do with the escape of Bergdoll?

On the same page, the following questions were put to Colonel

"Q. Do you know the reason, Colonel, for the disciplinary barracks being directly under The Adjutant General's Office and not under the department, as other posts within the department are?—A. I don't know as I can state offhand the reason for that.

"Q. Would you say this, Colonel, that the handling of prisoners "Q. Would you say this, Colonel, that the handling of prisoners who are to serve a year or more require special study; that it was something entirely different from a guardhouse, and therefore required a man who had special training in it and would be in touch with the definite policy that was adopted at Washington?" At this point the prosecution objected; and in the course of his objection used this illuminating and consistent sentence: "I will not raise an objection if you don't insist on that question." But after the defense "had insisted" on the question, strange as it may be, the prosecution withdrew the objection. After the objection had been withdrawn it was reput by having the stenographer read it to the witness. Just as soon as the stenographer rapher read it to the witness. Just as soon as the stenographer had finished reading the question, Colonel Cresson, prosecuting, apparently anxious to have it answered for Hunt's benefit, put in and said, "Answer the question, if you can, Colonel."

The above quotation and comment are for the purpose of showing, just at this point, as can be shown in a great number of places further along in the record, that the prosecution nearly always gave way to what was desired by the defense. Usually when he did not give way the court helped out by overruling the objection.

After the witness had ceased to testify for the defense, Colonel After the witness had ceased to testify for the defense, Colonel Cresson, prosecuting, had the witness to further testify that Colonel Williams, of the Inspector General's Department, had, in May, 1919, a year before the Bergdoll incident, spoken very highly of Colonel Hunt's management of the barracks. The prosecution also had the witness testify that Maj. G. C. Shaw, of the Inspector General's Department, had reported Colonel Hunt's institution to be in excellent condition on May 6, 1920, and that the morale of the officers and enlisted men and prisoners reflected great credit upon Colonel Hunt as commandant of the place. That testimony is to be found on page 28 of the court-martial record.

But, again, the question may be asked: What did the condition of the prison or the morale of the men at any time have to do with the escape of Bergdoll, who did not escape from the

One of the most ridiculous features ever injected into tragedy came when James H. Sparks was testifying. The defense asked whether or not Bergdoll looked like a dangerous man. It is needless to say that the prosecution did not object to having Sparks, a railroad brakeman, venture his scientific opinion along with that already given by the psychiatrist. This witness would render the world a favor if he would only describe a really dangerous man merely by his looks.

ous man merely by his looks.

In addition to the several warnings which had been given relative to Bergdoll being dangerous and liable to escape, Captain Yuill notified the authorities on Governors Island, when Bergdoll was taken there that he was a very wealthy man and that they Yuill notified the authorities on Governors Island, when Bergdoll was taken there, that he was a very wealthy man and that they should not keep him in the ordinary garrison guardhouse, because in all probability he might bribe his way out.

When O'Hare was on the witness stand in Colonel Hunt's courtmartial trial, testifying in response to questions put to him by the prosecution, the prosecution itself endeavored to conceal a material part of the escapade indulged in at Philadelphia, as is material part of the escapade indulged in at Philadelphia, as is shown by the following questions and answers, to be found on page 81 of the court-martial record:

"Q. You got out to Bergdoll's house about what time? Do you remember?—A. I think it was between 11 and 12, the first time.

"Q. In the middle of the day?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And you stayed there until how long—how long did you stay there?—A. Oh, must have stayed there—we had dinner there and stayed there until about 3 ciclost.

stay there?—A. Oh, must have stayed there—we had dinner there and stayed there until about 2 o'clock.

"Q. What did you do this afternoon?—A. Then took a ride around again in the afternoon.

"Q. Now, skip over to the next day. When was the last time you saw Bergdoll, as you remember it?"

One can not but wonder, and continue to wonder, why the prosecution wanted to "skip over" the escapade of that night when Bergdoll was taken to the show by the guard and Sergeant York went into the saloon. Could it be that the prosecution was "whitewashing" Colonel Hunt's guards by concealing those incidents because the "suitableness" of the guard was one of the isof the guard was one of the ison page 90 of the court-martial proceedings it is shown that while O'Hare still was on the witness stand the prosecution itself volunteered an announcement as follows:

volunteered an announcement as follows:

"I think it is proper to appear here that the sergeant is a man that never takes a drink. He has taken no drinks in 19 years."

When O'Hare came to testify before the congressional investigating committee he stated that prior to the Bergdoll affair he did not know Colonel Cresson, who was prosecuting, and that Colonel Cresson did not know him; and that it was impossible for Colonel Cresson to know whether or not he (O'Hare) drank.

Pages 101, 102, and 103 of the record of Hunt's court-martial trial disclose that counsel for Hunt all but abandoned the defense of Hunt, such defense appearing to be unprecessary no doubt be-disclose that counsel for Hunt all but abandoned the defense of Hunt, such defense appearing to be unnecessary, no doubt, because of the attitude taken by the prosecution, and commenced the defense of O'Hare and York, who were to be tried later. Presumably, he was moved by the old saw that "all three of them might hang separately, unless they hung together."

Again, to show that Colonel Cresson, conducting the prosecution, was doing both big and little things to avoid the conviction of Colonel Hunt, the following questions and answers of the courtmartial trial, to be found on page 105 thereof, read as follows:

"Questions by prosecution:

"Q. Sergeant, I believe you testified that it was against your

"Q. Sergeant, I believe you testified that it was against your orders to go to Canada?—A. Yes, sir."

That to which attention is invited is the fact that the witness had not so testified. The testimony of the witness upon the preceding day is to be found on page 97, and reads as follows:

"Q. In other words, if you got to Philadelphia and met Mr. Gibboney and Mr. Gibboney said you were to go to Canada, you would know that was wrong, wouldn't you?—A. Yes.

"Q. And you would have refused to go to Canada?—A. Yes."

It will be seen that the witness did not testify that it was "against his orders" to go to Canada; but, instead, he said he would have used his own judgment and would not have gone to Canada. So there is another instance where the prosecution, by leading the witness, undertook to have it appear that Sergeant O'Hare did have detailed instructions from Colonel Hunt, when the O'Hare did have detailed instructions from Colonel Hunt, when the O'Hare did nave detailed instructions from Colonel Hunt, when the prosecution was based upon the charge that he did not have such instructions from Colonel Hunt.

Frank Paul Keppel, formerly Third Assistant Secretary of War, was introduced as a witness by the defense to prove that the policy of the Secretary of War relative to the management of the disciplinary barracks at which Colonel Hunt was the commandant was in accord with the policy of Colonel Hunt.

The policy of the Secretary of War concerning the mere "management of the institution" had nothing whatever to do with the escape of Bergdoll at Philadelphia.

agement of the institution and nothing whatever to do with the escape of Bergdoll at Philadelphia.

The witness was asked further: "Did you, yourself, make an inspection or two at the institution here?

"A. I did; two inspections. * * *

"Q. On your second inspection did you find a decided change, or otherwise?—A. My impression is conditions were very much better the second time; the appearance of the place was better; the bearing of the prisoners was better, and it was evident the barracks were administered under a very careful supervision, and along a definite policy; I recall that a number of prisoners at that time spent a good part of their time down at the end of the island, not within Fort Williams, but arrangements were made island, not within Fort Williams, but arrangements were made for making themselves useful down at the other end of the island; I don't think that was the case when I was first there."

But what did "the appearance of the place" have to do with the escape of Bergdoll at Philadelphia? Certainly the "appearance of the place" was changed to some extent by Bergdoll's absence. The witness was actually asked: "Do you know what his (the Secretary of War's) opinion was of the conduct of the institution by Colonel Hunt?"

The opinion of the Secretary of War as to the general conduct of a prison did not excuse Colonel Hunt's refusal of handcuffs, for instance. Yet question after question like that was not objected to by the prosecution.

The defense introduced one McClellan, warden of the West-

The defense introduced one McClellan, warden of the Westchester County Penitentiary, for the general purpose of proving that Colonel Hunt's prison policy was approved by him.

The defense asked him this question: "How did the general policies there compare with that of your institution?"

Even if the question had anything whatever to do with the case, it had not been proven that McClellan was properly conducting his prison at Westchester. Colonel Hunt's policies of managing a prison were permitted to be compared with McClellan's policy of running the Westchester prison, without anybody ever having said how well or how badly the Westchester prison was conducted. But, in order to get Mr. McClellan's and Colonel Hunt's idea of operating a prison, the following is quoted from the former's testimony:

"We have never used—I have never used arms with any guard:

We have never used-I have never used arms with any guard; I do not allow any guard to carry arms in the institution. It might be well to tell you, or the court, that our institution is an -no walls, and our men work in the open, a mile from the institution at many times. We do not use arms. * * *

"Q. In what kind of a case, with one prisoner, would you consider handcuffs necessary?—A. Well, I would only consider handcuffs in the same light that I would consider a straightjacket, as a matter of restraint."

McClellan and Hunt might have been suitable wardens at a foundling institution, but certainly at no other place. Moreover, McClellan does not permit the word "guard" to be used in his institution; instead he requires everybody to use the word "of-

In answer to a question this witness, whose testimony seems to have been seriously considered, answered:

"I know very little of Bergdoll.

" Q. "Q. You don't know then whether it was necessary to hand-cuff him and send two armed men or not, do you?—A. I don't think that the man lives that it is necessary to do that to, if he is a normal man, unless he is insane.

"Q. If it became necessary to transfer a man of dangerous and escaping character, then you believe he should be hand-cuffed?—A. I don't think so."

cuffed?—A. I don't think so."

If one will read the latter part of page 189 and page 190, which is a part of the testimony of McClellan given at the courtmartial trial of Colonel Hunt, he will be utterly astounded at the length to which McClellan would go in conducting a prison. He said, in substance, that he saw no reason why he should take the word of a commanding general that a prisoner was desperate; word of a commanding general that a prisoner was desperate, he would not heed warnings, but would rely upon his own opinion and that of a psychiatrist rather than take heed from a warning or obey orders from a superior authority. Except that Hunt entertained those same notions Bergdoll might not have Another witness in Colonel Hunt's behalf was Capt. Edmund Banks Smith, a chaplain. He stated that he was associated with the prison on Governors Island prior to 1915; that he left there in 1915, but frequently went back. That good man, considering Hunt's administration from the "uplift" or "reform" standpoint, said in his testimony:

oint, said in his testimony:

"I noticed a slow and gradual changing of what I might term the atmosphere of the prison, rather intangible to describe, but perfectly easy to feel, that appeared to me to show an improvement in the morale of the men."

It may be said, not in a spirit of reproach, that at the time when the chaplain "felt the atmosphere" that Bergdoll was "rather in-tangible" at Governors Island, where Colonel Hunt presided with tangible at Governors Island, where Colonel Hunt presided with such motherly intuitions. Perhaps if the reverend gentleman had then "felt the atmosphere" in Germany he would have found it of the breathings of defiance and scorn coming from Bergdoll for the American flag.

Bergdoll escaped on May 21, 1920. Colonel Hunt's court-martial proceedings commenced July 21 thereafter. During the two months which intervened between the time when Bergdoll escaped and the beginning of Hunt's court-martial trial, Hunt was promoted from major to lieutenant colonel. Then, while the trial was going on, announcement actually was made to the court while in session that Lieutenant Colonel Hunt had again been promoted, this time to the rank of colonel.

Notice: During the two months immediately following the escape of Bergdoll he was promoted twice.

In the midst of the trial, while Capt. Samuel B. Shackford, a witness for the defense, was testifying, the attorney for the prosecution arose and said to the court:

"To save time, I don't think anywhere in the specification it charges that these sergeants were not competent. I don't think negligence was charged in that way, unless the guard was insufficiently instructed by Hunt. I think testimony along that line might be dispensed with. I am not going to object to it, however, but I want to call your attention to the fact that it is not charged that either of these sergeants were improper men, or not good sergeants."

sergeants."

That was a monstrous assertion for the prosecution to make, inasmuch as one of the specifications charged Colonel Hunt with having permitted "Bergdoll to leave said barracks on the date aforesaid not properly and suitably guarded." If they were incompetent, or drinkers, or negligent, they were not "suitable."

The very one whose duty it was to show that the guards were not "suitable" voluntarily stated, in substance, in the above-quoted language, that it was not charged that either of the sergeants "were" "improper men or not good sergeants." Colonel Hunt was directed to provide a "suitable guard," and in the charge it is plainly specified that he did "neglect his duty in that behalf." The prosecution now is helping out the defense by saying, by reasonable inference, that "improper men" as guards make a "suitable." able" guard.

The witness testified that Sergeant York "is trustworthy-de-

The witness testified that Sergeant York "is trustworthy—depend on him absolutely." What a wonderful statement that is in view of all the facts brought out against him.

Amos T. Baker, one of the psychiatrists who regarded Bergdoll as so beautifully innocent and harmless, notwithstanding the many warnings as to his dangerous character, really testified that handcuffing "would be humiliating to the prisoner and might suggest to him the possibility of escape." Evidently he was proceeding upon the theory that it had never entered Bergdoll's head to escape. As the handcuffs were not used, and as Bergdoll escaped, it must be that the absence rather than the presence of handcuffs suggested the escape. No matter what the consequence had been, the witness could not abandon his theory. He. quence had been, the witness could not abandon his theory. He, with Hunt's approval, wrote a pamphlet concerning the control and guidance of prisoners.

This witness further testified as follows:

"I do recall Major Hunt not wishing to humiliate the prisoner by attracting attention to him by sending a superfluous guard or unduly securing him."

Perhaps if Bergdoll had not been so rich, he would not have been so easily humiliated; nor would three men—two sergeants and a commissioned officer—have been deemed a "superfluous guard," nor would the use of handcuffs been considered "unduly securing him."

In one of Hunt's many defiances of authority and advice, he aid, "I don't think the War Department is particularly expert in arriving at any decision."

It also appears that Colonel Hunt was not at all averse to being put in charge of the prison at Fort Leavenworth, where Bergdoll would have been sent if he had not escaped. One Grafton B. Perkins, an advertising agent, had in charge this prospective promotion for Colonel Hunt.

Perkins, an advertising agent, had in charge this prospective promotion for Colonel Hunt.

While this committee was conducting its hearings, it appeared in some of the western newspapers that one of the committee had expressed the opinion that Hunt had been "whitewashed" at his court-martial trial. Colonel Cresson, who conducted the so-called prosecution of Colonel Hunt, telegraphed and asked that the record of the court-martial trial of Hunt be considered by the committee and that his prosecuting speech also be considered by the committee. He was replied to by wire that both had already been made a part of the record and were considered by the committee. Particularly did he ask that his speech be read to the committee. That request was complied with. Whatever of criticism of Colonel Cresson there is in this report has been gotten entirely from that record, his speech included.

On page 30 of that record Colonel Cresson, prosecuting, said in his concluding speech:

"As I stated in the opening of this case, I want to state again that the prosecution does not for a minute think, nor does it intimate, nor does it care to have anyone think of intimating that Colonel Hunt in any way wanted Bergdoll to escape, that he colluded in the matter or was in any way in any conspiracy."

In another part of his speech he said:

"Of course, the court realizes, as everyone does, that it is not a pleasant duty that devolves on the prosecution in any case, civil or criminal, to come before the court and ask that a brother officer be punished or be admonished or be held guilty of neglect of duty."

In that speech Colonel Cresson also said:

In that speech Colonel Cresson also said:

"Colonel Hunt has a fine record as a prison officer and the Government is not denying that."

In another part of his speech Colonel Cresson said:

"I have sympathy for Colonel Hunt. He has a fine record, has been retired as a colonel. Colonel Hunt has indeed made a magnificent record as an officer, and as to the care of some prisoners * * * I am glad to be able to say that no one can throw any suspicion of crookedness on the part of Colonel Hunt in this matter."

Several times in this report Colonel Hunt's defiance of the directions of superior officers has been mentioned. It is not desired that this report be closed without having it clearly and distinctly understood that his attitude of "defiance" of orders was feigned, at least in material part, in order to fulfill the understanding arrived at between himself and some of those who saw him at Governors Island a very, very short time before the Thursday when he sent Bergdoll away from the island without handcuffs, without a commissioned officer, without the presence of one of the counsel, without a "properly instructed guard," and without a "suitable" guard. It matters not whether he were really stubbornly defiant of orders or corruptly so, he is guilty, the latter offense being more heinous, only.

Just here it should be emphasized again that the prosecuting Several times in this report Colonel Hunt's defiance of the

Just here it should be emphasized again that the prosecuting judge advocate, Colonel Cresson, declared in the court-martial trial that he would not prove that Colonel Hunt corruptly refused the handcuffs, or corruptly failed to send a commissioned officer with the expedition, or corruptly failed to have one of the counsel accompany it, or corruptly failed to properly instruct the guard, or corruptly failed to provide a sufficient guard, even if he could do so.

could do so.

Colonel Cresson's contention during the trial was that Hunt was guilty—but only of a technical offense—if he, without taking a bribe, disobeyed orders; but that if he disobeyed orders because he was bribed so to do, then he was not guilty.

Prisoners in making escapes use different instruments. Some use crowbars, some files, some saws, and some false keys. The instrument used by Bergdoll in making his escape was money. Crowbars, saws, and files make noise. There is an old, old saying that "money talks," but in illegitimate transactions like this its talking is done in whispers; and, therefore, difficult of proof.

No one can be so dense as not to know that Bergdoll could not have been detained at Governors Island for the unusual length of time that he was detained, instead of being sent directly to have been detained at Governors Island for the unusual length of time that he was detained, instead of being sent directly to Leavenworth, without the use of money. Neither can any impartial mind fail to see that his expedition to recover the alleged hidden gold was procured by the use of money. It is fair to assume that every discrimination made in his favor, and that every step taken by him leading to his escape, was the direct result of his immense fortune. If he had not been a millionaire, immediately following his conviction he would have gone with other prisoners to Leavenworth, where the doors would have been securely closed behind him, unless Colonel Hunt had been suc-securely closed behind him, unless Colonel Hunt had been successful in his effort to be transferred there.

Because a thing is accomplished by employing a licensed attorney to do it does not necessarily put the act beyond merited condemnation. Money was spent lavishly by Bergdoll for the purpose of ingratiating himself, not only with the prison authorities but with his fellow inmates in the prison at Governors Island. There are many instances where money was used, apparently for legitimate purposes, but surely with the ulterior design of escape. His prolonged stay at Governors Island cost him at least six or seven thousand dollars, and it must be remembered in this connection that it was at General Ansell's request that Bergdoll was permitted to remain there. mitted to remain there.

The broad, well-defined trail leading to the escape did not become unmistakably evident until General Ansell induced General Harris to authorize the expedition to search for the gold. eral Harris to authorize the expedition to search for the gold. There can be no doubt about General Ansell's ability and learning, but it is certain that he did not get into the case because of that ability and learning alone. His influence with the Army officers with whom, but recently theretofore, he had been so long associated, must have been considered. The large fee contemplated by him evidently was based not only upon what he might accomplish through legal channels but, in addition, by exercised Influence.

The many fees to be gotten from others, and the big one to be paid by Bergdoll, lured him into questionable paths. No one knew better than General Ansell that his course was, at least, doubtful. His own conscience seemed to have reprimanded him, even before this investigation commenced. This is evidenced by the fact that while upon the witness stand, when it was taken for granted by those of the committee that his thoughts had not yet turned to his being a possible "pardon broker," he admitted, by citations to the law in various jurisdictions, that already he was mindful of that feature of the case. Then, when it was undertaken to ascertain to what limit he would not go for a fee, he cited instances in justification of himself where other attorneys had defended notoriously infamous characters. That manner of defense of himself did not first or suddenly come to him while upon the witness influence. did not first or suddenly come to him while upon the witness stand. This conclusion is based upon the fact that when he, but recently a general in our Army, was confronted with what he had done, he drew from his pocket a written statement prepared in advance, citing cases, both American and English, to justify his advance, citing cases, both American and English, to justify his defense of Bergdoll, our country's enemy.

While there are many who participated in the conspiracy leading to Bergdoll's escape and the acquittal of those who brought it about, there are three who are infinitely more culpable than the rest. Those three are General Ansell, Colonel Hunt, and Col. C. C. Cresson. But thus far no punishment has been imposed upon anybody that could not be discharged by the Bergdoll millions, and counted a mere trifle.

General Ansell is now out of the Army. He is beyond the turisanybody that could not be discharged by the Bergdon millions, and counted a mere trifle.

General Ansell is now out of the Army. He is beyond the jurisdiction of court-martial proceedings, but provision should be made against his future practice before any of the departments, before any court-martial, or in the courts of the District of Columbia or the Nation above whose safety and integrity he has placed gold.

Colonel Hunt, within the next two months after he had participated so criminally in the escape of Bergdoll, was promoted from major to colonel and immediately retired on the pay of $3,600 a year. It becomes a serious question who is to pay this life-long reward for his perfidy. Those whose backs already are burdened with the most onerous tax ever imposed must contribute; and, in addition, more than 4,000,000 of our soldier boys must, throughout Colonel Hunt's remaining years, contribute to this munificent retirement fund in recognition only of his instrumentality in this national tragedy. An outraged Nation has the right to demand that Colonel Hunt's annuity be discontinued.

The conduct of Mr. Earl B. Wood should not go unnoticed.

On April 30, 1920, John J. O'Connor, a special agent of the Government in the Secret Service, who had been sent to Philadelphia to look after the Bergdoll case, addressed a letter to Frank Burk, assistant director and chief of investigation, Washington, D. C.

D. C.

That letter reads as follows:

"Dear Str: On the evening of April 27, Lieut. George C. McDonald, who has been and is cooperating with me in the Bergdoll cases, obtained information through one Jacob Strohm, an uncle by marriage of the Bergdoll boys, that Grover C. Bergdoll is to gain his release within a period of two weeks.

"The information, in substance, is that a Colonel Ansell, a Washington attorney who has been retained by the Bergdoll family to attack the verdict of the court-martial, has guaranteed to bring about the release of Grover C. Bergdoll for a consideration of $10,000. In an effort to gain his freedom, counsel for Bergdoll is expected to apply for the release on bond of Grover C. Bergdoll pending the decision of the court in reapplication for a writ of habeas corpus, which will give Bergdoll sufficient time to depart from the United States.

"If this can be brought about, it will be a repetition of an

"If this can be brought about, it will be a repetition of an application which was made before Judge Hand in the southern district of New York, and at the time of the application counsel requested that the prisoner be turned over to the custody of the United States marshal pending decision. Judge Hand refused the request and ordered Bergdoll returned to the custody of the military authorities.

"If there is some way to prevent Bergdoll's being released, pending the decision of the court before which the application will be made, we will have prevented Grover Bergdoll's escape, together with protecting Colonel Ansell, whom I believe to be misled, from having to explain the treacheries of his client and of his confederates.

"Very respectfully,

" JOHN J. O'CONNOR, Special Agent."

When that letter reached the department it went to Mr. Wood, he having charge of all correspondence relating to the Bergdoll

When Mr. Wood received the letter, he should have immediately brought it to the attention of the War Department, which then had charge of Bergdoll, for the purpose of having double precautions thrown around him.

It seem that every happening—whether of act or omission—resulted to Bergdoll's benefit, and not one to his real detriment.

All this could not have been accident. Somebody, carrying con-

All this could not have been accident. Somebody, carrying convincing persuasives in great bundles, must have preceded every doing in the case, to see that nothing was left to chance.

The opinion is freely ventured that if O'Connor had written the above letter of warning about any military prisoner other than Bergdoll, the millionaire draft dodger, that that letter or its contents would have been sent at once to the War Department.

In the concealment of this most important letter, Mr. Wood finds himself with no consolation. There is no one with whom he can even divide responsibility for the offense. Confronted, as he was, when on the witness stand, by that predicament, he did not attempt to do so, as the following questions and answers show: was, when on the witness stand, by that predicament, he did not attempt to do so, as the following questions and answers show:

Believing that no man of Mr. Wood's most extraordinary makeup should continue in the public service, his dismissal is most earnestly recommended. More, it is recommended that he be forever disqualified from holding any appointive position whatsoever with the Government of the United States.

It has been said that there is perhaps no crime, an exact definition of which is more difficult to give than the offense of conspiracy. It has been defined to be a combination of two or more persons, by some concerted action, to accomplish some criminal or unlawful purpose, or to accomplish some purpose not in itself criminal or unlawful by criminal or unlawful means.

It is not necessary to constitute a conspiracy that two or more

It is not necessary to constitute a conspiracy that two or more persons should meet together and enter into an explicit or formal agreement for an unlawful scheme, or that they should directly, by words or in writing, state what the unlawful scheme is to be, and the details of the plan, or means by which the unlawful combina-tion is to be made effective. When two or more persons pursue by their acts the same object, often by the same means, one performing one part of the act and the other another part of the act, so as to complete it, with a view to the attaining of the object which they were pursuing, this will be sufficient to constitute a conspiracy. Concurrence of sentiment and cooperative conduct in an unlawful and criminal enterprise, and not formality of speech are the essential ingredients of a criminal conspiracy. Previous acquaintance is unnecessary, and it is not essential that each conspirator should know the exact part to be performed by the other conspirator in execution of the conspiracy. Moreover, all the conspirators need not enter into the agreement at the same time. When a new party with knowledge of the facts concurs in the plans of the original conspirators, and comes in to aid in the execution of them, he is from that moment a conspirator.

The conspiracy may, of course, be shown by direct evidence, but direct evidence is not indispensible. Circumstantial evidence is competent to prove conspiracy from the very nature of the case. Generally speaking, the crime must be proven by acts of the party himself and of any other with whom it is attempted to connect him.

The evidence in a conspiracy is wider than perhaps in any other case. Taken by themselves, the acts of a conspiracy are rarely of an unequivocally guilty character, and they can only be properly estimated when connected with all the surrounding circumstances. The process is, after all, an inference from one fact to the existence of another.

The crime of conspiracy very, very frequently involves the use of money as a means to its successful accomplishment and, in such cases, as a general rule it is not necessary that direct evidence be adduced of the payment and receipt of the consideration. It becomes a matter of inference from one fact to the existence of another. That is this case.

existence of another. That is this case.

It must be conceded that the motives which prompted Mrs. Bergdoll, the mother, and "Judge" Romig, the foster father, to take part in the conspiracy were not the motives that actuated either Gibboney, Ansell, Bailey, or Hunt. These latter had no affection for Grover Bergdoll, nor can it be said that his plight aroused their humanitarian impulses. What then incited their activities? There was, of course, the Bergdoll fortune ever present.

There are many, many offenses which are, indeed, most difficult of actual proof. There are a few impossible of proof except by circumstances and by reasoning from cause to effect.

The eye of man is far more easily deceived than is his mature reasoning and calm judgment. Money may pass from hand to hand in an instant, and at some obscure place and not be seen. While the passing of it may be proven beyond doubt, the consideration for which it did pass may be disputed. On the other hand, the full performance of the service to be rendered may be fully established, still the passing of the money in payment for the service may be proven only by appeal from the eye to the mental consideration of a chain of established facts. Again, that is this case. is this case.

However, no witness, willing to tell the whole truth, has seen the money actually pass. But everybody who heard or has read the testimony should be able to see an "effect" which could have been produced by no "cause" except money. In reasoning from cause to effect, we see the Bergdoll millions "the cause," standing out like Piecs Peak against the horizon of a rising sun. As the rays of light advance upon each succeeding scene in this uphely rays of light advance upon each succeeding scene in this unholy affair, there is disclosed to the reasoning mind one hideous thing after another, pictured with the accuracy of the camera, until "the effect," the escape, stands out as clearly as the Egyptian Pyramids against another horizon.

At first only long and meagerly defined shadows, reaching from the "cause," were cast across the Nation's integrity; but as the rays of discernment and analysis rose higher and higher, the shadows shortened and shortened until a black spot stands, and will forever stand, exposed to the light of reason, although none but the guilty may have seen the corrupting influence pass from

But with the advent into the case of him who, by his partner, has been modestly declared to be "the highest authority in this country on military law," we find sorcererlike deception practiced upon the trusting. Next, we see a palsied old man, overflowing with that generate spirit of acquiescence and lack of resistance with that generous spirit of acquiescence and lack of resistance that always accompanies those who grow old beautifully, placed and replaced, in artistlike fashion, wherever his name could best be commercialized.

Then we find the activities transferred from Washington, which

Then we find the activities transferred from Washington, which for the then present must be obscured, to Governors Island. This transfer from Washington to Governors Island was so absolute that even an official letter of warning, sent from Philadelphia to Washington, forecasting Bergdoll's escape within two weeks, was hidden away in a pigeonhole, never to find its way to Bergdoll's prison that he might be properly guarded.

Then we find Bergdoll put into the same cell with a prisoner who is permitted to make almost daily visits to New York, bearing on one occasion, if not on others, a written message to a well-known leader in America against constituted government. Also we find a large sum of money placed at the prison, obviously that Bergdoll might purchase the good will and, perhaps, the silence of guards, or the assistance of fellow prisoners.

Next, we see the commandant of the prison turn deaf, dumb, and blind to every direction that might hinder Bergdoll's escape. We see handcuffs denied, and every other official instruction violated. The pighted faith of counsel absconds before the prisoner does, that his going may be the easier. Finally, and as a fitting sequel to this sordid tale, we find that the derelict commandant at Governors Island was prosecuted by one whose shame should be measured only by his days. Following the dispars presence. at Governors Island was prosecuted by one whose shame should be measured only by his days. Following the flimsy pretense only a pretense-at prosecution, the commandant's fate to a court composed of military officers who found him "not guilty" in the face of his own admissions that he had not comolied with instructions for the violation of which he was then being tried.

Bergdoll escaped through the misdoing of somebody other than the Bergdoll family and their immediate, personal associates such as Romig, Stecker, Gibboney, and Mrs. Bergdoll. It is hoped that this report bares to the Congress the others who are more guilty than even the Bergdoll family. Shall they go unwhipped of

The mother, the brother, the foster father—only those who gave shelter and comfort out of love for the black sheep of the family—have been convicted. Shall those who, for money, conceived, connived at, and executed the escape continue to practice in our Nation's courts, to wear the uniform of an officer of our Army, or to collect an annuity from a wronged people?

The foregoing part of this report was written shortly after May 24, 1921, when it was thought by every member of the committee that the hearings had been concluded. However, about two months after that date the chairman reconvened the committee for additional hearings. These last-mentioned hearings were occasioned by the receipt of a communication sent by a special agent of the Department of Justice, located at Philadelphia, to the Department of Justice at Washington. That communication was forwarded to Mr. Peters, the chairman of this committee, under date of June 22, 1921. The foregoing part of this report was written shortly after May 24.

The communication of the special agent at Philadelphia was The communication of the special agent at Philadelphia was written for the purpose of reporting that he had intercepted a letter written by Grover C. Bergdoll in Germany to his mother, Mrs. Emma C. Bergdoll, at Philadelphia. The communication states, among other things, that the letter ridiculed the seizure of the writer's property by the United States, and that the United States had started something that they could not finish; also that three neutral nations had offered him citizenship. Those statements, and a number of others, are not in quotation marks, but are represented to be a part of the substance of the letter.

That report—a rather lengthy one—embraces in quotation marks the following:

"We made the Americans look like a bunch of boobs before the whole world. They are all laughing at them. * * * You certainly did tell it to the investigators down at Washington, and you deserve credit. Why did you not tell them of the $5,000 which we gave Campbell up at Governors Island? If you did not, I would advise you to make it public, so that the grafters will be all exposed. would advise you to make it public, so that the grafters will be all exposed. We are writing a book which gives away the whole swindle from beginning to end, and the American public will wake up when they read it in the near future."

In the report the special agent says the word "decipiatur" was used in the letter, which, as near as he can determine, is a Latin word meaning "a joker."

Two or three weeks after the reception of that communication by the chairman of this committee, he sent counsel for the committee to Philadelphia to confer with Mrs. Bergdoll relative to that part of Grover C. Bergdoll's letter suggesting that she tell the committee, if she had not already done so, that they had given Maj. Bruce R. Campbell $5,000.

The chairman of the committee also caused an examination to be made of the account of Bruce R. Campbell and his wife, Laura A. Campbell, at the bank in New York with which they did business. From that examination it was learned that Campbell had purchased an automobile, paying $1,500 therefor, and that also he had deposited with Wasserman & Bro., stock and bond brokers in New York, two sums of money amounting to $6,500. The automobile was purchased by Campbell and the deposits made with Wasserman & Bro. shortly after it was alleged that he had received $5,000 from the Bergdolls.

Upon that information another hearing was had, commencing line 10. In the bearing was had, commencing made with Wasserman & Bro. shortly after it was alleged that he had received $5,000 from the Bergdolls.

Upon that information another hearing was had, commencing June 19. In that hearing Mrs. Bergdoll was the first witness. She testified, in substance, that upon one occasion, shortly after the arrest of her son on January 7, she was at Governors Island, and that she and her son had a talk with Campbell, and that he said that if they would place $100,000 in his hands it could be used with those higher up at Washington and New York to his advantage. Mrs. Bergdoll says that she replied to that proposition by telling him to "go to hell." Then she said that her son Grover put his finger across his lips, indicating to her to be quiet. Continuing her story, she stated that thereafter her son Grover asked her to bring to him at the prison $5,000, and that in a few days after this request she went back to the prison taking $5,000 with her, which she delivered to her son. She was most emphatic in saying that she did not know what her son was going to do with the money, and that she never found out afterwards what he did do with it.

She also testified that during the latter part of January or the early part of February, 1920, she was not certain which, while on the boat between Governors Island and New York, Campbell said to her that he had given the money to the proper person, whose name he called, but the name was not remembered by whose name he called, but the name was not remembered by Whose name he caned, but the hame was not remembered by Mrs. Bergdoll.

When Mrs. Bergdoll first testified before the committee, which was about two months before her last testimony was given, she stated in just as positive a way that she had never given Campbell any money other than $50 with which he was asked to purchase cravats and knickknacks for her son Grover while in prison.

Major Campbell, in testifying relative to that feature, said that Mrs. Bergdoll or somebody closely associated with the family—he was not certain which—gave him a small amount of money, something like $10 or $12, with which to make similar purchases for the prisoner. He says that he left that sum of money with a near-by store, so that Grover C. Bergdoll could get knickknacks with it

It will be seen that Mrs. Bergdoll testified under oath in her first testimony that she gave Campbell $50 and no more. It is equally important to note that in her last testimony, when an effort was being made to incriminate Major Campbell, she rigidly effort was being made to incriminate Major Campbell, she rigidly adhered to that story. The press of the country carried the unqualified statement that Mrs. Bergdoll, when last testifying, stated that she gave Campbell the $5,000; when, as a matter of fact, she stated in no uncertain way that she did not give him the $5,000, or any sum except the $50, and no testimony whatsoever was produced to show that Campbell got any money except the small amount admitted by him and Mrs. Bergdoll, unless it be proven by his alleged admission to Mrs. Bergdoll while on the location of the proven that occasion admitted beying received. boat. If Campbell, upon that occasion, admitted having received any money and having turned it over to another, there is no testimony whatsoever showing that he referred to the $5,000 and not to the smaller sum which has been mentioned.

The reflection upon Major Campbell was made, not by Mrs. Bergdoll, but merely by the question put to her by her absconding son in the intercepted letter.

An effort was made to complement the suggestion made.

Bergdoll, but merely by the question put to her by her absconding son in the intercepted letter.

An effort was made to corroborate the suggestion made by Grover C. Bergdoll, by showing that the bank account of Campbell and his wife was a very small one, indeed; so small as to forbid the possibility of his having $6,500 to deposit with Wasserman & Bro. in a "bucket-shop" transaction. That account with Wasserman & Bro. was in the name of Campbell and his wife.

A young man in the Intelligence Bureau was sent from Washington to New York to examine the bank account of Campbell and his wife. The proper way to have secured testimony relative to that account was to have had some officer of the bank testify from the book entries. In the absence of that manner of establishing the bank account, the next best method was to produce a copy of that account. However, neither of those things was done. Instead, the young man who went from Washington to New York returned, appeared before the committee; and, without the original entries, or without a copy of them, or without a single note or memorandum, testified that he had examined the account and that the largest entry in it was $252.50, Campbell's salary, which was deposited monthly; and that all the checks on that account were small; and that his monthly balances ranged between $7 and $60. Notwithstanding that testimony, the fact was afterwards established from the bank itself, that during the very latter part of December immediately preceding the deposit with Wasserman & Bro. There was a deposit to that account of $5,037.

The next piece of attempted corroborative evidence against Campbell was the production of the books of Wasserman & Bro. That account showed that on the 10th day of February, 1920, Campbell deposited with that firm, to the credit of himself and wife, for speculative purposes, $4,500, and that within a few days thereafter he deposited the additional sum of $2,000 for the same purpose.

It should be noticed that our fugitive in Germany had charged purpose.

It should be noticed that our fugitive in Germany had charged by innuendo in the letter to his mother that they, meaning himself and mother, had given Campbell $5,000. The assumption was that the $5,000 of Bergdoll money had been used in the Wasserman & Bro. transaction, because Campbell was supposed not to have had other available money.

It must be borne in mind that Campbell did not deposit $5,000 with these ways and the second supposed to the best second supposed to the second supposed supposed to the second supposed supposed

It must be borne in mind that Campbell did not deposit $5,000 with Wasserman, but that he did deposit $6,500 with them. If he got $5,000 of it from the Bergdolls, the question very appropriately may arise: Where did he get the $1,500 in excess of the $5,000? The answer consistently can be given that he got the $5,000 where he got the $1,500, and Grover Bergdoll does not make pretense that he got more than $5,000, while Mrs. Bergdoll says he got only $50, and he admits that he got something like only $10 or $12.

How very strange it is that the young man who went from Washington to New York to examine the bank account should testify that he had gone through the bank's books, in so far as they related to Campbell and his wife, and found no deposit bigger than $252.50 when, according to the report made by the bank itself, the deposit of $5,037 must have been staring him in the face.

the face

Another remarkable feature in this most extraordinary case is that the special agent of the Department of Justice, located at Philadelphia, did not transmit a copy of the letter instead of his construction of it. It seems reasonable that his very first act should have been to make a copy of the letter; better still, a photostat copy.

Major Campbell was the attorney designated by the War Department to defend Grover C. Bergdoll at his court-martial trial. The intercepted letter refers to others as having gotten dishonest money, but Major Campbell is the only one in that class whose name has been given to the committee by the special agent at Philadelphia.

Philadelphia.

Again, it may be asked, since Campbell's bank account was not correctly testified to, is it not equally possible that some name other than Campbell's may have been mentioned in the intercepted letter, while Campbell's name, as already stated, was the only one forwarded to the committee?

Major Campbell testified that he never had any conversation with either Mrs. Bergdoll or her son Grover, or with anybody else, concerning the payment to him of any money other than the small amount heretofore mentioned, and for the purposes indicated. Certainly no one in the whole United States will claim that he is less worthy of credit than any of the Bergdolls, especially that one in Germany, who makes the charge against him.

Campbell's father, now past three score years and ten, testified in an open, manly way, which carried conviction with his manner, and told how, within his own knowledge, his son had gotten $6,000 in a "friendly gambling transaction."

Major Campbell also testified that he and his wife, not a very Major Campbell also testified that he and his wife, not a very great while before the Wasserman transaction, had as much ready money as $24,000. Those statements have not been contradicted. If Campbell's integrity is to be reflected upon in any report that may be made, proof of the charge is challenged. There is not a scintilla of proof against him, except the mere suggestion made by Grover C. Bergdoll in the intercepted letter. The bank account and the Wasserman transaction, which were expected to corroborate the charge preferred by young Bergdoll, have been completely explained away. If there be any who still insist that Campbell got any of the Bergdoll money, let it be said to them that the only testimony given in support was the statement made by Grover Bergdoll to his mother, which, through the special agent, was repeated to this committee.

Those who heard or have read the rambling statements made by was repeated to this committee.

Those who heard or have read the rambling statements made by Major Campbell when he testified should know that during a part of the hearings he was in the Walter Reed Hospital as a patient; that while in France during the war he was twice gassed; that he was at a military camp in the State of Arkansas when summoned to come to Washington and appear before the committee; that upon his way here he was confronted, while on the train, by copies of various newspapers stating that Mrs. Bergdoll had appeared before the committee and testified positively that she had paid him $5,000 to be used for illegitimate purposes; and that upon his arrival here he was neither in physical nor mental condition to tell a concise, connected, and lucid story in explanation of the charge. However, in his disconnected and rambling testimony there was no material statement made by him that did not turn out, from other testimony and evidence, to be true.

Those who would criticize Major Campbell are asked only to turn to the testimony given by his old father, and the manner of its giving, and then compare it with the testimony given by any of the Bergdoll's or by any of their hangers-on. The one is open, frank, and superlatively candid; that of the others, to mildly express it, is exactly the opposite.

The charges against Major Campbell were made in a most indirect manner by Grover Bergdoll. Bergdoll was not under oath nor subject to cross-examination; and his mother, who was expected to corroborate him, not only failed to do so, but actually contradicted him. Major Campbell assumed the burden of proof and clearly disproved the charges. He is, therefore, exonerated.

In that part of this report which deals with those whose names became involved in this affair, by the testimony which seemed to have closed on May 24, the testimony of no Bergdoll has been

In that part of this report which deals with those whose names became involved in this affair, by the testimony which seemed to have closed on May 24, the testimony of no Bergdoll has been necessary for the conclusions reached. Every adverse criticism of anyone in that part of this report is founded almost entirely upon the acts and omissions of him who is criticized. However, in this, the latter part of this report—that which relates to the Campbell affair—Bergdoll testimony, of necessity, can not be avoided, and that fact is the apology for treating their testimony with any degree of seriousness.

In conclusion it is deemed proper to commend Thomas W. Miller, the Alien Property Custodian, for the seizure of the Bergdoll property. It is hoped that he will exercise what seems to be his legal right to compel Mrs. Bergdoll to produce the gold which she claims to have buried on the farm near Philadelphia.

The foregoing is respectfully submitted to the House of Representatives for its consideration and appropriate action.

Mr. Ansell. Say that the receipts were $15,195. How much of that was surplus? You say very little?

Mr. Weiss. Maybe $50, $60, or $70.

Mr. Ansell. May I ask you what salary you receive as manager of the Roosevelt Hotel?

Mr. Weiss. That is a very hard question to determine. And I do not think that has anything at all to do with this, and I do not care to tell you.

Mr. Ansell. Do you decline to tell me?
Mr. Weiss. Yes, sir.
Mr. Ansell. On what ground?
Mr. Weiss. Just because I do not want to.
Senator Long. I want to ask the witness to go on and tell him.
Tell him what you get, Mr. Weiss.

(Page 596)

Mr. Weiss. It is a very hard thing to determine my salary. I get my rooms, my food, my garage, and my pressing.
Mr. Ansell. In money?
Mr. Weiss. $10,000.

Mr. Ansell. Is your salary paid in check or in cash? Mr. Weiss. In checks.

Mr. ANSELL. Do you deposit your salary in the bank? Mr. Weiss. I do not.

Mr. Ansell. You keep it in cash? Mr. Weiss. Yes, sir; part of it. Mr. Ansell. Do you receive any salary from any sources other

Mr. Massell. By you receive any salary from any sources other than that from the hotel?

Mr. Weiss. None at all, sir.

Mr. Ansell. Aside from your salary in connection with the hotel, do you have any other source of income?

Mr. Weiss. None at all, sir.

Mr. Weiss. None at all, sir.

Mr. Ansell. Do you have any bank account, Mr. Weiss.

Mr. Weiss. A very small bank account; yes, sir.

Mr. Ansell. Did you have any bank account or did you make any deposit to your own account in the year 1930?

Mr. Weiss. Yes, sir.

Mr. Ansell. May I ask what bank?

Senator Long. That is 1930?

Mr. Ansell. Yes, sir.

Senator Long. That is two years before this election.

(Page 597)

Mr. Ansell. May I ask what bank, sir?
Senator Long. Very likely I will instruct the witness not to answer much more of this if you proceed.

Mr. Weiss. I think I had an account with almost every bank in town; a small account.

Mr. Ansell. In 1931?
Mr. Weiss. About the same.

Mr. ANSELL. And in 1932? Mr. WEISS. About the same.

Mr. Ansell. Could you mention any particular bank in which you had an account in 1932?

Mr. Weiss. The American Bank.

Mr. Ansell. Any other bank?
Mr. Weiss. I may have had; I do not remember.
Mr. Ansell. Have you any idea how much money you had in the bank in August and September in the American Bank—August and September, 1932?

Mr. Weiss. I have not the slightest idea.

Mr. Ansell. None whatever? Mr. Weiss. No.

Mr. Ansell. When did you cease having an account in the bank in town?

Mr. Weiss, I have not ceased. I still have all the accounts I ever had.

Mr. ANSELL. You still have them?

(Page 598)

Mr. WEISS. Yes, sir.

Mr. ANSELL Outside of what we may term salary, have you received any commission or commissions of any kind?

Mr. Weiss. I have not, sir.

Mr. Ansell. These political contributions that you received, Mr. Weiss, did I understand you to say that you had not deposited them in a bank?

Mr. WEISS. I did not say anything. I will tell you that I did

Mr. Ansell. You did not? Mr. Weiss. I did not say anything. That is your idea of it, but I will agree to it.

Mr. Ansell. Answer my question.
Mr. Weiss. I will answer you.
Mr. Ansell. You did not?
Mr. Weiss. No, sir.
Mr. Ansell. Why not?

Mr. Weiss. Because I did not want to. Mr. Ansell. Why did you not want to? Mr. Weiss. That is my own business.

Mr. Ansell. It might be somebody else's.
Senator Long. What was the the question?
Mr. Weiss. He wanted to know whether I deposited any funds in banks and why?

Senator Long. Don't answer that question on my instructions.

(Page 599)

Mr. Ansell. On what ground?

Senator Long. Because I said not to do so.
Mr. Ansell. Is that sufficient?
Senator Long. That is plenty. Kingfish of the lodge. I do not think any member of the committee will ask him to answer that question.

The CHAIRMAN. Do I understand that you hold this committee has not the right to go into the question of bank deposits?

Senator Long. I object to his answering it. If this committee tries to go into the bank situation in New Orleans I will tell him not to answer it. I have had plenty of trouble and I will not let this outfit cause any more on banks. If that is what you want to know I will tell you that is an irrelevant question, and I do not think this committee ought to be trying to cause any more trouble. any more trouble.

The Charman. Let me suggest to the witness advice not to testify by anyone does not protect you from the results for refusal

Mr. Weiss. Will not protect me, you say?
The Chairman. No: will not protect you.

Mr. Weiss. I had no intention to answer, whether counsel advised me or not. I would not answer.

The Chairman. You mean to say you will not answer anything in reference to your bank account?

Mr. Weiss. No. sir. I have answered just as much as I intend to answer on it.

(Page 600)

Mr. ANSELL. May I have the last question I asked read, Mr. Reporter?

(Page 601)

Senator Long. I will withdraw my objection. The question had reference to political contributions.

Mr. Ansell. I wish to say to the Chair that the question had to do with his depositing political contributions in the bank; that the witness himself declined to answer, and stated that he did not intend to answer; and that his counsel advises he also need not answer.

Senator Long. I will advise him to answer on political contributions.

Mr. WEISS. I answered by telling him I did not. Why I did not deposit them, that is my business.

Mr. Ansell. I will again ask you why did you not deposit the contributions referred to in a bank?

(Page 602)

Mr. Weiss. Because I did not want to. Mr. Ansell. I ask you why you did not want to? Mr. Weiss. That is none of your business.

Mr. Ansell. None of my business? Mr. Weiss. That is right.

Mr. Ansell. None of my business?
Mr. Weiss. That is right.
Mr. Ansell. The witness declines to answer.
The Chairman. The committee will take under consideration and act subsequently upon the refusal of the witness to testify.
Senator Long. The Chair does not rule he has to answer, does he? The Chair has not ruled he has to answer?
The Chairman. I think it is a perfectly proper question.
Mr. Ansell. I ask that the Chair make a formal ruling that the witness should answer the question.
Mr. Weiss. If you will permit me, sir, I do not mind telling you two gentlemen why I won't answer, but I have no intention of answering out loud. I think you will find I am fully justified. I will be delighted to tell you.
Mr. Ansell. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this is a public hearing.
Senator Long. It will be your last appearance in public.
Mr. Ansell. You will see.
Senator Long. You bet I'll see.
The Chairman. We will take a recess for five minutes.
(At this point a recess was taken, after which proceedings were resumed as follows:)

(Page 603)

The Chairman. The committee will come to order. Counsel for the committee will proceed.

Mr. Ansell. Mr. Weiss, were you also the clearing house for the Louisiana Democratic Association?

Mr. Weiss. Not wholly so.

Mr. Ansell. Will you state what your relation to the fiscal affairs of that association have been?

Mr. Weiss. I have no particular relationship to it, sir. I pay bills for them, but I have no official connection with them what-bills for them, but I have no official connection with them what-

Mr. ANSELL. Will you tell me what the Louisiana Democratic Association is?

WEISS. The Louisiana Democratic Association, as I understand it, and I again repeat I am not a member of it, is an organization composed of friends of Huey P. Long. It is an organization that was organized when he ran for governor and has been perpetuated. It is composed of men who are ward leaders, pre-cinct captains, lieutenants, and staunch friends. The head of that organization had been Senator HUEY P. Long, until such time as he resigned and retired and another man was elected to his

Mr. Ansell. You have received moneys for that organization? Mr. Weiss. Not necessarily in the name of the organization, but frequently I have helped them during campaigns. No campaign has been held in New Orleans since Senator Long was elected governor. The headquarters have been in my hotel.

(Page 604)

Mr. ANSELL, I can not understand what that association is. It is mystic to me. Senator Long. Let me see-

Mr. Ansell. Please, not now, Senator, for the moment. Senator Long. All right. Mr. Ansell. Do you know whether this association has a meeting place or a lodge hall or not?

Mr. WEISS. Yes, sir. The meeting place has usually been the Hotel Roosevelt.

(Page 2208)

Mr. Ansell. Mr. Weiss, you testified the other day that you did not want to deposit any political contributions in the banks of this city or anywhere else. You were asked why you did not want to deposit those contributions in the banks and you said that that was none of my business, none of the committee's business. I ask you now why you did not deposit these political contributions received by you in 1932 in banks?

Mr. Weiss. And again I repeat, it is none of your business.
Mr. Ansell. I ask the committee to instruct this witness to answer that question and the previous questions I have asked him.
The Charrman. It is the duty of the witness to answer that question and he will proceed to answer it.

Mr. Weiss. With due deference to the gentleman, I refused to answer the other day. You called a recess, took me into another room, and decided I did not have to answer. Why you have had a change of heart I do not know, but I still am not going to

The Chairman. I want to state to the witness that there is no evidence this committee can take as confidential. We (p. 2209) are sitting here representing the Senate, and the Senate of the United States is entitled to know any reason you have for not utilizing the banks as a depository of the large sums that you handled in that political campaign.

Senator Long. I think the Chair owed it to me, if you had changed your idea about that, to have told us before to-day; because you told us—I am not violating any confidence—we would not have to do that, the other day.

(Page 2214)

Mr. ANSELL. As manager of the Roosevelt Hotel, do you, in the due course of business, deposit moneys and papers, such as checks, drafts, and notes, received by that hotel in due course of business, into banks of the city of New Orleans?

Mr. Weiss. I do.

Mr. Ansell. What banks?

Mr. Weiss. Practically all of them. Mr. Ansell. Will you name them? Mr. Weiss. The American Bank, the Hibernia Bank, the Canal Bank, the Whitney Bank.

Mr. Ansell. Inasmuch as you have testified that you deposited the money belonging to the hotel in the banks of the city of New Orleans, I ask you why you did not deposit in the banks of the city of New Orleans or elsewhere the political contributions received by you?

Mr. Weiss. Because I did not want to.

Mr. Ansell. I will ask you again why you did not want to? Mr. Weiss. That is none of your business. Mr. Ansell. I ask the committee to instruct the witness to answer that question.

(Page 2215)

The Charman. The witness will answer the question.

Mr. Weiss. I am sorry, sir; I refuse. Mr. Ansell. How much property, real and personal, do you yourself own?

Mr. WEISS. Not five cents' worth.

Mr. Ansell. You own nothing now? Mr. Weiss. I said I own nothing. Mr. Ansell. What property did you personally own in the year 1932?

Mr. WEISS, None.

Mr. ANSELL. My question said properties, which includes both personal and real property.

Mr. Weiss. You mean personal—a suit of clothes?

Mr. Weiss. You mean personal—a suit of clothes?

Mr. Ansell. Personal and real property.

Mr. Weiss. Explain it.

Mr. Ansell. Did you have any personal and real property in the year 1932? If so, of what did that property consist?

Mr. Weiss. I am not quite as smart as you are. What is per-

Mr. Weiss. I am not quite as smart as you are. What is sonal property?

Mr. Ansell. You know what it is.

Mr. Weiss. I am asking you to explain it.

Mr. Ansell. Money, checks, stocks, bonds, notes, clothing—Mr. Weiss. That is none of your business.

Mr. Ansell. Pocketbooks, or what not.

(Page 2216)

Mr. WEISS. If that is what it means, then it is none of your

Mr. ANSELL. I ask the chairman to instruct the witness to answer that question.

Senator Long. I have undertaken to assist this committee. think this committee knows that you can not ask questions that are not pertinent to this inquiry. I have tried to see that witnesses were properly advised about this matter. But asking a man about his wife's clothes, which, by the way, is the personal property of a witness in this State, and that kind of a business, is not proper. I think if the committee would restrict this counsel's questions to political matters, matters that are political in nature, I do not think we would have any trouble getting them answered. But to rule a man has got to disclose little personal affairs of that kind is so impertinent to this issue that I do not think the chair kind is so impertinent to this issue that I do not think the chair can possibly make any mistake in not understanding that it is. We would like to be courteous, as we should be, to this committee. I am trying to be. The committee does not deserve the courtesies which counsel may think they do, particularly in view of some of the questions that counsel has asked. I realize the two Members sitting are laymen. I happen to know the law. This witness and myself stepped into the United States attorney's office the other day—we were on passable terms with him—and even went to other Government officials, to ask about some of these personal matters and see whether or not we might be wrong or (p. 2217) matters and see whether or not we might be wrong or (p. 2217) they might be wrong. We were given to understand beyond any question that the range of these kinds of questions were not proper at all; and I had previously looked it up. Why can't we

The CHAIRMAN. Do you state that the United States district attorney told you that such questions as these would be improper?

Senator Long. I stepped into the United States attorney's office myself the other day. I asked him, "Do I understand the law or not?" I handed him some quotations. I said, "Have you had occasion to look this up? If I understand the law at all, this is wholly irrelevant." He read my authorities and he says, "I think those authorities are sound." But it would not make any difference whether he did or not. I am lawyer enough to know, and I do not see. and I do not seeThe Charman. I assume you thought that at the time, because you went to him and wanted to know about it.

Senator Long. I have stated what he told me. I did not want

Senator Long. I have stated what he told me. I did not want to be relying strictly upon my own judgment in the matter, because these questions were so ridiculous, some of them, that have been asked here. For instance: Your honor, you have tried out my early life in this court; you tried it out before I was 21 years old for an hour yesterday, almost. Now, certainly you know that is irrelevant. I allowed them to go on. It would not have done any good to object. You have tried whether or not I contributed money to my father—

Senator Long. I was addressing the Chair and asking your honor trying to get a ruling we could all agree on. I do not want this witness to go away from here with an unanswered question as to any campaign fund that he ever handled. In other words, in fairness to us, we do not want the witness to fail to answer anything regarding the campaign fund. It is not fair to us for him not to answer as regards a campaign fund he may be handled. We need that the same as the other side, but going back and asking the man if he owned a suit of clothes, if he owned the

The Chairman. No such question has been asked.

Senator Long. It was personal property, which means your suit.

Mr. Weiss. I told him I owned no property.

The Chairman. The witness will restrain himself.

Senator Long. And whether his wife owned her clothes, and those kind of things. That is what that question embraces. Why not let us get down and the Chair instruct counsel to ask him anything he wants to about political contributions directly or indirectly to the Overton campaign or anybody running at the time. directly to the Overton campaign or anybody running at the time, so that we will be in the proper light. The witness, of course, is a layman. He does not segregate these questions. Let us restrict it to political contributions and I am certain the witness will answer those kind of questions.

(Page 2220)

The CHAIRMAN. Is counsel through now? Senator Long. Yes.

Senator Long. Yes.

The Charman. Counsel for the committee is now recognized.
Mr. Ansell. It is admitted by this witness, by his counsel, and by all other people testifying here on the subject that there were campaign contributions received by this witness that were not accounted for, that no record of them was kept, that there was no record kept of them, by design and for purposes—
Mr. Weiss. Who testified to that?
The Charman. The witness will not interrupt.
Mr. Ansell. When such is the case it is within the power—I say it is the duty—of this committee, confronted with such a situation, to endeavor to ascertain all of this witness's receipts, in order that, not helped by the witness or by counsel or by anybody else, it may endeavor to determine which of those were political and which were not.

It may endeavor to determine which of those were political and which were not.

The CHAIRMAN. The reporter will read the question.

The record was read, as follows:

"Mr. ANSELL. Did you have any real and personal property (p. 2221) in the year 1932? If so, of what did that property consist?"

The CHAIRMAN. The witness may answer.

Mr. WEISS. I am sorry, sir. I refuse to answer.

Mr. ANSELL. I will ask the committee to rule that the witness should answer.

should answer.

The CHAIRMAN. He has refused to answer. The committee requires an answer, and the witness understood that we required an answer?

Mr. Weiss. Mr. Chairman, did you understand the question? Whether I had any property, real or any other kind, personal? That is his question.

That is his question.

The Charman. Any real or personal property. There is no necessity of stating "or anything of that kind."

Mr. Weiss. That is what it is made up of.

The Charman. What he wants to know is what property, what assets, did you have in the nature of real or personal property.

Senator Long. Let us tell him. Let us tell him anything you had in 1932. Let us not let them go away from here without that. Let us tell them. It is ridiculous and absurd, of course.

Mr. Weiss. Mr. Counsel, I have just testified that I owned no real estate, not a nickel's worth. Now, then, he wants to know what personal property I have. Do you want me to sit down here and enumerate the many different things I own; whether or not I have an automobile that is paid for; whether I have two pairs of shoes that are paid for? I testified I do not (p. 2222) own a nickel's worth of real estate, and that is that. Now, the rest of it is my own personal affairs, and I refuse to answer. Go ahead with the show.

Mr. Ansell. Did you open any savings account with the Canal

Mr. Ansell. Did you open any savings account with the Canal Bank & Trust Co. in October, 1931?

Mr. Weiss. That is none of your business.

Mr. Ansell. You refuse to answer? Mr. Weiss. Yes. Mr. Ansell. Did you have a savings account in the Canal Bank

Mr. Ansell. Did you have a savings account in the C. & Trust Co. in October, November, and December, 1931? Mr. Weiss. That is none of your business. Mr. Ansell. And you refuse to answer? Mr. Weiss. Yes, sir. Senator Long. What is that last question?

Mr. Ansell. Did you deposit in a savings account in any bank in this city an amount which represented your salary as manager of the Roosevelt Hotel, with certain deductions or monthly charges against it, such as long-distance telephone calls, etc., in the Canal Bank & Trust Co. in 1931?

Mr. Weiss. That is none of your business. It is not true, however.

(Page 2223)

Mr. Ansell. Do you at the present time deposit your salary check as manager of the Roosevelt Hotel in a savings account in the Canal Bank & Trust Co. or any other bank in this city?

Mr. Weiss. That is none of your business.

(Page 2225)

Mr. Ansell. You refuse to answer that?
Mr. Weiss.. Yes. You are away from Mr. Overton's campaign
If you will ask me something about that, I will try to answer.
You have probably forgotten that.
The Chairman. The statement of the witness was improper and utterly out of order, and he will conduct himself otherwise.
Mr. Ansell. I will ask you again why it was that you deposited hotel moneys in the banks and not your own.
Mr. Weiss. None of your business.
Mr. Ansell. You refuse to answer?
Mr. Weiss. Yes.

(Page 2226)

Senator Long. All right. I will ask you to state as fully as you can everything that you remember that you received for any campaign for the year 1932, outside of what you have already testified to; any other information that you found?

(Page 2227)

Mr. Weiss. Yes, I found where I had certain contributions made to candidates, to our candidate for public-service commissioner; to our various Congressmen who ran, and I will be glad to give the information.

Senator Long. All right, give all you can then. Mr. Weiss. I think I testified the other day Mr. Caleb Weber gave $2,000.

Senator Long. Gave it to who? Mr. Weiss. Gave it to me.

Senator Long. For whom?

Mr. WEISS. Wade Martin.

Senator Long. Who else? Mr. WEISS. James E. Noe.

Senator Long. How much did he give, and to whom? Mr. Weiss. He gave me $1,000 at one time and $2,500 at another time, making $3,500 total.

Me, making $5,500 total.

Senator Long. For whom was that?

Mr. Weiss. For the Congressman in his district.

Senator Long. Who else?

Mr. Weiss. P. M. Atkins.

Senator Long. How much did he give you and for what?

Mr. Weiss. $4,000 for the same purpose. Senator Long. All right. Who else? Mr. Weiss. R. L. Gay.

(Page 2228)

Senator Long. How much did he give you?

Mr. Weiss. $2,500. Senator Long. For who?

Mr. Weiss. For the same purpose; for the Congressman in his district Senator Long. That is Fayette Gay you are talking about?

Mr. Weiss. Yes. Senator Long. Was that not for the Martin campaign? Mr. Weiss. It may have been. That is what it was used for anyhow.

Senator Long. He lives in the eighth district, the Sabine Parish, and so forth. That is the eighth district. Did we have a candidate for Congress in the eighth district?

Mr. WEISS. Yes.

Senator Long. Think carefully, if we supported anybody in the Overton district at all; that is between Mr. Dear and Mr. Hunter. Mr. Weiss. Ne, sir; we did not. Wade Martin ran in that dis-

Senator Long. That is in Avoyelles Parish. Did not the chairman and counsel of this committee go with you and me into a room the other day and agree they would not ask you these banking questions?

Mr. Weiss. It was my understanding, and they certainly came back and did not ask them.

(Page 2229)

Senator Long. Was not the chairman in there? Mr. Weiss. He was there.

Senator Long. Did we not give him the reasons for our asking them not to do it?

Mr. Weiss. Yes, sir.
Senator Long. Did they not agree not to have you do it?
Mr. Weiss. That was my understanding of it.

Senator Long. Coming back-

The CHARMAN. Just a moment. Does the witness mean to Senator Long. I mean to say you did.

The Charrman.—That either member of the committee stated he would not insist upon your answering that question?

Mr. Weiss. The facts are I came back and they were not asked of me, sir.

The Chairman. But your refusal to answer remained on the record and it was so indicated by the committee.

Senator Long. Are you going to make this a question of veracity as between you and me on that? Do you not know we went into that room and left this thing, that the witness need not answer

The CHAIRMAN. There was no such agreement on my part. Senator Long. There was not? I wonder if I could not refresh your memory?

Senator Carey. Senator Long, my recollection is that we did not pass on it finally. It is true that we did not have him (p. 2230)

Senator Long. That is right.

Senator Carry. I do not think it is fair to say there was any agreement that the question never would be asked. It is true that we did not insist on an answer at that time.

Senator Long. I do not claim you foreclosed yourself from coming back to it, but this man is a layman and we all went in and discussed this thing. We gave honorable and good motives Senator Carey. We accepted his answer at the time.

Senator Carry. We accepted his answer at the time.

Senator Long. I thought it was best not to go into that. We gave you the reasons in private. I will say this, those questions could well be written out at this time. It is hardly right to the witness or others of us without any understanding at all to come in here this morning and propound questions that were at least waived at the time. Now, I want to be fair with the committee and I want the committee to be as fair with this witness as possible. I even gave this committee instances and details and went into most elaborate details for some of the reasons and to come into most elaborate details for some of the reasons, and to come out here and ask these questions anew, I do not think is proper, and I in a very civil way undertook to approach the chairman so that we could talk this thing over again, so that if you are going to change as to what you thought we would do then, if you were going to take a course, that we— [page 2231 omitted from copy of transcript furnished Senator Long].

Senator Long. How many accounts do you have in the Roosevelt Hotel a day?
Mr. WEISS. Thirty-five hundred.

Senator Long. Thirty-five hundred accounts to-day? The question which the attorney asked you required you to disclose the affairs of 3,500 people a day that you have sometimes in the Ansili. I asked no such question.

Senator Long. Yes; you did. Don't dispute me.

Mr. Ansell. You know I asked no such question.

Senator Long. I will ask you if the questions that this counsel asked you did not require you to disclose the personal affairs of as many as 3,500 people a day sometimes, or whatever hundred

Mr. Weiss. You asked me how many accounts I had. I said 500. I have not 3,500 people. Senator Long. I mean guests. 3.500.

Mr. Weiss. Five hundred to a thousand people. Senator Long. A day? Mr. Weiss. Yes, sir.

Mr. Weiss, ies, sir.
Senator Long. Do you handle accounts, checks, drafts, and so forth, and things like that for your guests?
Mr. Weiss. Yes, sir; as does every other hotel in the world.
Senator Long. Your personal accounts would include those, would they not?

Mr. Weiss. In many instances; yes, sir. Senator Long. The fact of the case is you were called on to explain a lot of that once, were you not?

Mr. WEISS. I would much prefer not to go into that. That is exactly what the counsel would like me to do and that is why I won't do it.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, about the middle of last September a complaint was received from the senior Senator from Louisiana, Mr. BROUSSARD and, after stating that certain fraudulent practices had been indulged in during the previous primary election held on the 13th day of September, 1932, the request was made that the ballot boxes in New Orleans be seized and impounded. Doubting the committee's authority to take such action, the chairman of the committee appointed by telegram the Senator from Texas [Mr. Connally] as a subcommittee of one to proceed to New Orleans, investigate, and report with recommendations. Subsequently the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Brattonl was added to that subcommittee. On October 6 and 7 that subcommittee held hearings in New Orleans. The result of those hearings was summed up in the concluding remarks of the chairman of the subcommittee, in which he stated that it was the view of the subcommittee that investigators should be sent to Louisiana to go into the situation.

Upon receiving a copy of the proceedings, the chairman of the committee dispatched an investigator to supplement the investigator who had been sent to the assistance of the subcommittee. That was about the middle of October. Following the election two other investigators were dispatched to New Orleans. One of them returned in December. The other three remained in Louisiana until just recently.

In the latter part of January the committee, of which I am chairman, determined to send an attorney to New Orleans to sum up the work of the investigators and report with such recommendations as he might deem proper. A report was submitted shortly thereafter recommending that hearings be conducted, beginning in New Orleans.

As the full committee was unable to proceed to New Orleans, the chairman appointed a subcommittee composed of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Carey] and the chairman. They began hearings in New Orleans on February 3 and were occupied with those hearings for about two weeks, when it was deemed necessary that the committee should return so that, if it were required, the testimony could be briefed and a progress report made before the adjournment of the present session of Congress.

I might say that the investigation was conducted under great difficulties in Louisiana, and the hearings and the service in the hearings were not wholly agreeable. However, the committee performed its duty as it deemed proper, and I expect to make a progress report at a later date.

Mr. President, the work of this committee was but partially done. The investigators had secured a great deal of data out in the State, and it was planned that hearings should be conducted out in the State. If this shall be done, additional funds should be afforded, and as to whether it is to be done is for the determination of the Senate.

I say frankly that I do not care to return to Louisiana. However, as chairman of the committee, if the Senate sees fit to proceed with the investigation, I shall return and perform the duty that has been placed upon me.

I now—out of order—ask unanimous consent from the special committee to investigate campaign expenditures of the various presidential, vice presidential, and senatorial candidates in 1932, to report a resolution and request that it may be read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I shall have to object to that request for the time being.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri objects.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma obtained the floor.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I will yield for a question. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma yields for a question.

Mr. LONG. I do not desire to ask a question. I thank the Senator.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield in order that I may suggest the absence of a quorum?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield for that purpose?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield provided I do not lose the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will not lose the floor by yielding to a call for a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst Schuvler Costigan Kean Sheppard Shipstead Shortridge Smith Austin Bailey Couzens Kendrick King La Follette Logan Bankhead Dale Dickinson Barbour Smoot Steiwer Stephens Barkley Dill Long Bingham Fess Fletcher McKellar Swanson Thomas, Idaho Thomas, Okla. Frazier George McNary Metcalf Blaine Borah Bratton Glass Moses Norbeck Trammell Goldsborough Broussard Bulkley Gore Grammer Norris Tydings Vandenberg Bulow Nye Oddie Wagner Walcott Byrnes Hale Capper Caraway Hastings Pittman Waish, Mass. Carey Hatfield Reed Walsh, Mont. Reynolds Robinson, Ark. Watson Hayden Clark Connally Hebert Wheeler Robinson, Ind. Copeland Johnson Russell

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

NATIONAL BANKING ASSOCIATIONS

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield for a statement of the purpose of the request.

Mr. COUZENS. I thank the Senator from Oklahoma.

I desire to ask unanimous consent to take up, out of order, without displacing any pending business, Order of Business 1366, Senate Joint Resolution 256. It is a brief joint resolution, and is of considerable importance; and I should be glad if the clerk would read it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson] is absent. Does the Senator know whether the joint resolution meets with his approval?

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator assured me that it did.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, if the matter can be disposed of without any lengthy discussion, I shall be very glad to yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the joint resolution.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 256) authorizing the Comptroller of the Currency to exercise with respect to national banking associations powers which State officials may have with respect to State banks, savings banks, and/or trust companies under State laws, which was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Comptroller of the Currency shall have and may exercise to such extent as he deems advisable with respect to national banking associations any powers which the State officials having supervision of State banks, savings banks and/or trust companies in the State in which such national banking associations are located may have with respect to such State institutions under State laws now in force or hereafter enacted: Provided, That nothing in this joint resolution shall be construed to extend the authority of the Comptroller of the Currency under section 5155, as amended, of the Revised Statutes, with respect to the establishment of branches of national banking associations.

Expenses incurred by the Comptroller of the Currency in the exercise of such powers may be assessed by him against the banks concerned and, when so assessed, shall be paid by such banks.

concerned and, when so assessed, shall be paid by such banks.

Nothing herein shall be construed to impair any power otherwise possessed by the Comptroller of the Currency, the Secretary of the Treasury, or the Federal Reserve Board.

of the Treasury, or the Federal Reserve Board.
All powers conferred herein shall terminate on March 3, 1934.

LABOR CONDITIONS ON MISSISSIPPI FLOOD-CONTROL PROJECT

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. I ask unanimous consent to have considered and passed Senate Resolution 300, which is upon the calendar, providing for an investigation of labor conditions prevailing upon the Mississippi flood-control project.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield for that purpose if it does not take any particular time.

Mr. WAGNER. I understand that there is no opposition to the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 300) authorizing an investigation of labor conditions prevailing upon the Mississippi flood-control project, which had been reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate with amendments, on page 1, line 1, after the word "That," to strike out "the Committee on Commerce, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof" and insert "a select committee of three Senators to be appointed by the Vice President"; in line 9, after the word "committee," to strike out "or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof"; on page 2, line 1, before the word "Congress," to strike out "second" and insert "third"; and on the same page, line 9, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$1,000," so as to make the resolution

Resolved, That a select committee of three Senators to be appointed by the Vice President is authorized and directed to investigate the labor conditions prevailing upon the Mississippi vestigate the labor conditions prevailing upon the Mississippi flood-control project and, as soon as practicable, to report to the Senate its findings and its recommendations.

Sec. 2. For the purposes of this resolution the committee is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the Seventy-third Congress, to employ such experts, and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such caths and to take such testimony and to make such expendisuch oaths and to take such testimony and to make such expendi-tures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hunreport such nearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $1,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the continuous. upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendments of the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

RELIEF OF PUERTO RICO

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, there appear to be a number of small matters to be attended to: and, if agreeable to the Senate, I shall be glad to yield for their disposition.

I yield first to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, there are on the calendar Orders of Business Nos. 1323 and 1324, Senate bill 5408 and Senate Joint Resolution 183. They are two very small measures, unanimously reported for passage by the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, which will protect the United States Government in its efforts to collect from persons to whom money has been loaned in Puerto Rico the money loaned for relief purposes.

We have been informed by the Relief Commission that they needed to have the time extended from 5 to 10 years in order to make these collections, and that they also needed to have the power to foreclose mortgages to protect the United States Government. There was no objection to the measures in the committee. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson] has looked into them, and they are entirely satisfactory to him. It will be a protection to the United States Government to have them passed; and I hope that may be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the first bill.

The legislative clerk read the bill (S. 5408) relating to the revolving fund established by the joint resolution of December 21, 1928, for the relief of Puerto Rico, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the last sentence of section 3 of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution for the relief of Porto Rico," approved December 21, 1928, is amended by striking out "5 years" and inserting in lieu thereof "10 years." "5 years

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether it was conceded that 10 years were needed, rather than an intermediate period between 5 and 10 years?

Mr. BINGHAM. It was the opinion of the relief commission that they could work out the indebtedness due the United States better if the period were increased from 5 to 10 years.

Mr. KING. I shall not object.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading. read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the next

The legislative clerk read the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 183) to amend a joint resolution entitled "Joint Resolution for the relief of Porto Rico, approved December 21, 1928," as amended by the second deficiency act, fiscal year 1929, approved March 4, 1929, which had been reported from the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 7, after the word "the," to strike out "Porto" and insert "Puerto," and on page 2, line 2, after the words "island of," to strike out "Porto" and insert "Puerto," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That in carrying out the provisions of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution for the relief of Porto Rico, approved December 21, 1928," as amended by the second deficiency approved December 21, 1926, as amended by the second deficiency act, fiscal year 1929, approved March 4, 1929, the Puerto Rican Hurricane Relief Commission is authorized to acquire in the name of the United States the title to parcels of land and other property, real or personal, in the Island of Puerto Rico, in satisfaction erty, real or personal, in the Island of Puerto Rico, in satisfaction of debts owing to the United States, and to purchase parcels of land at sales under judgments or decrees of foreclosure of mortgages on such land. The commission is further authorized to lease and/or to dispose of all property so acquired under such rules and regulations as it may make from time to time, and in the exercise of these powers may execute deeds or other necessary and composite instruments in the pame of the United States. and appropriate instruments in the name of the United States

Mr. KING. Mr. President, what is the purpose of this joint resolution?

Mr. BINGHAM. The purpose of the joint resolution is to permit the commission to foreclose mortgages. There are a number of people in Puerto Rico to-day who have borrowed from the commission and are unwilling to pay, although they have property and ought to pay; and we neglected to give the commission the power to foreclose on

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMPETITIVE CONDITIONS RELATIVE TO THE WOOD-PULP INDUSTRY

Mr. DILL. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. DILL. I ask unanimous consent to take up a resolution to which I think there will be no objection. It is Senate Resolution 365, which was on the table yesterday, but was not reached because of the resolution of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. It is a resolution asking the Tariff Commission to make an investigation as to the effect of depreciated currency on the pulpwood industry. I have talked with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson] regarding the resolution, and they have no objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the resolution be read. The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 365) submitted by Mr. Dill on the 20th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Tariff Commission be, and is hereby directed to investigate and report to the Senate at as early date as possible the competitive conditions as they relate to the wood-pulp industry of the United States, and particularly in relation to pulp timber, pulpwood, and mechanical and chemical wood pulp produced in Canada, Sweden, Finland, and Norway, said investigation duced in Canada, Sweden, Finland, and Norway, said investigation to be based upon the costs in the various countries as computed on the standard gold value of United States currency used in payment for labor and other costs in domestic industry.

The commission is further directed to make such use of the data and findings of the United States Conservation Board, which has conducted a complete survey in the domestic field of the pulp business during the past few years as will be useful in making its business during the past few years, as will be useful in making its report to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have no objection to the consideration of the resolution; but I ask the Senator, why limit the investigation to several countries, and why attempt to limit it to an investigation as to the effect of the gold standard? Why not take into account all factors and elements that would go to determine whether the tariff was too high or too low?

Mr. DILL. I may say to the Senator that there is no tariff on pulpwood. The only places that pulpwood comes from in any quantities are the countries I have mentioned here. The Tariff Commission have much of this material on hand, but it ought to be brought up to date. It is of such importance to the pulpwood industry in this country that I think it is essential that we have the information.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered by the Senate and agreed to.

PAYMENT OF CLAIMS OF MEXICAN GOVERNMENT

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I invite attention to Order of Business 1325, House bill 13534, authorizing an appropriation of $15,000 each for the families of the two Mexican students who were killed in Ardmore, Okla., last year.

The bill has been passed by the House, and has the unanimous support of the Committee on Foreign Relations. It is rather important that the matter be disposed of as speedily as possible. I therefore ask unanimous consent for its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the bill be read.

The legislative clerk read the bill (H. R. 13534) authorizing the appropriation of funds for the payment of claims to the Mexican Government under the circumstances hereinafter enumerated, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there are hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $15,000 for payment to the Government of Mexico for the account of the family of Emilio Cortez Rubio, and a further sum of $15,000 for payment to the Government of Mexico for the account of the family of Manuel Gomez, as an act of grace and without reference to the question of legal liability of the United States, for the killing in or near Ardmore, Okla., on June 7, 1931, of Emilio Cortez Rubio and Manuel Gomez by two deputy sheriffs of the State of Oklahoma.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to con-

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have no objection to the consideration of the bill, but I want to suggest to my friend from Idaho that I hope the passage of this measure will be an admonition to Mexico that she ought to deal fairly with the families of American citizens who have been killed in Mexico. The Senator recalls that at San Ysabel eight or nine fine American engineers who went into Mexico, in the pursuit of their calling, and in part for the benefit of the Mexican Government, under the assurance by the Mexican Government that they would be protected if they did so, were massacred. Not a penny was paid to their relatives nor to the relatives of any of the five or six hundred American nationals who have been killed in Mexico during the past 15 or 20 years.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PARTICIPATION OF FOREIGN NATIONS IN CHICAGO WORLD'S FAIR

Mr. KING. Mr. President, several days ago I reported favorably House Joint Resolution 561, amending section 2 of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution authorizing the President, under certain conditions, to invite the participation of other nations in the Chicago World's Fair, providing for the admission of their exhibits, and for other purposes," approved February 5, 1929, and amending section 7 of the act entitled "An act to protect the copyrights and patents of foreign exhibitors at A Century of Progress (Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration), to be held at Chicago, Ill., in 1933," approved July 19, 1932.

The passage of this joint resolution by Congress is desired by those who are conducting the World's Fair in Chicago and the administrators of that fair, both those representing the Federal Government as well as those representing the municipality. The joint resolution merely authorizes the President to extend invitations to foreign governments to become exhibitors and provides the methods by which they may bring in their exhibits for presentation and make such disposition of them as may be authorized. It is in the usual form, and there is no appropriation provided.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 2 of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution authorizing the President, under certain conditions, to invite the participation of other nations in the Chicago World's Fair, providing for the admission of their exhibits, and for other purposes," approved February 5, 1929, be, and the same hereby is, amended so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 2. That all articles which shall be imported from foreign countries for the purpose of exhibition at the exposition to be held by and known as A Century of Progress, in section 1 of this joint resolution called the Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration of for the intervence for was in section in the chicago world's Fair Centennial Celebration of the chicago world's Fair Centennial Celebration of for was in section in the Chicago world's Fair Centennial Celebration of for was in section. bration, or for use in constructing, installing, or maintaining forbration, or for use in constructing, installing, or maintaining for-eign buildings or exhibits at the said exposition, upon which articles there shall be a tariff or customs duty, shall be admitted without payment of such tariff, customs duty, fees, or charges under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall pre-scribe; but it shall be lawful, at any time during or within six months after the close of the said exposition, to sell any articles provided for herein, subject to such regulations for the security of the revenue and for the collection of import duties as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided, That all such articles, when sold or withdrawn for consumption or use in the United States, shall be subject to the duties, if any, imposed upon such articles by the revenue laws in force at the date of their withdrawal; and on such articles, which shall have suffered diminution or deterioration from incidental handling or exposure, the duties, if payable, shall be assessed according to the appraised value at the time of withdrawal: Provided further, That imported articles provided for herein shall not be subject to any marking requirements of the general tariff laws, except when any marking requirements of the general tariff laws, except when such articles are withdrawn for consumption or use in the United States, in which case they shall not be released from customs custody until properly marked, but no additional duty shall be assessed because such articles were not sufficiently marked when imported into the United States: Provided further, That articles which have been admitted without payment of duty for articles which have been admitted without payment of duty for exhibition under any general tariff law may be accorded the privilege of transfer to and entry for exhibition at the said exposition under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: And provided further, That all necessary expenses incurred, including salaries of customs officials in charge of imported articles, shall be reimbursed to the Government of the United States by A Century of Progress, also known as the Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury."

Sec. 2. That section 7 of the act entitled "An act to protect the copyrights and patents of foreign exhibitors at A Century of Progress (Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration), to be held at Chicago, Ill., in 1933," approved July 19, 1932, be, and the same hereby is, amended so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 7. All necessary avenues incurred by the Matter State.

"Sec. 7. All necessary expenses incurred by the United States in carrying out the provisions of this act shall be reimbursed to the Government of the United States by A Century of Progress, also known as the Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration, under regulations to be prescribed by the Librarian of Congress and by the Commissioner of Patents, respectively."

SEC. 3. That the receipts from reimbursements to the Government of the United States paid by A Century of Progress, also known as the Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration, as provided in the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution authorizing the President, under certain conditions, to invite the participation of other nations in the Chicago World's Fair, providing for the admission of their exhibits, and for other purposes," approved February 5, 1929, as hereby amended, and in the act entitled "An act to protect the copyrights and patents of foreign exhibitors at A Century of Progress (Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration), to be held at Chicago, Ill., in 1933," approved July 19, 1932, as hereby amended, shall be deposited as refunds to the appropriations from which paid, instead of being covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts as provided by the act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1907, in the manner provided for receipts from reimbursable charges for labor, services, and other expenses connected with the customs, in section 524 of the tariff act of 1930.

METHOD OF RATIFICATION OF AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I hope that what I now say may prove to be timely and efficacious in forestalling what might lead to a serious error, namely, a number of lawyers, some of them highly respectable in ability, are promulgating opinions that Congress has the power to prescribe the method in which the States should call conventions to ratify the amendment to the Constitution recently proposed by the adoption of Senate Joint Resolution 211.

Mr. President, when Congress proposes—that is to say, submits—an amendment, the function of the Congress therewith has ended. When Congress proposes or submits an amendment, its functions as to that amendment are completed, and Congress has no power to recall that action.

It is harmful for the country to get the impression that the Congress will or should consider the question of enacting any law which will prescribe for the States the kind or nature of conventions the States shall hold to consider ratification thereof. The States would resent—and justly resent—the enactment of such a law by Congress. I am convinced that if Congress attempted to prescribe the nature, form, or character of conventions or how the conventions should be called or conducted, and if the controversy could ever reach the Supreme Court of the United States, that court would declare such act of Congress to be beyond the authority of Congress.

Mr. President, there is, or at least there should be, no complexity about the question; Article V of the Constitution of the United States grants to Congress the power to propose amendments to the Federal Constitution, and it also grants to Congress the discretion and right to choose whether proposed amendments shall be ratified by the legislatures of or conventions in the several States. If Congress chooses the legislature, the States are restricted in ratifying to the legislature. If Congress chooses the convention, then the States are restricted in ratifying to the convention. Congress has no power or authority to interfere with the action of a State in regard to calling such convention.

Mr. President, suppose some State, instead of clinging to a bicameral legislature, should conclude to have a one-chambered legislature—as indeed one of the States for a time did have—that fact would not resolve the legislature of that State into a convention; it would be a legislature nevertheless. Therefore timely warning should be sounded against any proposal to appropriate money from the Federal Treasury to pay the expenses of conventions in the various States.

The States have plenary power to call their own respective conventions. Congress has no right, no authority, and no business to attempt to dictate to the States how they shall call these conventions. If a State desires to have 150 delegates in its convention, or desires to have 50 delegates, that is the right, duty, and function of the State, and the Federal Government would be an offensive and unconstitutional intruder if it attempted to dictate to the States what sort of a convention should be held, or how the delegates should be apportioned or selected.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. KEAN. I would like to ask the Senator whether the way to get at this, so as to settle the whole thing, would not be for Congress to pass a resolution asking the Attorney General to render an opinion to Congress as to its right and as to the rights of the States.

Mr. ASHURST. I have no objection to the Attorney General furnishing an opinion, but I doubt if he would care to do so. I fail to perceive why there should be doubt and complexity about the question. It has astonished me that eminent lawyers, including a former Attorney General, of large ability, apparently take the view that Congress should or may prescribe the mode to be followed by the conventions in the several States.

Possibly some of the confusion and complexity arises from this circumstance, that whilst the original Constitution was, indeed, submitted to conventions in the States, every amendment except the instant case has been submitted to the legislatures of the several States, rather than to conventions in the several States.

My view is that it would be offensive, unconstitutional, almost insulting, to the States for the Federal Government to attempt in any way to dictate to the States how or in what manner they should choose the delegates or hold the conventions. That is left to the respective States.

COMMENTS ON ECONOMIC CONDITIONS

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. What is the pending business before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The independent offices appropriation bill.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the bill which is now the unfinished business before the Senate is House bill 14359. As I understand, that bill has been temporarily laid aside so that the appropriation bill might be considered.

The unfinished business, as I understand, is the bill I have just mentioned. It has the following title:

An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States."

By reference to page 40 of the bill I find that the measure before the Senate is simply an added chapter to our existing bankruptcy laws, chapter 8, under the title "Provisions for the Relief of Debtors."

On page 48 I find section 75, with the heading "Agricultural Compositions and Extensions":

SEC. 75. Agricultural compositions and extensions: (a) Courts of bankruptcy are authorized, upon petition of at least 15 farmers within any county who certify that they intend to file petitions under this section, to appoint for such county one or more referees to be known as conciliation commissioners.

Mr. President, this is the bankruptcy bill. Why is it necessary at this time to propose to enact additional bankruptcy legislation? What is responsible for present conditions? The answer must appeal to everyone. First, low prices. Second, a lack of buying power. Third, no money. Fourth, no credit.

What little available money we now have based upon the buying or purchasing power of farm products is worth 200 cents to the dollar. There is at this time practically no credit whatever. Yet, on yesterday, the spokesman for reactionary thought for a decade in the Senate made the statement that there is plenty of gold; that there is plenty of currency; that there is plenty of credit, and that neither gold nor currency nor credit should be disturbed.

Mr. President, I want briefly to refer to the speech made yesterday by the distinguished senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. Fess], but before I do that let me say that to-day is the anniversary of the birth of George Washington, the two hundred and first anniversary of the birth of the Father of his Country.

George Washington established the greatest structural government ever devised by the genius of man. Under such fundamental concepts of just governmental policies, this Government of ours became the richest, the strongest, the most respected, and, therefore, the most influential Nation of the earth. To-day, almost 137 years since this famous address was given by the Father of his Country, it having been delivered on the 7th of September, 1796, what conditions do we find in this Nation established under the charter shaped by the genius of Washington?

We find 12,000,000 of our citizens wholly unemployed and an estimated 6,000,000 more only partially employed. Those citizens do not represent single individuals. As a rule, the unemployed men and partially unemployed men are married and have families. The average family is five, composed of a man, his wife, and three children. If it is true that we have to-day 18,000,000 unemployed and partially unemployed, we must multiply that number by something like five, and thus we arrive at a correct estimate of the number of people in the country to-day without means of support, without buying power, without money, without food, and without shelter.

Mr. President, it is somewhat embarrassing to have to admit that after 137 years under such a Government, to-day, the two hundred and first anniversary of the birth of the Father of his Country, we are proposing to enact bankruptcy legislation to take care of the multiplied tens of millions of the citizens of the Nation to-day destitute and in want.

The problem of the unemployed is not the only problem. We now have something like 30,000,000 of men, women, and children forming the farm population of America, and hundreds of thousands of them have already lost their farms. Against others perhaps hundreds of thousands of foreclosure petitions are pending. These farmers, having the lands of the Nation, in many sections having the best crops ever raised, can not sell those good crops for enough money to pay their taxes. Even if they could pay their taxes they would not have enough left with which to pay their interest. If they could pay their taxes and their interest they would have nothing left with which to support themselves and their families.

Yet the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] made the statement yesterday that we have plenty of gold, we have plenty of currency, we have plenty of credit, and as I interpret his statement he argued against any increase in the prices of the products of the farm.

I can not allow such statements to pass without protest. I am not going to oppose the pending measure. I am not now taking time with that in view. If one should have a cancer it might be necessary to have the member containing the deadly germs removed. It may be necessary, since we have gone so far, to enact this bankruptcy legislation. But for 41 months the Congress, the only policy-making branch of the Government, has remained in session days and weeks and months, and now, when the people of the country are becoming insolvent and bankrupt, we propose to pass a bill providing that when they become insolvent, bankrupt, and destitute, they can go to a Federal agent, admit their pauperism, admit their bankruptcy, and have a Federal agent take charge of their affairs for a few days, hoping that perchance their ship may come in.

But, Mr. President, millions of these farmers and laboring men do not even live upon a river, they do not live upon a lake or upon an ocean, and if they did, even so they have no ship to come in. There is no hope for relief for these millions of our people if we are to sit here and enact bankruptcy legislation and propose to loan the Federal credit to such of our citizens who may have collateral and therefore credit.

Let me call attention to some remarkable statements made by the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. Fess] on yesterday. His remarks will be found on pages 4571 to 4584 of the Congressional Record. The first statement he made is as follows:

Cheap money has always been regarded as a panacea. It was so in colonial days.

Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Ohio has left the Chamber. I desired to ask him some questions. In the colonial days, the population living along the Atlantic seaboard was something like 3,000,000. They had their trials and tribulations and struggles. They had to have money. They had to have a medium of exchange. They could not use corn. They could not use wampum any longer. It was not practical to use tobacco. So they adopted a system of money. When the gold gave out, when the silver was exhausted, there was nothing left for the Continentals to do except to begin issuing paper money. They issued the paper money, and it served its purpose. If the Senator from Ohio were present I would ask him what would have happened to the Colonials had they not issued paper money in those trying days of the Revolution.

The second proposition referred to by the distinguished Senator from Ohio was the matter of the greenbacks issued during the time of the great conflict between the North and the South. I read from his speech of yesterday:

When we were confronted by the great Civil War and our money seemed to be exhausted we had to resort to the issuance of paper currency.

Mr. President, who was it that resorted to paper currency? Was it not the patron saint of the distinguished Senator from Ohio—Abraham Lincoln?

The Senator from Ohio has just reentered the Chamber. I will repeat the question I proposed a moment ago. What would have happened to the Colonies had they not issued the paper currency referred to on yesterday in the address delivered by the distinguished Senator from Ohio? I get no answer. The second question: What would have happened to the Northern States had not Lincoln and the Congress issued and provided for greenbacks away back yonder in 1862, 1863, 1864, and 1865? Again the Senator from Ohio reads his newspaper and refuses even to indicate that he hears my interrogatory.

Mr. President, a little further on in his speech the distinguished Senator from Ohio made this statement, referring to the greenbacks:

To-day the amount is $346,000,000, and it changes not from year to year, as the Federal reserve bank notes change according to the amount of reserves deposited in the Federal reserve banks.

In that statement the distinguished Senator from Ohio admitted that although the greenbacks were issued way back yonder in 1862 to 1865, to-day we still have in circulation $346,000,000 of this worthless money so described by him on yesterday. When the gold of the North gave out in the sixties, when the silver was exhausted, the Northern States found it necessary to issue money. They had no gold. They had no silver. The States of the North were forced to issue greenbacks, and hundreds of millions of those greenbacks were issued in those trying times. I wonder what would have happened to the North if the Congress at that time had been under the leadership of the distinguished Senator from Ohio. He would not have issued greenbacks. There was no gold and there was no silver. The North would have collapsed. There could have been no alternative.

Mr. President, what confronts the Nation to-day? Not the conditions that confronted us in the days of the colonies, not the conditions that confronted us during and immediately after the War between the States, but a condition may confront this Congress and this people in the course of the next few months as serious as confronted the Colonials and as confronted the North in those trying days away back yonder in the sixties.

Mr. President, to-day we have a $5,000,000,000 Government with a $2,500,000,000 income. Last year and this year our Nation has created deficits in sums approximating $2,500,000,000 per annum. When this fiscal year ends the Nation and we, the policy makers, will have to face a $5,000,-000,000 deficit. That is not all. During the past two years we have not only run behind $5,000,000,000, but Congress has created the Reconstruction Finance Corporation which has in turn distributed Federal credit to the extent of $2,000,000,000 in making loans to banks and railroads and business concerns of the Nation. Add that $2,000,000,000 to the $5,000,000,000 deficit and there is $7,000,000,000 in those two items alone.

But that is not all. We are now proposing to loan additional Federal credit, and when that is done at the end of the next fiscal year, instead of having a $5,000,000,000 deficit and $2,000,000,000 loaned, we may have $4,000,000,000 loaned. That will make $9,000,000,000 of deficit and loans that must be paid.

But that is not all. During the coming few months we face the refunding of something like $6,000,000,000 of Government bonds. We must raise that money somehow. Add that to our deficit of $5,000,000,000 and the $2,000,000,000 loans, and perhaps $2,000,000,000 we will loan this year, and we have a sum approaching $15,000,000,000 that we must raise somehow in the immediate future. How is it to be done?

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. Fess] proposes to raise that money on the basis of a 200-cent dollar, so when we raise by taxes on borrowing a dollar we make somebody contribute 200 cents to pay or to loan us that dollar. Who in the end is to pay those obligations? The people must pay them. Labor must pay the money. Wage earners must pay the money. Farmers must pay the money. Producers must pay the money. When they do, if the policy of the distinguished Senator from Ohio prevails, they will be forced to raise 200 cents in value to pay off each dollar of those obligations.

I can not support that kind of a proposal, Mr. President. But the Senator from Ohio, in his lengthy speech on yesterday, laid down those different proposals.

Let me call attention to some other remarks made by the distinguished Senator from Ohio on page 4668 of the RECORD, I read:

I can not think there can be any sound contention whatever that we need more money. The only sound contention is that we should better use what we have.

The money that who has, Mr. President? Do the 18,000,-000 unemployed have money? Do the men in the soup lines of the cities have money? Let them make a better use of the money they have. What about the 30,000,000 farmers of the Nation, have they money? They can not pay their taxes; they can not pay their interest; they can not pay their debts; and yet the distinguished Senator from Ohio lays down the proposition as a remedy for existing conditions that if the unemployed and the farmers will only use what money they have, their day of salvation will assuredly be at hand. A little further on the distinguished Senator says:

If we could proceed now to balance the Budget * * *.

Mr. President, that is about all we have heard recently. "If we could just balance the Budget, the sunshine of prosperity would begin to dawn upon the American people and upon the world." Balance the Budget! Well, last winter we balanced the Budget, so we were told; at any rate, the House of Representatives passed a bill in conformity with the recommendations of the Treasury. The bill came to this body and we were proceeding to consider the bill when hurriedly one day the President sent the word "In 20 minutes I will be there." This body took a recess; the President all nervously excited came here and made a speech and told the Senate that the figures given by the Treasury were too small; that we could not balance the Budget if we accepted those figures; that we must accept a larger estimate of deficit. Then the Senate, acting through its Finance Committee, proceeded the same day to raise the rates, and the same day, if I remember correctly, we passed a bill recommended by the Treasury Department and the President to balance the Budget and exactly as the administration recommended. Yet after that bill was passed we now learn that our tax income is less this year than it was before the new tax measure was passed.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. George in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Another suggestion, as I recall, that was made by the Senator from Ohio yesterday was to the effect that before we could have any prosperity we must do something to restore confidence in the banks. I should like to remind the Senator of the testimony that was given by Mr.

Charles E. Mitchell yesterday to the effect that he had been drawing down bonuses and salary amounting to something like $3,000,000 in three years, and that he had sold his stock on one occasion to one of his relatives in order to avoid paying his income tax. The best way, it seems to me, I should say in answer to the Senator from Ohio, to restore confidence in the banks would be for them to remove these crooked presidents from the banks and treat them the same as Al Capone was treated when Capone avoided the payment of his income tax.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I thank the Senator from Montana. The Senator from Ohio said:

If we could proceed now to balance the Budget.

Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio has been a Member of the Senate for years; the Senate is still organized by his party; the committees are under the control of members of his party and of his administration. What recommendation have we for balancing the Budget? How can the Budget be balanced? "Why," some one says, "cut expenses"; somebody else perhaps might say, "Raise more taxes." From what source, however, can the Congress get more taxes? We could pass a sales tax bill, it is said. Perhaps we could; and if a sales tax bill were passed, placing a tax upon food, upon clothing, upon overalls, upon brogan shoes and cotton socks and hickory shirts, the things that the people eat and wear, it would raise some money; that is true; but, Mr. President, a sales tax has been considered in both branches of the Congress.

It has been proposed in the other branch of Congress and was turned down; it has been discussed in this branch; but, unless public sentiment changes, I make the prophecy now that it will be a long time before the Congress of the United States adopts a general sales-tax policy in order to balance the Budget. How, then, can the Budget be balanced? Here is what the Senator from Ohio says about the matter, and, at this particular point, I think he reasons logically. He says:

No manufacturer is going to increase his expenses in expanding his business and employing labor unless he knows that there is reasonable ground for him to believe that what he produces will be purchased, that he can sell it. If he can not sell what he makes, what is the use taking the risk?

That is a good argument. Why are the factories closed? Because the factories can not sell the commodities they are equipped to make; and when they can not sell them, of course, they will not make them. That is the condition today. The factories would like to reopen; the factories would like to be employing labor; the factories would like to be borrowers of money; but, because they can not sell the things they make, they do not dare to reopen their doors.

Why can not they sell their products? Because there is nobody to buy such products. Why is there no one to buy them? Because there is no one who has the gold, who has the credit, who has the currency, to make the purchases; and yet we heard the statement made yesterday that we had plenty of gold, plenty of currency, and plenty of credit.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. HATFIELD. The factories have no credit at the present time. In other words, their investments are frozen assets. Is that not true?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Exactly so. The factories have no credit. On yesterday the distinguished senior Senator from New York interrogated the Senator from Ohio, suggesting a criticism of the bankers for not loaning money. Mr. President, I am not a banker; I never was behind the counter of a bank; and yet I can not complain and criticize the bankers for not loaning money. Why are the banks not loaning money? The money in the vaults and on the books of the banks does not belong to the bank officials. The money in the banks belongs to the depositors of the banks. The bank officials are nothing more nor less than the custodians, the guardians, the trustees of the funds under their jurisdiction and control, and when bank officials loan these trust funds such officials should be sure that they will not only get their profit in the form of interest but in time that the principal will be paid back to them; and now what business in the country, what property in the country, is sufficiently secure and sufficiently prosperous upon which banks dare take the chance of making loans? I pause for a reply.

Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio is eminently correct in excusing the factories for not reopening; he is eminently correct and logical in explaining why they can not reopen and why they are not now open. They are not open because they can not sell their products, and, unless they can sell their products, they can not get money with which to pay for their raw materials and for their labor. Factories are not open and they can not reopen until times get better and a demand comes for the products they are equipped to make.

Then, Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio referred to one of his friends out in Ohio whose business is in the hands of a receiver, and the Senator from Ohio says:

Did not that man make a better product, which could be sold for less money, without a sacrifice of the wages of labor? He did. Then what is the matter? There were no purchasers, and that man's business is now in the hands of a receiver.

That is what has happened to the factories in Ohio; that is what has happened to the factories in Pennsylvania; that is what has happened to the factories scattered throughout the length and breadth of this land.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. FESS. The Senator from Ohio would like the Senator from Oklahoma not to make the statement that the factory referred to was in Ohio.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I accept the correction. The Senator did not state in his address yesterday in what State the factory was located, and I was reasoning by analogy. I am glad to make the correction.

Then, Mr. President, on the same page I find this state-

No man is going to be willing to risk the purchase of raw material to go into a manufactured product unless he knows that he is not to be forced to sell at a declining price instead of a rising price.

Mr. President, what causes receding prices; what causes falling prices? One thing is the deflation of money—making money scarce. When money becomes scarce it goes up in value, and as money goes up in value commodity prices go down. A generally falling market is predicated upon a rising dollar, and vice versa. So, Mr. President, if the Senator wants to help his friend reopen his factory and get it out of the hands of the receiver in my judgment, he should join the forces of the country who are in favor of reflation instead of urging and extenuating further deflation of the money of the country.

Under reflation, by placing more money in circulation, money becomes more plentiful, and as money becomes more plentiful it becomes cheaper, and as money becomes cheaper commodity prices go up in value. There is no argument contrary to that statement of an economic principle.

Then further, Mr. President, I find this statement:

Let me repeat-

Says the Senator from Ohio-

what I stated a moment ago; the plain duty of the Congress is to cut the expenses of the Government, without fear or favor, everywhere it can be done.

Of course, we are all in favor of that; there is no man anywhere who is not in favor of cutting the expenses of the Government where it can be done. The clause "where it can be done" is a saving limitation. The Senator in his argument says we can not cut the expenditures required to pay interest on the public debt. We have a public debt of $21,000,000,000, and that public debt carries a specified and specific rate of interest, and in order to preserve the credit of the Nation we must pay that interest. That sum can not be reduced, and the Senator does not propose to reduce it.

As a second proposition the Senator says we must continue to provide for our sinking fund. We have to raise now about half a billion dollars a year to be placed in the sinking fund so that as the bonds of the Government become due we will have a fund there to retire them. The Senator from Ohio is in favor this year of raising a half billion dollars to replenish the sinking fund so that the holders of the obligations of the Government may be assured that when their bonds mature there will be money available with which to redeem them.

Then the Senator from Ohio says, "We can not cut the Army appropriation, we can not cut the Navy appropriation, and we can not cut the Veterans' Administration appropriation."

Mr. President, the Senator says, "We must balance the Budget." We must do that by cutting appropriations; but we can not cut the interest on the public debt. We must still appropriate money to make up the sinking fund. We can not cut the Army appropriation. We can not cut the Navy appropriation. We can not cut the appropriation for the Veterans' Administration. What is left? Nothing but salaries and the little construction going on throughout the Nation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. We pay out a great deal of money in subsidies. As the Senator knows, the Senate Committee on Appropriations, and afterwards the Senate, cut off some of these subsidies—notably the air subsidies—and the House of Representatives and the representatives of the majority in this body put them back. We can cut off the subsidies if we will, but it seems that it is very difficult to get subsidies to the great interests even cut down, much less cut off.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the testimony shows—and I thank the Senator from Tennessee for making that suggestion—that we are making an appropriation of $19,000,000 each year to carry mail by airplane. It shows that the companies having these air mail contracts are financed from New York City. The biggest banks in New York City own and control, if not in toto, substantial portions of the financial structure of these great air lines. So, Mr. President, when the Congress proposes to cut down the subsidies for carrying mail we immediately run into the spider web yonder.

I call the attention of the Senate to that diagram up on the wall, something like 10 feet square. It shows a gigantic spider web. In the center of that spider web is the spider himself that wove it. At the top of that chart I find these words:

Spider web of Wall Street.

Mr. President, every web upon that chart leads out to a name in the circle; and the name is the name of some bank, some railroad company, some smelting company, some oil company, some transportation company, some ship line. There are 100 names, perhaps, upon that web; and there, in the center, is the spider.

I said in New York, a few nights ago, that the Congress of the United States was simply one of the clients of the big banking interests of New York City. I had never seen that map at that time; but that is the best contribution I have seen, the best argument to demonstrate the truth of my assertion, made a few nights ago in the great city of this Nation.

Again I read from the address made by the distinguished Senator from Ohio, on page 4582:

There would be for a little while an impetus that would cause an increase in commodity prices.

The Senator from Ohio was arguing that if money were put in circulation it would not increase prices.

You could increase the gold of the Republic, you could increase the silver of the Nation, you could throw billions upon billions of paper money into circulation and that would not increase commodity prices—

Says the Senator from Ohio. He says-

If you put this money in circulation we might have a little rise immediately, but then prices would start to go down, and they would go down and down and down until soon they would be lower than they are to-day.

I will read again:

There would be for a little while an impetus that would cause an increase in commodity prices, but that increase would soon be retarded, and the result would be that in a very short time we would be selling at a lower price than we are selling at the present time.

Mr. President, to prove that statement the Senator from Ohio quotes from a great former Secretary of the Treasury, John G. Carlisle.

I am going to quote from Mr. Carlisle the same words quoted yesterday and see whether or not this quotation sustains the argument undertaken to be made by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. Carlisle says—I am quoting from a part of the quotation read on yesterday—as follows:

Their wages-

Meaning the wages of wage earners-

Their wages will remain stationary, or at best they will rise slowly and at long intervals, while the prices of the necessities of life are liable to rise suddenly from day to day as the value of the currency changes.

Mr. Carlisle says that if we put money in circulation, it is true that salaries will not be raised immediately, that perhaps the wages of laborers will not be raised immediately; but if we put money in circulation, while salaries may not rise, commodities will rise, he suggests, violently, from day to day. They would if the increase were not controlled.

Then, again, says Mr. Carlisle:

And he must pay whatever prices are demanded in the market or go without food.

Yet the Senator from Ohio made the statement yesterday that we could increase our gold and increase our silver and increase our currency and yet prices would not go up, and he quoted Mr. Carlisle. Mr. Carlisle's whole question is just to the opposite effect—that while salaries will not be raised, while wages will not go up immediately, the moment we increase the currency of the country prices will go up, because money will come down; and one is the corollary of the other.

Then on the next page we find this, to me, amusing admission made by the Senator from Ohio. He said:

That is my position. Senators, that statement is incontrovertible. The laborer, representing 85 per cent of our population, is going to be harmed to the extent that the price of necessities increases.

On the previous page he said the prices would not increase; that they would go down. On the next page he says that if we put money in circulation, make money cheap, make money plentiful, wages will not go up, but the prices of commodities will go up and labor will be injured and destroyed.

This is the kind of "sound money" argument that has been made to the people for 15 years.

Again says the Senator from Ohio:

Here are $24,000,000,000 of American savings in the savings banks of this country. That is cash.

Mr. President, I know that the distinguished Senator from Ohio knows the difference between cash and credit. He did not mean that that $24,000,000,000 was cash. He could not have meant that it was cash. There are only nine billions of cash—gold, silver, and paper—in existence in the Nation. Take all the gold—that is four and a half billions—take all the silver, take all the paper money of all kinds that we have, and add it together and it makes nine billions and that is all. Yet the Senator from Ohio told the Senate on yesterday that the savings banks of the Nation have on deposit twenty-four billions of the hard-earned nickels and dimes and quarters and dollars of the washerwomen and the day laborers, and the street cleaners of the country—twenty-four billions in cash in the savings banks of the Republic.

Mr. President, to-night when the banks all close to balance their books—there are something like 20,000 banks remaining—when all those banks close in all the States, North and South, East and West, national banks and State banks and private banks, they will not have in their vaults the sum of $800,000,000 in cash; yet on yesterday we were told that the savings banks alone had on deposit twenty-four billions in cash!

On yesterday I presumed to call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to some misstatements that I thought he was making. He advised me that he was quoting from the record; that he did not take statements made upon the Senate floor. Mr. President, I now quote from the record.

I have here the text of the Annual Report of the Comptroller of the Currency, December 5, 1932. On page 75 of that report I find the following statistics, under the heading as follows:

Summary of reports of condition of all reporting banks in the United States and possessions by classes at the close of business June 30, 1932.

That was the 30th day of June of last year. On that date the Comptroller of the Currency reports that all the banks—national, State, and private—of all the country had cash in their vaults in gold and gold certificates and all other cash in the sum of $791,627,000. That is all the money that all the banks had in their vaults. Yet on yesterday there was made upon this floor the statement that the savings banks alone had 24 billions in cash in their vaults; and we have only a comparatively few savings banks!

That is a sample of the monetary education that the people of the country have had flaunted before them during the past 10, 12, or 15 years. It is no wonder that the country is befuddled. It is no wonder that upon this floor, when one starts to speak upon the money question, we have perhaps a dozen Senators present, and most of them holding private conversations and conferences and conventions.

Mr. President, on the next page of this authority—and I take it to be authority, because it comes from one of the agents of the administration still in power—we have a report of the division of the money that is now in the banks. The banks had only $791,000,000. That is less than $1,000,000,000. While all the banks together to-night have 40 billions on deposit, such deposits are only credit money. To-night they will have less than $800,000,000—less than $1,000,000,000—of real gold and real silver and real paper money in their vaults when the books are balanced.

According to this publication, on the 30th day of June last these banks all together had in their vaults, and on their books, the sum of $45,390,269,000 in deposits. That is the total amount of credit money that they had on their books. That is deposit money. That is credit—credit based upon two notes, two debts: First, the debts that the people incurred when they went to the bank to create this deposit money. It used to be easy and simple to create credit or deposit money.

A merchant or farmer went to a bank to borrow money In former times the banks would loan money. They would hand out a note for $1,000 for example for the farmer or merchant to sign. The farmer or merchant signed the $1,000 note. Then the bank clerk, cashier, teller, president, or whoever it might be, would take the pass book of the depositor and enter therein the date and "$1,000." So when that simple transaction was completed, the borrower had signed a note for 30, 60, or 90 days, and the bank clerk had placed on the customer's pass book "$1,000." Then, there was created $1,000 of deposit money. Under the law, the customer had the right and the privilege of converting his property, his collateral, either with or without mortgage, his good name for prompt payment, into deposit money: and when that was done, this bank had on deposit $1,000 more money, deposit money, than it had before the transaction was begun.

The Senator from Ohio thinks that is money. He thinks that is cash. He thinks that is gold. He thinks that is silver. He thinks that is currency. It is not either. It is only credit or deposit money based upon the note of the borrower; but when the note was signed and accepted, the deposit was made and entered upon the pass book, and the bank had $1,000 more on deposit than before the transaction was completed.

When such a transaction has been completed, there are two debts; first, the debt the farmer or the merchant owes the bank; and, second, the debt the bank owes the farmer or merchant, because at will the farmer or merchant can write his check on all or any part of the thousand dollars. Under the law of averages, like the laws which control life insurance, only a certain percentage of the public, with a certain amount of deposits, will want currency. They write checks; they do not want gold. If they have a deposit in a bank, they do not want silver, and perhaps not currency. They want the opportunity of writing checks against their credit or deposit money. But if such a depositor wants the actual money, it is there for him. They could not all get their money in cash, in gold or silver or paper. The law of averages are such that only a few require it. That is the reason why the law requires the banks to carry in their vaults only a small percentage of their actual deposits in

Mr. President, on the first of last July the banks had $45,000,000,000 on deposit. But they have not that much to-day. In the past few months, since last July, the deposits have been gradually going down and down and down; and while I do not have authentic figures, I venture the suggestion that these banks to-night, when they close their doors for balancing, will not have on their books more than some $40,000,000,000 of deposit money. They have been losing at the rate of $5,000,000,000 a year in the last three years. The deposits were $60,000,000,000. They are down in three years to $45,000,000,000. I contend and assert that the withdrawal of this deposit money in the last 12 months would be approximately the same, so that to-night, instead of these banks having on deposit what they had last June, they have lost $5,000,000,000 more of the deposit money; it is gone; and to-night when the banks close they will have around $40,000,000,000 of deposit money on their books and less than $800,000,000 of real gold or silver in their vaults.

How is that deposit money divided? I am still reading from the report. On the 30th of June last there were demand deposits of $14,327,000,000 and there were time deposits in the sum of $24,774,000,000.

Mr. President, these time deposits are not subject to check. The money can be withdrawn upon notice, but of the $45,000,000,000 in the banks last June there were $24,774,-000,000 under time-deposit certificates. Of the $45,000,000,000 of deposit money in all the banks of the Nation on the 1st of July, $24,000,000,000 of it was tied up in time deposits, not subject to check, no doubt most of it on interest. It is in the bank for a certain specified time, and of the $45,000,-000,000, $16,000,000,000 was on demand deposit, subject to check, to be used at any time.

Mr. President, I place these figures in the Record in answer to the statement made yesterday that just the savings banks had $24,000,000,000 in cash in their yaults.

Again, let me call attention to another statement made by the distinguished Senator from Ohio. I quote from page 4583:

First, Mr. President, there is enough gold.

In the opinion of the distinguished Senator from Ohio, the country has plenty of gold, and we do not need more gold. I would like to ask him who has plenty of gold? I would like to have him name one person who has plenty of gold. The banks do not have plenty of gold. At least 12,000 of them have been forced to suspend because they did not have plenty of gold, did not have any gold or silver or paper, and had run out of currency entirely. Twelve thousand banks have been forced to suspend in the past few years. But the Senator from Ohio says there is enough gold. Second, he says there is enough currency; and, third, he says there are the reserves of the Federal reserve banks in abundance.

If there is plenty of gold and plenty of currency and plenty of silver and plenty of Federal reserve bank reserves, there should not be any trouble about having plenty of money. But who can get the money? The unemployed can not get it, the farmers can not get it, and the merchants can not get it. These banks which have been forced to fail could not get the money. Who has this plentiful supply of gold? Who has this surplus of currency?

Mr. President, what is the trouble? If there is plenty of gold, if there is plenty of silver, if there is plenty of currency, and if there is plenty of credit, what is the trouble? Nobody has any confidence. There is a minus quantity of confidence in the country, but if we just had confidence the dawn of a new day would come immediately, so says the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. President, how are we to get that confidence? The Senator from Ohio says that if we will just balance the Budget, confidence will come from somewhere and will shine upon us. All we have to do is to get confidence; that is the thing we need. We have plenty of gold, plenty of currency, plenty of bank reserves, and plenty of credit, and if we can just balance the Budget that will give us confidence, and then if we have confidence the economic world will be saved.

How does the Senator propose to balance the Budget? He has no proposition. He made this statement, which appears on page 4583 of the RECORD—

But I must resist with all the energy I possess all these threatening proposals looking to undermining sound principles of government.

Are our sound principles of government now to be undermined? Who is responsible for these sound principles of government which we have had for at least the past 12 years? The distinguished Senator, a leader of his party, the nominator of Presidents, the maker of Presidents, the presiding officer of great conventions which have named Presidents, the chairman of the great committee which wielded such power over the affairs and destinies of this Nation. He says that if we can maintain our sound principles of government, can acquire confidence, and a balanced Budget, the Nation can be saved.

Mr. President, he resolves his speech into advice to the incoming President, and says that if the incoming President will take that advice perhaps that will bring back confidence. That advice is, Do not tamper with our existing sound money.

Mr. President, if we are to keep the existing so-called sound dollar, we are to keep a dollar that buys 200 cents worth of the farmers' products. Can the farmers live under such a program? It is utterly impossible. Because they have to-day to get a 200-cent dollar to pay their taxes, because they have to get a 200-cent dollar to pay their interest, because they have to get a 200-cent dollar to pay a dollar of debts farmers can not raise enough money through the sale of their products to get these high-priced dollars to pay their taxes, and as the result their taxes are not being paid. They can not pay their interest, and interest is not being paid, and because interest is not being paid, there are foreclosures everywhere throughout the land.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator from Ohio on yesterday stated that if the incoming President would issue a statement to the effect that there would be no tampering with our money, that would do more to help business than anything else. I want to ask the Senator if it is not a fact, notwithstanding the fact that President Hoover stated repeatedly that we were going to remain on the gold standard and that there would be no tampering, that business has constantly during his entire term of office gotten worse and worse?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the present President delivered his farewell in New York a few nights ago, and I quote from one paragraph of that to-be-historic address. He said:

An organization that can show more than 15,000,000 adherents after 70 years—an irreducible minimum in the reaction from the worst depression the world has ever seen—is indeed testimony to the virility of the principles which Lincoln enunciated.

In that statement the President admitted that under his four years of administration, under the four years of his predecessor, and under the four years of the administration before that, 12 years of Republican administration, under the guidance of the distinguished Senator from Ohio, we to-day have the worst depression in history.

Then he said further on in that to-be-historic address:

We find some 44 countries definitely off the gold standard.

Further he said:

The United States has held stanchly to the gold standard.

And again:

We have thereby maintained one Gibraltar of stability in the world and contributed to check the movement to chaos

Mr. President, it is possible to get nearer chaos than we are to-day, and if we follow the program that has been followed for the past 12 years, and if the next administration takes the advice of the distinguished Senator from Ohio, that chaos is as sure to come as time.

We can not exist under this formula of government. We can not exist under sound money as defined by the Senator from Ohio. A great party of the Nation, following those principles, has passed away. Let me say that if the administration coming into power in a few days chooses to follow the program and the policies and the principles of the past administration, we will just as surely come to the same inglorious end to which the other great party and the other great administration came. If we do not change the existing policies, there will be no hope for the people, no hope for the wage earners, no hope for farmers, no hope for merchants, no hope for factories, no hope for cities, no hope for States, no hope for this great Government of the United States founded by Washington, whose birthday we celebrate to-day by reading his farewell address delivered 137 years ago.

Mr. President, if the party coming into power chooses to follow the leadership emanating from the bankers of New York, our doom is sealed.

The power of that spider pictured yonder on the Senate wall still rules. The only change has been that the solicitors for that spider have been changed.

Now let me call attention to some quotations taken from a magazine published in Wall Street. When a magazine of Wall Street makes an admission, I take it that at least it will bear the scrutiny and the consideration of the Senate of the United States, because some of us get most of our inspiration from Wall Street. Any time Wall Street wants a bill passed, they send a suggestion down to Washington, and we are kept here sometimes until midnight to pass the bill. If Wall Street is opposed to legislation pending in the Congress, it can not be gotten out of a committee, and it can not be gotten before the Senate for consideration, and it has no chance of passage.

Mr. President, I am going to call some witnesses to testify in opposition to the case made yesterday by the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. Fess]. I call first the magazine of Wall Street. On page 464 I find the following language:

Being denied access to regular money as a medium of exchange, they have created their own. Yet they Meaning the people of the United States.

Yet they had far greater buying power and social efficiency before they were cast out because society couldn't keep its economic machine going full time, although they were competent to pay their own way and more. If a foreign power should undertake to annex a territory inhabited by one-fifth of our people and cut us from all commercial relations with it, we would fight as we have never fought before. But for the time being we face substantially the same condition except that we are spending hundreds of millions of dollars to support the economic expatriates. It doesn't make sense.

I commend that to the attention of the distinguished Senator from Ohio. Plenty of gold, plenty of currency, plenty of credit, but because we have so much gold and currency and credit the people are forced to go to the printing presses and have slips of paper printed, to go to the may have taken a valise full of paper money to buy a sack woodpile and get pieces of wood and have shavings therefrom printed stipulating that one represents a dime and another one represents 25 cents.

Let me next call as a witness a distinguished former citizen of my State, now a resident of California, Will Rogers. On February 16, only a few days ago, Will Rogers said:

This depression must have finally hit the Senate. The Senators are investigating it. If they want to know what is holding back relief measures, all they have to do is look in the mirror.

Mr. President, let me next call attention to a few paragraphs from an address delivered at Miami, Fla., just a few nights ago. This address is destined to be likewise an historic address. It was delivered by the chairman of the National Democratic Party, Mr. James A. Farley. In that Miami address, delivered I think on Saturday night, February 11. Mr. Farley said:

I know that our people to-day are in no mood for delay. They feel that a liberal government is the crying need of the present. We must not deny them this liberal government.

In our realization of the failure of conservatism, we should speedily liberalize our institutions and do everything in our power within the restrictions of constitutional safeguards to make it easier for people to live from their own resources.

If Mr. Farley's advice is to have any weight in the policymaking branch of the Nation, instead of following the policies in force for the past 4 or 8 or 12 years, there will be a change. Instead of making a dollar worth 200 cents in 1933, which was worth only 50 cents in 1922, a liberal policy would be to take the advance of the buying power of the dollar and instead of leaving it at 200 cents in value of corn, wheat, and livestock, the buying power of that dollar will be brought down to at least 100 cents, where it was in 1926. At that time the dollar had a sufficient buying power to buy wheat on the basis of $1.50 a bushel, cotton at the rate of 20 cents a pound, corn at 75 or 80 cents a bushel, and livestock in proportion. That is all I am asking. I am simply pleading for a governmental policy that will check the rise of the American dollar-not only check it, but bring it back down where the people of the Nation can have a chance to see some of those dollars occasionally. I commend the Miami address of Mr. Farley to those on my side of the aisle in the Senate of the United States.

Mr. President, I said a moment ago that when the administration changes, we see a change in the solicitors coming down from New York, and sometimes that is the only change we see. Let me read from a statement made by one of those new solicitors from Wall Street:

Wholesale prices are reaching what appears to be a normal

That is the language of the new solicitor. Wholesale prices are getting down to about where the normal level should be. He does not mention farm commodities, but if wholesale prices are coming down to where they should be, no doubt farm products are getting down where they should be-corn selling at 12 cents a bushel, oats selling in the far West for 7 cents a bushel, cotton selling for 5 cents a pound, hogs at 21/2 cents a pound, beef cattle at 2.75 cents per pound, and wheat for 25 cents a bushel. When those prices go lower we will be down to a proper level-so says by inference the new solicitor from Wall Street.

I want to refer to one other statement of this article found in the New York Times of last Sunday. This argument is against inflation of money. It is against the inflation of money, because if money is placed in circulation it becomes more plentiful, and to the extent that it becomes more plentiful to that extent it becomes cheaper, and as it becomes cheaper commodities become cheaper; and the argument would follow, of necessity, that if enough money shall be placed in circulation to make money come down in value commodities will go up. This new Wall Street solicitor says:

It would do as it did in Germany when it took a valise full of paper marks to buy a sack of flour.

Mr. President, I was not in Germany at that time. It of flour, but what is the difference between taking a valise full of paper marks to buy a sack of flour and taking a truck load of wheat to buy a dollar? I am not advocating the German system of inflation. There is no occasion for that. Other countries are not going to the German system of inflation. Italy did not go that route, although Italy did revaluate her lira and reduced its buying power from 19.3 to 5.5 cents. France did not go that route, although France did reduce the buying power of the French franc from 19.3 to 3.91. Great Britain is not going that route. Great Britain has gone from the gold standard. A paper pound based upon gold was worth $4.85. Great Britain went off the gold standard and immediately the paper pound fell to $3.17. It is now being stabilized, with little gold back of it, around $3.40. If Great Britain and the British financiers are able to stabilize the buying power of the pound off the gold standard, then we here in America ought to be able to stabilize the buying power of the dollar on the gold standard.

Mr. President, I have been doing the best I could for a year, arguing and pleading for more money to be placed in circulation. I could not get any response here. Perhaps I should not have expected such response. It took me a long time to find it out. Senators will not even listen. But after a year's time we are getting results. Even in the State of Ohio the demands from the constituency of the distinguished Senator who spoke on yesterday are so many in number and they are writing him so many letters that he can not answer them, and so he had to make a two and a half hour speech in the Senate yesterday to answer the thousands of demands being received from his constituency for more money to be placed in circulation.

Mr. President, I am going to demonstrate from the record that the demand for more money is resulting in having more money, and having more money is resulting in a check of deflation and even an increase in commodity prices. Here are the facts. For the week ending January 19 the Federal reserve system placed in circulation the sum of $13,000,000 of new money. Circulation was increased in those seven days by the sum of $13,000,000. During the week ending January 25, the following week, the Federal reserve system placed in circulation $9,000,000 of new money. In the week ending on the 2d day of February the Federal reserve system placed in circulation $41,000,000 of new money. In the week ending on February 9-this is all recent, just a few days ago-the Federal reserve system placed in circulation the sum of $53,000,000 of new money. Last week, during the seven days prior to February 16, the Federal reserve system placed in circulation the sum of $149,000,000 of new money. There are five weeks, and in those five weeks the Federal reserve system placed in circulation an additional sum of $265,000,000 of new money. In other words, in those five weeks the circulation was increased by over a quarter of a billion dollars.

Has that done any good? Let me give the record. I have here a news story under a headline, as follows:

Circulation highest in history.

It then proceeds to give substantially the facts I have just asserted. Then I have a second news story, of date February 18, a New York Times dispatch. I find the story under the following heading:

Price recession halts.

Immediately that money is going into circulation, making money more plentiful, making it cheaper, the downward trend of prices is being halted.

Price recession halts.

The next heading:

Commodities hold steady for first time since December.

Then in the body of the news story I find this language: Money in circulation again increases.

Then down a little farther:

The extended decline in wholesale prices was halted for the first time since early December.

Mr. President, I have been contending upon the floor of the Senate for two years for more money to be placed in circulation, and now when the circulation starts up the papers of the country are forced to carry legitimate evidence of increased prices and halt in the decline. I call attention now to another page of the New York Times of February 19. I will merely read the headlines of the first column:

Some trade lines gain moderately. Steel industry improves and wholesalers report larger volume of business. Apparel sales advance.

I find another headline as follows:

Cotton up again as supplies drop. Gains are 3 to 6 points.

Another headline reads:

Freight loadings rise 3.8 per cent in week.

Mr. President, if placing that small additional amount of money in circulation has made money more plentiful, has made it cheaper, and it has had the result that we notice from a paper of last week, why should not the policy be continued? It will take a lot of money right now to raise prices as they should be raised. A quarter of a billion dollars will not do it. It may take a half a billion dollars; it may take three-quarters of a billion dollars; it may take a billion of dollars; it may take two billion dollars; but we have the money in the Treasury by the billions, being aged, seasoned, and made ready for circulation.

Then, Mr. President, we have heard a lot about setting the printing presses to work to print money. Let me read from a news story appearing in a newspaper during the past two or three days. Here is something that will shock the sensibilities of the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], and which, no doubt, will shock the sensibilities of the distinguished senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS], who now presides over this body. We have heard it stated that if inflation comes the printing presses will have to be worked overtime; that they will have to be worked day and night in order to take care of the situation. Mr. President, during the past two years the printing presses have been working overtime, not in printing money but in printing bonds-$5,000,000,000 of them-which are drawing interest which the people must pay. What is the difference between working the printing presses to print bonds and working them to print money? But that is not all. Listen:

Engravers toil on rush order for bank notes-

I am reading from a news story-

Urgent demands from the Federal Reserve Board for bank notes of 10 and 20 dollars' denominations yesterday kept presses at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing working overtime.

Day and night shifts were ordered put to work by Director Alvin

Day and night shifts were ordered put to work by Director Alvin Hall, and 225 employees who ordinarily would be off to-day were instructed to be on hand instructed to be on hand.

Mr. Hall said it would probably be a week before all the currency ordered by the reserve board is printed.

The Federal Reserve Board refused to disclose why the currency was needed so hastily. It was reported the bank notes are being rushed to meet the banking crisis in one of the States.

The printing presses are running. They have been running for two years and they are running now night and day. but, Mr. President, if by running the printing presses money can be placed in circulation and commodity prices can be raised, I shall not object. The price of wheat is 25 cents a bushel; the farmers can not live and sell wheat at 25 cents a bushel; the price of corn is 12 cents a bushel, and the farmers can not live raising corn at 12 cents a bushel; oats are 7 cents a bushel, and the farmers can not live raising oats at 7 cents a bushel. These prices must be raised. Cotton must be raised above 5 cents a pound, hogs must be raised above 21/2 cents a pound, and cattle must be raised above 3 cents a pound, or the farmers can not live. If running the printing presses for a little while will give us more money in circulation, and if more money in circulation will raise the price of corn and raise the price of cotton and raise the price of hogs and raise the price of cattle, then, Mr. President, I hope the printing presses will be continued in operation until these prices are sufficiently high to enable the people of the Nation at least to live. Yet on yesterday for two and a half hours the distinguished Senator from Ohio, who is now presiding over the Senate, argued against increased prices, if I interpret his argument correctly. He said in his speech, "If you raise prices that will cause the wage earner, the salaried man, to pay more for the things he eats and more for the things he wears." That is the issue, Mr. President. That spider yonder [indicating chart on the wall], representing Wall Street, wants cotton cheaper; that spider wants corn cheaper; that spider wants meat cheaper; hogs and cattle cheaper. So say the solicitors from that section of the United States.

It is significant in support of the argument I have just made, that by reason of placing more money in circulation, a quarter of a billion dollars of it, during the past five weeks the decline has been halted and prices are now going

I exhibit here now a chart from the New York Times. This chart was published on Sunday, February 19, which is only a few days ago. It is headed:

Weekly business index shows slight upturn.

There is the answer to what I have been arguing for for two years, Mr. President. Car loadings increased; the decline of wholesale prices checked. I hope the prices of farm commodities are now going up somewhat; but here is the proof of the principles and the theories to which I have been trying for two years to have the leaders of both sides of this body and some in places outside the Senate Chamber listen.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President-

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield to the Senator from

Mr. LONG. The slight betterment to which the Senator referred took place after an inflation of about $250,000,000 in the currency, which was put out from the Federal Reserve banks; money that they had called in.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It is money placed in circulation by the Federal reserve banks during the past five weeks. In other words, the circulation has been increased during the past five weeks by the total sum of $265,000,000.

Mr. LONG. I want to suggest that the Senator from Oklahoma, the Senator from Montana, and the Senator from Texas had to speak here for nearly three weeks in order to get $250,000,000 of inflation. If the Senator will continue his remarks for about nine more weeks we might get more real results along this line.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, on the 4th of March, if I am here, I will have a new commission in this body, and that commission will last for six years. I am convinced that economically there is no chance for the wage earners to live, economically there is no chance for the farmers to live, economically there is no chance for the merchant to live; there is no chance for the cities to live and for the counties to live and for the States to live and the Government to live unless the buying power of the dollar shall be brought down to a reasonable figure so that the commodities, the products of the people of the country, when they are sold may bring sufficient money to cover not only the cost of production but, in addition, a reasonable profit.

Mr. President, the Committee on Finance have been holding some hearings. Those hearings should have started 40 months ago, but they started about two weeks ago. Those hearings are for the purpose of having experts so named, so designated, to come before the committee and advise the committee what should be done, if anything, to lift us out of this terrific depression. A former mayor of New York, Mr. John F. Hylan, testified before that committee; I do not happen to know the gentleman except by reputation; I do not know whether he is a "hard money" Democrat or a "soft money" Democrat; I do not know his standing in New York; but the committee thought enough of his reputation, standing, and judgment to invite him to appear before the great Finance Committee. Mr. Hylan came and testified. I have a news story purporting to give a synopsis of what he said. I read:

John F. Hylan, former Democratic mayor of New York City, preceded Duffield on the stand and charged a "conspiracy" exists among the "big bankers" to dominate industry throughout the world.

Hylan declared that "not satisfied with control of the mone metal, gold, the big bankers have set out to secure of the production and distribution of the necessities of life."

The Federal reserve system has been perverted into a tool through which the credit and currency of America are ruthlessly exploited by a powerful banking group, the witness declared. He continued:

"The system is being manipulated so as to give us a financial government of the banks, by the banks, and for the banks.

"In enforcing their international equilibrium policy by the forcible reduction of the prices of commodities, the international bankers and their allies are reducing the wages of American workmen to the level of the pauper labor of Europe.

"The distribution of doles seems to be a part of the scheme to keep the people quiet while the surgeon is performing the operation."

Hylan asserted that the bankers deliberately fanned the flames of the gigantic stock market boom prior to October, 1929, in order to "unload upon the people stocks and bonds at highly inflated prices." He added:
"The bankers got real money for this paper."
Hylan accused the Federal Reserve Board and its member banks of direct complicity in a scheme by international bankers to corner the world's gold supply. He demanded:

"Who can deny that the Federal reserve administration, in cooperation with the central bankers of Europe, was utilized to secure control of gold to regulate circulation of all kinds of money, currency, and credit in this country and abroad?

"Who will contend that the system has been administered in the interest of legitimate business and industry?"

CALLED "GREATEST SHAM"

Hylan asserted that the plan to induce foreign governments to adopt the gold standard, "successfully operated all over the world," was "the greatest sham of the ages."

Mr. President, I desire to place in the RECORD some further statistics, but before doing so I want to quote a statement purported to have emanated from a former distinguished President of the United States, James A. Garfield. He is alleged at one time to have said:

Whoever controls the volume of money of any country is absolute master of all industry and commerce.

Mr. President, I call attention again to that chart hanging on the wall [indicating]. That spider, if it controls those various organizations named on the chart, is able to control the policies of those hundreds of institutions located throughout the length and breadth not only of this land but of the world. There are three banks in New York City, Mr. President, which are called "the Big Three." I have here an Associated Press dispatch which so designates them:

Big three New York banks close year with $5,000,000,000.

So says the press dispatch. I will place the entire dispatch in the RECORD at this point, if I may have permission to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

BIG THREE NEW YORK BANKS CLOSE YEAR WITH FIVE BILLIONS

New York, January 7.—With combined resources of nearly $5,000,000,000, the big three New York banks wound up 1932 in unusually liquid condition.

unusually liquid condition.

Their year-end statements, considered fairly typical of the larger banks, show gains in deposits over the preceding quarter, increased holdings of Government securities and cash, and virtually no change in capital, surplus, and undivided profits accounts.

Chase National continued to hold the ranking of world's largest bank. It had resources of $1,856,290,000. National City, with $1,615,260,000, was second. Guaranty Trust Co., a State-chartered institution, held third ranking in size, with resources of $1,410,786,000. 786,000

Deposits stood as follows: Chase, $1,466,038,000; National City, Deposits stood as follows: Chase, $1,466,038,000; National City, $1,299,377,000; and Guaranty, $1,018,967,000.

In combined capital, surplus, and undivided profits, Guaranty Trust led the group with $271,233,000. Chase had $259,130,000 and National City $205,454,000.

Government security holdings of Guaranty were almost equal to those of Chase and City combined. Guaranty had $527,071,000 of United States paper, against $364,536,000 for City and $214,996,000 for Chase for Chase.

Chase had $391.297.000 cash on hand, against $300.619.000 for

City and $197,891,000 for Guaranty.

The loan accounts showed that nearly $2,000,000,000 of their total resources of about $5,000,000,000 were outstanding in the form of loans.

Of Chase's $1,856,290,000 resources, $887,187,000, or 48 per cent, were in loans. Of National City's $1,615,260,000 resources, $619,791,000, or 38 per cent, were in loans.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to some of the figures presented by this dispatch. It is shown that the total resources of these three banks, the Chase National Bank being the largest, the National City Bank being the second, and the Guaranty Trust Co. being the third, are $4,882,136,000.

That is the amount, Mr. President, of the resources as measured in dollars, but each one of those dollars has the buying power of 200 cents. So for every dollar of the resources of these three banks there are $2 in buying power. So in order to get the power of these three banks, multiply the $4,882,136,000 by 2 and we get the enormous sum representing the buying power of the three banks in New York City approximating $10,000,000,000.

Then, Mr. President, this dispatch further gives the information that these three banks own together the sum of $1,106,603,000 of Government bonds. Each dollar represented by those bonds has a buying power in the sum of $2. So if they own $1,106,603,000 of Governments bonds, they have a buying power through those bonds of double that sum, or two and one-fourth billion dollars.

Mr. President, if the dollar were cheapened it would take away from these three banks some of their buying power. If the dollar could be reduced from 200 cents down to 100 cents, there would be taken from these three banks alone $5,000,000,000 worth of buying power. If we reduce the buying power of the dollar from 200 cents to 100 cents, we take from these billion bonds that these three banks hold the sum of $1,106,000,000 of buying power. No wonder these banks do not want the dollar decreased in buying power, but want it increased!

Instead of placing money in circulation, these banks want money taken out of circulation. They want to make money scarce, to make money dear, to make its buying power high, so that their resources of $5,000,000,000, instead of buying $5,000,000,000 worth of commodities on their equitable value, will buy $10,000,000,000 of value, will buy $15,000,000,000 of value. They would even double it again and make it buy $20,000,000,000 of value.

I am trying to show you, if I may, the reason why these big banks located in New York City are opposing the cheapening of the dollar. When it is cheapened it takes buying power from their hands, and that is the reason they oppose the cheapening of the dollar.

Mr. President, we hear it said frequently upon this floor that if we should be forced off the gold standard we would have an uncontrolled currency. That did not happen in Great Britain. A year or two ago Great Britain went off the gold standard. When Great Britain went off the gold standard they could only manage the buying power by placing money in circulation, and, when money became too plentiful, withdrawing money from circulation. That is a simple process. We can do it here. We are doing it every day. During the last five weeks we placed a quarter of a billion dollars in circulation, and we can take it out in the next five weeks.

Some one might say, "How can money be taken from circulation?" Here is a simple process.

The Federal reserve banks, under the supervision of the Federal Reserve Board, now hold in their vaults something like $1,800,000,000 worth of United States bonds. All they have to do to take money from circulation is to sell a billion dollars of bonds, or $1,500,000,000 of bonds, whatever they want to, collect the money on the sale, and take it out of circulation. It is just like a sponge. The board has the power to put money in circulation, as it did during the last five weeks. It has the power to take money out of circulation as readily and as quickly as it had the right and power to put it in circulation, by selling bonds and requiring the buyers of bonds to pay, not in credit or checks but in currency—gold, silver, and paper.

Mr. President, at this point I desire to place in the RECORD one paragraph from an article appearing in one of the great publications of the country of recent date. It is an article signed by John Maynard Keynes. This Mr. Keynes is a famous British economist and financial authority. He is writing from London. He says:

The countries which are off gold have had more stable prices; their exchanges have settled down at a figure at which their export industries can live in relation to world competition; and their central banks, freed from the task of having to protect their gold reserves, can, without any anxiety, maintain low rates of interest and abundant credit suited to their domestic needs.

Now, Mr. President, I want to place in the RECORD some of the plans for relief.

The plan of the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. Fess] is to balance the Budget, but he does not tell us how it is going to be done. I desire to place in the Record at this time, if I may have permission, a story signed by Ray Tucker, appearing in a local paper of recent date.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

[From the Washington Daily News of Thursday, February 16, 1933]

DEBT SLASH SENTIMENT GAINS GROUND ON HILL—RELIEF OF BURDENED INDIVIDUALS AND CORPORATIONS MAY REPLACE RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION POLICY OF BOLSTERING PRESLUMP VALUATIONS

By Ray Tucker

Sentiment for downward revision of corporate and individual indebtedness instead of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation policy of propping up corporations on the basis of predepression values appeared to-day to be gaining headway rapidly in Congress and among leaders of business and industry.

Although the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may be utilized by President Roosevelt as an agency for financing relief and public works, it is believed that means for Federal assistance in a gradual and orderly scaling down of the Nation's burden of indebtedness will be proposed.

This question will be raised in acute form within the next few

This question will be raised in acute form within the next few days in and out of Congress. The Wagner bill for liberalizing Reconstruction Finance Corporation relief and self-liquidating policies will be taken up by the Senate soon.

To-morrow mayors of 100 large cities, headed by Mayor Frank Murphy, of Detroit, will try to obtain Reconstruction Finance Corporation aid in marketing municipal bonds.

HOUSE BILL MEETS PLAN

The idea of cutting the mountain of debt is carried out with respect to railroads and individuals in the LaGuardia measure as passed by the House.

The report of the National Transportation Committee declared that railroads are "not entitled to earnings to preserve present structures, if overcapitalized." Bernard M. Baruch, Roosevelt adviser, has proposed a program for cutting down farm mortgages and plans to extend the idea to other forms of inflated indebtedness.

Several leading industrialists and financiers appearing before the Senate Finance Committee have condemned the Reconstruction Finance Corporation policy of trying to preserve "vanished values," as Baruch put it.

WOULD LEAVE WEAK FAIL

Senator Glass (Democrat, Virginia), who may be the next Secretary of the Treasury, has bitterly condemned the Reconstruction Finance Corporation's use of Federal funds. In his opinion, recovery can be hastened by permitting unstable, unnecessary, and inefficient corporations to fail, thereby reducing the burden of debt piled up on an artificial level in the boom years.

It his contention that depositors often lose rather than gain

It his contention that depositors often lose rather than gain from Reconstruction Finance Corporation aid to banks. More than 500 have failed after receiving Federal funds, with most of their assets going to the Government. It is Glass's contention the depositors would have recovered more money had the banks been permitted to go under in the first instance.

depositors would have recovered more money had the banks been permitted to go under in the first instance.

Even Senator Reen (Republican, Pennsylvania), who led the fight for passage of Reconstruction Finance Corporation legislation, now says his vote was a "mistake." He thinks the effort to save many corporations and institutions by pouring good money after bad has "postponed recovery."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I shall not take the time to read this article, but it presumes to quote the distinguished junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Glass] and likewise the distinguished senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Reed]. They both apparently have come to the conclusion that the way to get us out of this difficulty is not to balance the Budget but to let all the weak banks fail, to get them out of the way; to let all the weak corporations fail, to get them out of the way; to quit making loans to them, and the sooner they are in bankruptcy and out of the way the better it will be for the Nation to get these weak institutions, corporations, and individuals out of the way. Let the men now employed by them, who then will be unemployed, starve to death. Then we can start at the bottom and build up

Now I am going to quote very briefly from letters received from eminent economists, taken from all parts of the United States.

The distinguished Senator from Ohio is against raising prices. He says we can not raise prices by putting money in circulation; that that drives prices down; and his argument is, according to my interpretation of it, that we should not raise prices. That is the New York idea—that we should not raise prices; they are about down to where they ought to be.

These economists do not take that view of the situation. I quote first from Mr. F. A. Pearson, of Cornell University. I read simply one or two lines from his letter, as follows:

I think that most of our troubles would be eliminated if we could restore prices to the 1926 level and maintain that level.

I quote next from Mr. G. F. Warren, an eminent economist of Cornell University. I read one paragraph from his letter:

There is just about enough gold in the world to support prewar prices if gold were used with pre-war efficiency. Such efficiency is, however, not to be expected for some years. Our debt, tax, and business structure became fairly well adjusted to the price level 40-50 per cent above pre-war. We are now confronted with the necessity of either lowering of this whole structure or making a definite monetary change which will raise prices. There is considerable question as to whether we can, even if we wish, succeed in completing the deflation process. The Nation has never before attempted any such violent decapitalization. In the panic of 1873 commodity prices fell 18 per cent in three years. This time they fell 30 per cent in three years. The decapitalization in 1873 was bad enough. This must, of course, be far worse.

The next economist comes from the University of Minnesota. I read from a letter just received from Alvin H. Hansen, professor of economics. I will read just one or two lines from his letter:

I should favor a rise of prices of about 20 per cent-

Says Mr. Hansen.

I next call attention to a letter received from Mr. John Ise, department of economics, University of Kansas. These letters are all of recent date. Mr. Ise says:

I have been a reflationist since this depression struck, and it seems to me that your scheme would help bring back prosperity. I am not certain that there is any hope of getting out of it on the present price level. I am not certain that our capitalist system can stand many years of this situation, and I am fairly certain that, if prices do not rise, we will have an indefinite period of stagnation. In other words, it seems to me that a scheme such as you outline is about our only hope.

scheme such as you outline is about our only hope.

With this should be combined a drastic income tax, to secure greater equalization of wealth, a comprehensive scheme of public improvements to get the money out into the hands of those who need goods, and a drastic reduction of the tariff, to start foreign trade once more. Such a general policy would get us out in a short time, I believe.

I call attention next to a letter signed by John B. Canning, professor of economics, Stanford University. I will read just one sentence:

I concur in your belief that a moderate degree of inflation of the price level should be brought about as part of any program that looks to immediate beginning of recovery.

I next call attention to an article prepared by Paul H. Douglas, of the department of economics of the University of Chicago. Mr. Douglas has prepared an article that is published in the World Tomorrow of date February 8, 1933. Mr. Douglas writes as follows:

There is to-day a rapidly growing body of opinion that the amount of monetary purchasing power should be increased and prices raised.

Mr. President, these economists do not agree with the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. Fess]. He says prices should not be raised, and that even putting money in circulation would not raise prices; that putting money in circulation would drive prices down. If that should be the case, that spider in Wall Street would be favorable to putting more money in circulation, to make prices go still farther and farther down.

Again, says Mr. Douglas:

During the depression there has been a cumulative and vicious spiral of declining prices, production, employment, and monetary brains the Nation produces, or the world produces, because purchasing power, with the result that the depression has fed upon itself and steadily deepened.

There was quite an argument yesterday as to what "purchasing power" meant. The Senator from Ohio said money is not purchasing power; gold is not purchasing power; silver is not purchasing power; currency is not purchasing power. Mr. President, wheat is not purchasing power; cotton is not purchasing power under present prices; livestock is not purchasing power under present prices; labor is not purchasing power under present conditions. What is purchasing power to-day? Virtually nothing.

Mr. President, I was not satisfied with the definition given by the distinguished Senator from Ohio yesterday as to what purchasing power is. It is not money. It is not commodities. Then what is purchasing power? Mr. President, let me suggest a definition. It is the ability to get money that is purchasing power.

If a man has the ability to get money, that man has ability to acquire and secure purchasing power. If a laborer has ability to get a job, he has purchasing power. If a farmer has ability to raise produce and sell the produce for money, he has the ability and the opportunity to get purchasing power. So, purchasing power, if it is not money, if it is not wheat, corn, cotton, or livestock, is the ability and the opportunity to get money, to get wheat, to get corn, and to get cotton.

Again, says Mr. Douglas:

The banks, moreover, showed an unwillingness to lend, since they were afraid that they would not be repaid for their loans. The combined result has been stalemate, but the followers of the conservative tradition still insist that attempts at credit inflation are the only legitimate means which can be employed, and that any attempts at directly increasing the supply of currency itself are nefarious. The Government, according to these interests, should not intervene directly to break the industrial deadlock, and recovery should take place only within the present structure of business and banking. But they do not tell us how they are going to force the banks to make the added loans to business.

And that is a pertinent point. Banks can not loan money now. There is nothing to loan on. They can not loan on farms. They do not dare to do it. They can not loan on livestock in any appreciable quantities. They do not dare to make such loans. There is nothing that the banks can make loans upon to-day, on which they are assured of getting their profit in the form of interest and a return of the principal; and for the reason that there is nothing prosperous, nothing upon which to make loans, banks are not making loans. I am not a banker, yet I am not criticising the banks for not taking undue chances with the money of their depositors.

The closing paragraph of Doctor Douglas's article on the subject Should We Reflate? is as follows:

It will be seen from the above analysis that the real issue turns on whether the country has the intelligence to manage its currency and credit system for the purpose of stabilizing prices and preventing or lessening depressions. If the skeptics are right, then we are doomed to be the football of deflationists and inflationists, and our prices will move up and down in roller-coaster fashion. If they are not, it may be possible to reflate and then stabilize

Mr. President, a few days ago I took the liberty of preparing a letter and sending copies of it to the presidents and managing heads of what I conceive to be the five great banks of the Nation. In addition to sending a copy of this letter to the head of each of these banks, I sent a copy to their economic advisers. The economic adviser to the head of a bank is the economic attorney for the head of the bank. In other words, the bank official, the head of the bank, is an executive official. When it comes to knowing whether a policy proposed or suggested will result well or badly, they call in their economic doctor, and he prescribes and tells them whether or not they should do this or do that. The economic adviser is the power in these big banks that directs them in their operations, and these big banks have the best men that they can hire. They have practically all the money there is. Money is no object. Men who have ability want to work, and want to get good salaries. So in these big banks in New York there have been the best financial some of them, while they may have been naturalized, were | not born in this country. So that these big banks have the best financial brains money can hire. They have the best.

I sent copies of this letter to these big bankers and their economic advisers. I will not ask that the letter be read, but I will ask permission to insert a copy of the letter in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

adviser, J. P. Morgan & Co.; Mr. Jackson Reynolds, president and directing head, First National Bank.

Gentlemen: On February 6 I made some reports.

GENTLEMEN: On February 6 I made some remarks to a group of business men assembled at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in New

In such address I said that the Congress, under present leader-ship, was impotent; and, if we should act, the President would ship, was impotent; and, if we should act, the President would no doubt veto our proposals.

At that time I referred to "powerful influences," which shaped, if not controlled, the financial policies at Washington. I mentioned the Federal reserve bank and referred to "the great banks of New York City." I had in mind, among others, the Chase National, the National City, the Guaranty Trust, and J. P. Morgan & Co.; hence, special copies of this statement are going to the directing heads, and their economic advisers, of the institutions mentioned.

What I said was not intended as a criticism of, but rather an appeal to, such "influences" to direct their great abilities and mental resources to the task of helping find a remedy for our growing distress.

must be apparent that the banks can not survive unless the It must be apparent that the banks can not survive unless the people, the cities, the counties, the States, and the Government itself survive. Almost every orderly process in the interior of our country has broken down. The program of relief, sponsored by the present administration, has been given a trial and has failed; hence, some other program must be formulated and given the public, if any semblance of peace and order is to be preserved.

Conditions are now too serious to indulge in arguments as to the course of the distress. Partisanship should not have a program to the course of the distress.

Conditions are now too serious to indulge in arguments as to the cause of the distress. Partisanship should not be permitted to confuse the issue. Remedies that are remote in point of time are out of the question. If the banks are to withstand the drain, if the courts are to continue to function and if the people are to endure their distress, some hope must be promised and forth-coming at once. A promising program of relief must come early in the new administration. Such program must give assurance that the deflation will be checked. The people have been patient but my correspondence, heavy and widespread, forces the conviction that all is not well anywhere in our country.

The records show that hoarding has started again.

Wise owners of deposits will not hoard currency. More gold will be demanded than is available; hence, you well know the inevitable results. Forty-three billions of deposits can not be met with the available gold; can not be met with the available stock of money even if all is forced into circulation; and, if a crash should come, collateral and securities of all kinds will further depreciate in value.

You must, I think, concede that it is timely to suggest that

You must, I think, concede that it is timely to suggest that conditions demand our most serious consideration.

I am convinced that our troubles are mainly financial, that you, and your associates, control our fiscal policies and legislation, and, knowing of your power, I am appealing to you to divert your abilities to the task of providing a program for the consideration of the Congress.

of the Congress.

The policies of deflation are unmistakably responsible for the present high purchasing power of the dollar and such scarce high priced dollars are responsible for the nonpayment of private interest and debts; responsible for the nonpayment of taxes, and the nonpayment of taxes is directly responsible for the nonpayment of public interest and the widespread default in city, county, and State bonds. Further, because the people and the corporations have no incomes, no Federal taxes are assessed against them; hence, the Government is borrowing funds with which to meet the interest on the public debt and general overhead expenses.

Your policies are, in my judgment, contrary to a just public policy; are against the public welfare and, hence, should and must be changed.

must be changed.

Industry, including the banks, can not survive under a continuation of such policies. Already many have had their dose of oxygen from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Millions of wage earners, hundreds of thousands of farmers and business men, and thousands of banks have fallen by the wayside.

men, and thousands of banks have fallen by the wayside. A general farm revolt has temporarily stopped farm foreclosures. As mentioned above, industry, great and small, now has a brief breathing spell. Advantage should be taken of this truce to find a way to prevent the resumption of a secondary clash.

Industry, including the banks, are to-day on the defensive. Your banks, as an industry, owe your depositors some forty-three billions of dollars, which sum you can not now pay, for the very good reason that the people can not pay you their notes and obligations; hence, your notes will have to be extended. Also, when the farm moratorium expires, creditors will renew their demand for payment and the second battle will be on.

demand for payment and the second battle will be on.

During all this time, one small favored class, with safes and boxes bulging with gold tax-exempt securities, sits back in apparent self-satisfaction that the further the deflation, the scarcer the dollar and the higher its buying power, the richer they become.

The people of the country, save perhaps the stockholders of the larger financial institutions, understand this situation. During the past few years, your policies have deflated all save fixed investments. Such policies are now deflating the weaker fixed investments, and, if not checked, will soon reach savings accounts, bank deposits and your gold tax-exempt city, State, and Government

Already you have pursued deflation to a point where now it may be a question as to how much you can save of such investments. You can not reasonably expect to deflate and ruin the masses of the people and then hope to remain immune yourself. You can not reasonably expect to complete deflation against the masses and even hope that they will be either unwilling or unable to retaliate, and, if the period, between now and the coming special session of the Congress, does not bring forth a satisfactory program of relief, not only you may, but you will, see a determined effort to bring about the following results:

A gigantic program of public works.
 Payment in cash of the soldiers' bonus.

3. Payment of the Government deficit with Treasury notes instead of through bond financing.
4. Evaluation of the gold dollar.

Such a program, once under way, may go as far on the road towards complete inflation as you are now insisting that we go on the road towards complete deflation.

After months of effort here, we are forced to appeal from an impotent Congress and a short-sighted administration to you, a higher power, to stop forcing the retreat and to at once give the order to advance.

The people will not be satisfied with an alibi. Let me remind you that during the past year every legislative proposal even suggesting possible expansion of the currency, emanating from New York and having the approval of the great news journals, caused an immediate and positive upturn in commodity and stock security prices and consequent renewal of hope and confidence in the minds and hearts of the people, and then, just as soon as wise observers saw that such intimations were false alarms, prices began to sag and hope and confidence began to

If even the suggestions of the expansion of the currency, such as those contained in the Glass-Steagall bill, in the open-market program of the Federal reserve system, and later the Borah amendment to the home-loan bank bill, were sufficient to revive prices and hope, then what might be expected if a sincere, honest, and reasonable program of expansion were announced in New York and Washington?

Would not the following things happen immediately?

(a) Owners of bank deposits would immediately begin to convert such deposits into commodities, stocks, and property to secure the benefits of the advance in price and value.

(b) Owners of collateral would begin immediately to negotiate loans in order to be able to take advantage of the rising market.

(c) Merchants would begin to place orders for goods to stock their empty shelves.

(d) Wholesalers would place orders for additional stocks of

(d) Wholesalers would place orders for additional stocks of goods to supply increasing demands.

(e) Manufacturers would take chances on opening their factories, thus making demands for raw materials.

(f) Such activities would make business for the railroads and likewise, the banks.

(g) Labor would be employed and additional demand would arise for the products of the farms; hence, stimulating and raising farm prices.

(h) Bank deposits would be thawed out and banks would become active. (i) Value would be replaced in all kinds of collateral and securi-

(j) Credit would be in demand and would begin to expand.
 (k) The people could secure money with which to pay taxes, interest, and debts.

Last, but not least, a general revival of business would be reflected immediately in increased orders for advertising space in the newspapers and news journals of the country. Other benefits too numerous to mention would be manifested immediately. The greatest relief, perhaps, would come to the troubled mass mind of America.

What other plan of general relief is possible? As a rule, Congress does nothing more than write into law the crystallized public sentiment and demands of the people. If bankers and bondholders, who control financial sentiment and policies and largely the press of the country, refuse to assist in working out a co-operative solution for our distress, then the Congress may have no alternative other than the enactment of the policies already widely demanded and mentioned herein.

Respectfully submitted.

ELMER THOMAS United States Senator, Oklahoma.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, in reply to this letter I have received a number of answers, and I am going to ask permission to insert in the Record a typical reply, a very intelligent reply. It is the reply to the letter sent by Mr. Mitchell, of the National City Bank. Mr. Mitchell, in a five or six page letter, sets forth his viewpoint as to what should be done. He says that Congress can solve the situation if it will only balance the Budget; that we will immediately be on the high road to prosperity if Congress will only balance the Budget. Then he says that if Congress will keep sound currency for the country we can keep the Budget balanced. Then he says that if Congress will adjust or cancel the war debts owing this country by foreign nations we can restore our foreign trade. Then if we will help the little countries abroad which are now off the gold standard, if we can lend them some of our gold to permit them to get back on the gold standard, we will be back in the height of prosperity. That is the remedy suggested by the big banks of New York to balance the Budget, and that can not be done under a declining price level. How are we going to raise $5,000,000,000, how are we to raise $4,500,000-000, how can we raise even $4,000,000,000, when every dollar that is paid in taxes represents 200 cents of value? Somebody must pay these $4,000,000,000, and they must pay the $4.000,000,000 with 200-cent dollars, so that the people, in order to balance the Budget, must part with value to the extent of $8,000,000,000 of wealth, even under the program of the incoming administration, under which the Budget is to be reduced 25 per cent.

Mr. President, I ask permission to insert at this point the complete letter sent me by Mr. Mitchell, the chairman of the Board of National City Bank of New York City.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. Before the letter is put in I desire to know whether there is any statement in it as to the claim made by Mr. Mitchell about the manner in which the balancing of the Budget would bring about prosperity.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. This letter reads very much like an article for the Saturday Evening Post. It deals in glittering generalities. They demand that the Budget be balanced, and when we insist on knowing how the Budget is to be balanced, they say, "Go back to Washington, cut off half of the employees, cut off half of the departments, cut out your extravagant expenditures." But they do not name the department, they do not specify the employees. When the Senate proposed to cut off the air mail, taking $19,000,000 from Mr. Mitchell's bank, could we do it? No; it could not be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oklahoma?

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> THE NATIONAL CITY BANK OF NEW YORK, New York, February 20, 1933.

Hon. ELMER THOMAS.

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senator Thomas: Your letter of February 17 has been received and I am very glad indeed to reply.

I appreciate the concern for the economic condition of the country which has prompted your letter. I share with you, as, of course, everyone must, this concern and the desire to find the solution of our difficulties. The fervent prayer of us all is to get the country started on the road to recovery as soon as possible. There is no difference of opinion between us as to the urgency of the situation, nor as to the goal to which we are all working.

The major point of your letter upon which I am bound to disagree is the assumption that the New York banks have it in their agree is the assumption that the New York banks have it in their power to bring back prosperity, if they would, but that for some reasons, upon which I am not clear, they have not seen fit to do so, but instead have deliberately pursued a policy which is bringing ruin upon the country.

Now I am ready to agree entirely with your proposition that Wall Street could not possibly hope to benefit from policies which are destructive of the interests of the country as a whole. This, indeed, is the very basis of my argument. I hold it to be self-evident that the New York banks, and what is commonly known as Wall Street, are as vitally concerned in the recovery of the country as any other interest or section. I realize that a contrary opinion is held by some of our people. We frequently hear statements indicative of a belief that somehow or other the interests of Wall Street and of the rest of the country are in conflict. But surely a moment's reflection must refute this point of view. The New York banks are not bankers only to a small group of interests confined within the limits of lower Manhattan Island and isolated from the rest of the country. They make their living by financing the trade of the whole Nation. They hold in their portfolios the notes and bonds of individuals and corporations portfolios the notes and bonds of individuals and corporations located in every State in the Union. Every day Wall Street watches the reports from all sections of the country by press, by private wire, and by telephone, detailing the progress of the crops, the output of the factories, and the movement of trade. If the news is good, Wall Street recognizes this as favorable and registers its satisfaction in the movements of the markets. If the news is Wall Street is disappointed and registers its disappointment in the markets accordingly. Nothing, to my mind, could be clearer than the proposition that the prosperity of New York as a financial center is inseparably bound up with the prosperity of the rest of the country; and nowhere is this fact more keenly realized than the country; and nowhere is this fact more keenly realized than in Wall Street.

Since this is the case, it seems equally clear that if the New York banks had had the power to end the depression at will, they would have required no outside pressure to induce them to exercise it. Their own self interest would have been pressure enough. Is it not utterly inconceivable that these banks would have tolerated conditions which have involved them in continuous anxiety and loss over a three-year period if it had been within their power to avoid it? And considering the world-wide scope of the deto avoid it? And considering the world-wide scope of the de-pression, is it not straining a point a good deal to assume that the control of the whole thing lies in the laps of a few New York

Of course, the answer is that the New York banks do not have any such power. They can not create a demand for goods, put the millions of unemployed back to work, consume the commodity surpluses, correct the disparities between prices and incomes which bear so heavily upon certain classes of our population, reduce the burden of taxation, remove the artificial barriers shackling international trade, offset the destructive effects of depreciating foreign currencies upon our commodity markets, or remedy the various other maladjustments of industry and trade which have conother maladjustments of industry and trade which have contributed to and prolonged the depression. Banks are merchants of credit, and their service to business lies in supplying a means of facilitating production and distribution. It is true that the New York banks have large sums of money available for lending. But, like any other merchant, they can not sell their wares unless solvent customers come to buy. And there is where the trouble lies to-day. The solvent customers of banks do not, as a rule, want to borrow, for the simple reason that, conditions being as they are, they do not see how they can use the money at a profit.

Under such conditions it must be perfectly apparent that a demand that the bankers should "do something to end the depression" can mean only one thing, that they should lower their credit standards and lend more freely, and with less insistence upon adequate security and full satisfaction as to the borrower's ability to repay at maturity. Certainly this would be a new conception of the proper conduct of banking, and one which I doubt would prove to be very popular with bank depositors. Moreover, I am equally doubtful as to the likelihood of selling this method of combatting the depression to the departments of our Govern-of combatting the depression to the departments of our Government charged with bank supervision, and I am still more doubtful as to the benefits to the country to be expected ultimately from such a policy.

I am, of course, thoroughly aware of the widespread and often bitter criticism to which banks are being subjected. But I am also impressed by the fact that the criticism of banks which have gone ahead and loaned too freely and got themselves into diffi-culties so that they could not pay their depositors is just as loud and bitter as the criticism of banks which have not granted credit as freely as some of their would-be borrowers think should be the practice,

Of course, it would be useless to deny that some of the criticism of banks is justified. Bankers made mistakes of judgment cism of banks is justified. Bankers made mistakes of judgment during the boom, as did most everyone else, and the overexpansion of credit which took place at that time is the cause of one of our basic difficulties to-day. Much of the criticism, on the other hand, is founded on ignorance of the problems facing bankers and of the nature of the banking business. Doubtless it is true that bankers in many instances have tightened up unduly in their credit-granting policies. But it must be remembered that they have had good grounds for caution in the nervous state of the public psychology and in the need that exists for being fully the public psychology and in the need that exists for being fully prepared for any emergency that might develop. Moreover, we know that in some communities the withdrawals of deposits by the public have been on such a scale as to force an almost complete suspension of credit-granting activities

Obviously, where banks have been deprived of their lending power it is useless to command them to lend. And to criticize other banks which have retained their liquidity for reluctance to impair this liquidity with what they judge to be questionable loans would appear to me to be decidedly poor public policy. Only recently we have had a demonstration of the value of liquidity in the aid which the New York banks have been able to extend in the Michigan situation. Moreover, this liquidity is going to be needed when business picks up and there is a demand for credit from firms legitimately entitled to it. If at such time it should be found that the banks had involved themselves in a lot of second-grade paper where would we be then?

In short, the New York banks have never "forced the retreat," nor have they the power "to give the order to advance." They can aid in the situation, but their aid must consist, after taking care of all proper demands upon them, in keeping themselves in sound and liquid condition so that they may be in a position to finance industry when it revives. Whatever the mistakes of the past may have been with respect to incautious extensions of credit, they should not be repeated now. The impetus to reviving industry must come from industry itself.

Nor can such revival be stimulated by dosing the markets with additional supplies of currency and credit. More currency is

Nor can such revival be stimulated by dosing the markets with additional supplies of currency and credit. More currency is now outstanding than at any previous time in our country's history, and for over three years the money markets have been kept flooded almost continuously with Federal reserve credit. And yet the depression has not lifted. Hence it is evident that the difficulty does not lie with the supply of currency and credit, but with the inability of industry to put the currency and credit that we have to use that we have to use

How to remedy this difficulty and permit these supplies of money and capital to circulate freely once more is the problem that concerns us all. This, as I see it, is primarily a problem of gradually working out a new equilibrium in industry in place of that the test that the transfer of the collection. that shattered first by the war and later by the collapse of 1929. Of course, readjustments of such magnitude necessarily take time, depending in part upon how much resistance is offered to the corrective forces. But much undoubtedly has been accomplished, and there can be little question but that there exists to-day a very large backed-up demand for goods which would make itself felt with any revival of confidence. In conclusion, I venture to suggest that the opportunities open

In conclusion, I venture to suggest that the opportunities open to Congress for allaying the anxieties of the American people are far beyond anything within the power of the banks. Congress alone can assure the country a balanced Budget and a sound currency—two essential points in any program of recovery. And Congress alone has the authority to arrive at the settlements with foreign nations necessary to clear the way to a general return to the gold standard, with all that the means in the way of restoring stability to the exchanges and correcting the evils of depreciating

It is the uncertainty in the minds of business men and investors with respect to such vital questions of national policy that damps down initiative and keeps capital locked up unused or concentrated in investments of short term and highest liquidor concentrated in investments of short term and highest liquidity such as Government bills and certificates. To make capital more venturesome it is essential to remove these causes of apprehension. If Congress will address itself to an attack upon the business depression along these lines, I am confident that the results would be most encouraging in demonstrating at last the way for the country to move forward toward better times.

Very truly yours,

C. O. MITCHELL.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. It is my understanding that the argument made by Mr. Mitchell and others, the argument advanced in favor of balancing the Budget as a means of bringing about prosperity, is that money that is now being paid by taxes would be released for use in business. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the bulletin gotten out by Mr. Mitchell's bank in January makes the statement that there is more money now in the possession of the banks than can possibly be used in business. So I am wondering whether he gives any reason in this letter as to why balancing the Budget would bring about prosperity.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The letter will appear in the RECORD to-morrow, and, of course, speaks for itself. I would not want to give my interpretation, which might possibly be in error.

Of course, there is no chance for this Congress to take any action upon this question. I hope that we will have conditions such that when the next Congress convenes, which may be around April first, we will have a body here that will at least listen to reason and not listen for whispers from Wall Street. We have had those whispers for 12 years and, as a result of following the nod and the whisper coming from Wall Street, we have the admission of the present President that the United States is in the worst depression in history.

There is no possible solution for the condition in which the people find themselves, who are now over their heads in debt, except to reduce the buying power of the dollar, so that they can secure the dollars with which to pay their obligations. It is the program, on the one hand, to scale down the debts. As a practical proposition, perhaps some of the contracts might be scaled down. We might find a farmer debtor and his creditor, the man who made the farmer the loan, who might get together in an isolated case and agree on a scaling down of a mortgage. But there are so many of the mortgages, and so many of these debts, that as a practical proposition in my judgment the plan is wholly impractical. I can see no possible way for the Budget to be balanced, for the unemployed to get work, for the farmers to secure living prices for their commodities, save through a cheapening of the dollar, bringing its buying power down, and that can be done by placing more dollars in circulation. If placing more dollars in circulation would not have that effect, why do the big financial powers oppose it so viciously? If placing money in circulation will not do what we claim it will do, then why do the powers which control the financial policy of the United States and of the world oppose such

I have tried to show this afternoon that through force of circumstances the Government has been forced to place in circulation a quarter of a billion dollars during the past five weeks, in the banks, not among the people, and even that has stopped the decline in wholesale prices. That trend is checked. Not only was it checked but we can see a slight advance. If the putting of a quarter of a billion dollars into circulation checks the decline and causes a slight upturn, perhaps another quarter of a billion dollars put into circulation would cause a further upturn. If these things happen, then we must admit that we have ability enough to control the amount of money placed in circulation, and can keep it from getting beyond us as it did in

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. HATFIELD. How much of an inflation would the Senator think would be sufficient to take care of the situa-

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Of course, I could not answer that question. Last year, when the bonus bill was before us, I submitted that identical question to economists, not only at home but abroad, and it was the universal opinion at that time that the amount of the bonus, $2,400,000,000, would be too much money to go into circulation. Most of those to whom I submitted the matter thought that a billion or a billion and a half would be sufficient to raise commodity prices, which was one of my reasons for supporting the bonus bill. A quarter of a billion has stopped the decline in prices and showed a tendency to an upturn. If a quarter of a billion would do that, a half billion would show a further upturn. We have the best brains studying this problem. They have lines of communication in every direction. They have the radio and the trans-Atlantic lines, they have information not only here but abroad and throughout the world, and all they have to do is to watch the trend of prices and to control the matter through placing money in circulation when prices trend downward and taking money out of circulation when prices trend upward. Great Britain and Sweden are thus managing their currency, and prices in both countries are controlled and stabilized.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, would the Senator limit the amount at a certain point up or down?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The bill I have pending, of course, fixes certain limitations; but I do not care to discuss the bill at this time. At no time during this winter have I gone into the details of how reflation should be accomplished. Until the Senate and the country come to the conclusion that inflation, or reflation, or expansion is necessary, there is no use discussing details of administration. I am not discussing silver; I am not discussing the Rankin-Thomas bill: I am not discussing any other bill. There is no use discussing details until we get a conviction that something must be done along the line of inflation or expansion. When we get to that point we will decide on the best means of doing it, and there are various means by which reflation or expansion of the currency can be accomplished.

This question is the paramount issue before the country, and no other question or issue can be settled until we proceed to regulate the value of the dollar. The sooner this is done, the sooner the Budget may be balanced, and the sooner will confidence return to an embarrassed and a harassed people.

BEQUEST OF THE LATE WILLIAM F. EDGAR

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 48) to authorize the acceptance on behalf of the United States of the bequest of the late William F. Edgar, of Los Angeles County, State of California, for the benefit of the museum and library connected with the office of the Surgeon General of the United States Army, which were, on pages 1 and 2, to strike out the preamble; on page 2, line 4, to strike out "the said bequest" and insert "the bequest of the late William F. Edgar, of Los Angeles County, Calif., as contained in his will and testament and codicil thereto and such interest as may have accrued on the funds covered by such bequest"; and on page 2, line 8, after "codicil," to insert "copy of which shall be filed in the General Accounting Office."

Mr. REED. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I inquire what the joint resolution is?

Mr. REED. It is a joint resolution which originated in the Senate authorizing the acceptance by the Surgeon General of the Army of a bequest left for a medical library in the Surgeon General's Office. It has been held that he has no authority to accept it without permission of Congress. The amendment of the House does not change the purpose of the joint resolution.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate concur in the House amend-

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14458) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a committee meeting is in progress at this time, engaging the attention of a number of Senators who have expressed a desire to be present when the appropriation bill is taken up, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Ninety Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The clerk will report the first amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 15, to reduce the total appropriation for the Executive Office from $428,498 to $427,498.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead, "Vocational rehabilitation," on page 15, line 22, after the word "the," to strike out "act of June 9, 1930" and insert "acts of June 9, 1930, and June 30, 1932," so as to read:

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, at this point I ask consideration of the amendment which I sent to the clerk's desk some time ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the second amendment, on page 22, line 13, to strike amendment to the text, while the others are amendments to the committee amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I am proposing to amend the committee amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so understands, but there are two committee amendments which the Senator wishes to amend.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas to the amendment of the committee, on page 22, in line 8.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the committee gave for the investigation by the Federal Trade Commission $280,000 more than the House provided. That was the amount asked for by Francis Walker, chief economist of the board. But in the letter which he sent to the committee these words appear:

These estimates, it should be noted, relate to the utilities in-quiry only and allow nothing for other regular investigatory work of the commission authorized and contemplated by the Federal Trade Commission act.

The amendment of the Senator from Arkansas covers the estimated amount for the items I have just named, and I have no objection to having the amendment agreed to and let it go to conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas, on page 22. line 13, to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$20,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas to the amendment of the committee on page 22, line 14, to strike out "$790,000" and insert "$1,101,500."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter addressed to the Hon. THOMAS J. WALSH, dated February 2, 1933, from the chief counsel of the Federal Trade Commission explaining the effect of the reductions that have been attempted in connection with the appropriations for the Federal Trade Commission and the necessity for the amendments that have just been adopted. I ask that the letter be printed in the RECORD in connection with and following the remarks I am now making.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so

The letter is as follows:

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION. Washington, February 2, 1933.

Hon. THOMAS J. WALSH

Hon. Thomas J. Walsh,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senator: You have asked me to write you what the effect would be of a reduction in the Federal Trade Commission's appropriation from the Budget figures of $1,109,550 (which is about $200,000 under the commission's reduced request) down to the sum of $500,000, plus $10,000 for printing, as reported and recommended by the House Subcommittee on Appropriations.

With only $10,000 for printing we shall not be able to print records and briefs necessary to the enforcement of section 5 of our act and the sections of the Clayton Act committed to us, even assuming the legal division was permitted to use the entire amount.

I do not believe that with this reduced appropriation we can adequately perform our functions of enforcement under section 5 of the Federal trade act, sections 2, 3, and 7 of the Clayton Act, and of the Webb-Pomerene Act.

As to the utility investigation under Senate Resolution 83, it

As to the utility investigation under Senate Resolution 83, it will be impossible to complete the field work, write reports, and put these reports and the testimony concerning them into the record by July 1, even on the companies now being examined.

As I think you probably know, most of the field work and reports on the financial structure and practices has been largely carried on by specially selected and qualified temporary accountants and engineers. Some of these have already left the commission for better jobs, and have not been replaced for lack of sufficient funds or the impounding of such funds, and the proposed cut would definitely terminate the services of all the remainder by July 1 and, it may be, of most of the regular staff engaged on this work. The effect on their work in the meantime with this definite fate ahead of them is problematical. If the appropriations and a sufficient force had been available, it seems likely that the field work might have been substantially completed by July 1. In this connection it should be remembered that with an inadequate staff and appropriation the commission has been carrying on for the Congress not only the utility investigation, but also extensive investigations under congressional resolutions of cottonseed, chain stores, Government building prices, and

As the situation now stands, there will remain on July 1 several large groups not examined which should be looked into. In my large groups not examined which should be looked into. In my judgment, this would mean halting the work at a crucial stage, because as this work has progressed it has become increasingly evident that it is in the public interest that all large companies, both holding and operating, should be examined, in so far as the jurisdiction of the commission could carry the inquiry. Practices, inimical both to the public and the investors, have been so widespread as to warrant making the investigation as complete as possible.

The decreased appropriation would mean stopping the work on the power and gas investigation on July 1. In addition to the omission of certain important groups and companies this would mean that we should be unable to complete the work on certain groups and companies that have been studied, on certain ones on which reports are now in preparation, and be unable to put them into the record.

In addition, I don't know how we shall be able to write final reports based on these examinations and to make the recommendations to the Senate that its resolution contemplates.

dations to the Senate that its resolution contemplates.

As you know, under the terms of the Senate resolution, the transcript of testimony and accompanying exhibits have been transmitted to the Senate on the 15th of each month. Hearings now being conducted will be incorporated in the fittieth part. Obviously, to be of value to the Congress and the public, this testimony and the exhibits must be brought together and summarized in orderly form—probably in two reports, one on the propaganda and one on the financial structure and practices. Considerable work has been done on the propaganda report. The financial report has been started and will require the activities of a sizable staff from both the economic and legal divisions for considerable time to make the kind of report which its public importance warrants. It is our plan to boil down all the detailed information, which has been assembled, into as small a space as possible and into understandable form to make it valuable to Congress and others. able to Congress and others.

I believe I am speaking conservatively when I say that as a result of this investigation, together with the speeches of yourself, Senator Norris, and others, and the statements of President-self, Senator Norars, and others, and the statements of Presidentelect Roosevelt, far-reaching effects are already apparent. The electric utility industry has abolished practically all their State information bureaus, they are dissolving Nela, and have stated that they are abandoning their propaganda activities.

No exact measurement can be made of the effect on the rate structure, but rather obviously it has been substantial. That means real savings to all users, immediate and continued. Part of this results from withdrawals, or lowering to actual cost, of holding company charges upon their degring co holding company charges upon their dominated operating companies.

panies.

Most important of all, they have announced a program of financial reform, through the Edison Electric Institute which, if it is carried out in good faith, will save the people of the United States hundreds of millions of dollars.

In my opinion, if we do not take on a single additional company, we can not complete the work satisfactorily or write worthwhile reports on the material already in the record if the appropriation is cut down as proposed.

Even with increased appropriation, and without enlarging our priation is cut down as proposed.

Even with increased appropriation, and without enlarging our present program, there would be left almost untouched the big natural-gas field which has grown so rapidly in importance during the period in which this investigation has been under way. Furthermore, if the appropriation is cut down in the manner proposed, there is grave danger that the economic division, with its experienced and trained men, may be destroyed. This might mean the abandonment of all work under section 6 of the Federal trade act and the breaking up of a trained staff which ought to be maintained as the original act intended, as a virtual standing investigating committee for the Congress, ready, as it always has investigating committee for the Congress, ready, as it always has been, to undertake the numerous investigations which either or both Houses of Congress and the President have sent over. Neither will the proposed reduced appropriation permit the com-mission to institute investigations of its own, as the act intends, nor do other things required by section 6 of the act.

Very truly yours,

ROBT. E. HEALY, Chief Counsel.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I also ask to have inserted in the RECORD at this point a memorandum appearing at page 30 of the hearings before the subcommittee on the pending bill, signed by Francis Walker, chief economist of the Federal Trade Commission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that order will be made.

The memorandum is as follows:

MEMORANDUM FOR THE SENATE APPROPRIATION COMMITTEE

IN RE: COST OF COMPLETION OF THE PUBLIC UTILITIES INQUIRY

The appropriation estimates for the Federal Trade Commission, as prepared by the commission for the Bureau of the Budget last summer, were made on the supposition that no allowance summer, were made on the supposition that no allowance would be made by the Budget for the inclusion of additional public utility groups in order to close the record of public hearings thereon by July 1, 1933. However, it was represented to the Budget Bureau at that time that it would be very desirable to include several additional groups of companies in the electrical industry and, even more important, to cover a somewhat greater number of groups of companies in the gas industry. The naturalgas industry, as stated to the Senate committee, has grown very rapidly in the last two years and has taken on a complicated corporate structure like that of the electrical industry including gas producing companies, gas pipe-line companies, and gas distributing companies, together with a similar congeries of holding companies, security companies, service companies, construction uting companies, together with a similar congeries of holding companies, security companies, service companies, construction companies, etc.

The list furnished to the Senate committee, as stated, is in three parts, showing (1) those groups or companies for which the information is already in the record; (2) those groups or companies which are in process of examination and for which the reports were expected to be in the public record by the end of June, 1933; and (3) those groups or companies with respect to which the need of further inquiry was deemed highly important if the requirements of the Senate resolution were adequately complied with.

complied with.

complied with.

It now appears, however, that even if the inquiry is limited to the first two lists referred to above, it will be impracticable to put all the reports and oral testimony in the record by June 30, 1933. This list includes some of the most important groups, among which may be mentioned especially the Cities Service, the Niagara Hudson Central Public Service, and United Gas Improvement. It is expected, however, that the field work and nearly all of the reports on these companies will be ready to put in the record on or before that date, June 30, 1933. Here, however, has developed another difficulty, namely, an overcrowding or "jam" in the matter of putting all these reports in the record, together with the oral testimony near the close of the fiscal year. As the committee is probably aware, the Senate resolution ordering this inquiry requires the procedure just indicated, namely, sworn testimony. In connection with this "jam" it should also be explained that the reports, when prepared by the examiners, are submitted in advance to the companies affected in order that they may have their representatives present and "have their day in court." This procedure also enables the commission, in case any error or questionable statement is made, to have their objection considered in tionable statement is made, to have their objection considered in advance. As a consequence the testimony of the commission's examiners goes into the record practically uncontested.

As to the estimated cost of the work referred to above, two figures are submitted herewith which are as nearly accurate as the ures are submitted herewith which are as hearly accurate as the undersigned is able to compute at such short notice.

First, taking only the companies in the first two lists referred to above and allowing for putting them all in the public record, together with the expense of preparing the final report to the Senate (on a record probably exceeding 20,000 pages for the financial features alone), the estimated expense is $70,000.

Second, taking all three lists and making the inquiry cover the ground that the commission believes necessary for an adequate report, including putting the information into the record through public hearings and writing the final report, the estimated expense is $280,000.

These estimates, it should be noted, relate to the utilities inquiry only and allow nothing for other regular investigatory work of the commission authorized and contemplated by the Federal Trade

FRANCIS WALKER, Chief Economist.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I do not desire to enter upon a prolonged discussion of the amendments which have been accepted by the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] and agreed to by the Senate, but I do wish to point out in a very brief summary the fact that the Bureau of the Budget made a reduction of 24 per cent from the appropriation for the present fiscal year; that is, the amount carried by the Budget estimate was 24 per cent less than the amount appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933. The action of the House constituted a reduction of over 65 per cent from the appropriation for the present fiscal year and over 54 per cent from the Budget estimate.

The action of the Senate Committee on Appropriations resulted in a provision for continuing the utilities investigation, but it did not provide the funds essential for other investigations and other work on the part of the commission. They have assembled there a corps of experts and investigators. Their appropriation is comparatively small in any event. It is very much reduced under the appropriation for 1932 and for 1933. The amendments which I have offered and which have been agreed to provide a sum $8,000 less than the amount carried in the Budget estimate.

I make this statement in order that it may be understood that these amendments are of primary importance and it is expected they shall remain in the bill.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, in support of the amendments of the Senator from Arkansas I wish to offer for the RECORD a statement made by the bureau of investigation of the American Medical Association and published in its official organ, the Journal of the American Medical Association. a periodical published weekly with a circulation of 88,200 copies, in support of the good work being done by the Federal Trade Commission. I think this testimonial will in all probability justify the conferees in agreeing to the approval of the amendments of the Senator from Arkansas as they have just been adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

FURTHER GOOD WORK IN PROTECTING THE PUBLIC

At various times attention has been called to the good work that is being done by the Federal Trade Commission in protecting the public against misrepresentation or fraud in the medical or quasi-medical fields. Before the Federal Trade Commission was brought into existence, there were only two Federal agencies that offered any protection to the public in this field—the Department of Agriculture, through its food and drug administration, which the protection of the protection enforces the national food and drugs act, and the Post Office Deenforces the national food and drugs act, and the Post Office Department, which can issue fraud orders debarring fraudulent schemes from the mails. Both of these agencies, however, have sharp limitations. As physicians know, no matter how fraudulent a "patent medicine" may be in its advertising, if the manufacturer is shrewd enough—and most manufacturers of "patent medicines" do not lack shrewdness—to make no false, misleading, or fraudulent statements on or in the trade package, but confines his mendacity to newspaper advertisements, radio talks, billboards, etc. he can not be reached under the national food and drugs act etc., he can not be reached under the national food and drugs act. That law prohibits false or misleading statements regarding com-position or origin and false and fraudulent statements regarding therapeutic effects of medicine only when they are made in or therapeutic effects of medicine only when they are made in or on the trade package.

The postal authorities have the power of denying the use of the United States mails to concerns that have been found guilty of obtaining money through the mails by false and fraudulent pretenses and promises. This power is exercised through the use of what is known as a fraud order. The authorities act, however, broadly speaking, only in cases in which a definite complaint is registered with the Post Office Department by one who feels that he has been defrauded through the use of the mails.

But there are many dubious schemes in the medical or quasimedical field that can not be reached under either of these two medical field that can not be reached under either of these two governmental powers. It is here that the Federal Trade Commission comes into the picture. Congress has given this commission power to investigate and take action on cases that involve or that seem to involve what are broadly spoken of as unfair trade pracseem to involve what are broadly spoken of as umair trade practices. Where such investigations prove that unfair trade practices have been indulged in, the commission can, and in many instances does, obtain from the individual or concern involved a signed stipulation to the effect that the objectionable methods will be abandoned. If a stipulation can not be arrived at, the commission may issue what is known as a cease and desist order, in which the person or concern involved is ordered to cease and

In cases of ordinary stipulations the commission as a rule does not publish the names of individuals or firms involved, although this rule is not absolute. In all cease and desist orders the names and addresses of the concerns are given, and in many instances the details of the case are also made public. Brief abstracts of a few of the many cases reported in the commission's bulletins in the past few months follow, supplemented in some instances by information on file in the bureau of investigation.

investigation: Restoria hair dye: Beautifactors (Inc.), of New York City, who sold a hair dye called "Restoria," agreed to discontinue the use of the name "Restoria" and to discontinue representing that the compound is a French discovery that will restore color to gray hair; that it is harmless; and that it is undetectable, when such are not the facts.

Artery-Lax: L. E. Bowen, of Chicago, who did business under the trade name of Artery-Lax Co., sold an alleged treatment for high blood pressure. Bowen, following an investigation by the commission, has declared that he has discontinued all advertising of Artery-Lax and will not resume it.

Yvonne Bebeaux hair dye: Yvonne Bebeaux, of New York City, who sold a hair dye, has agreed to discontinue representing that the dye will "restore" the color of the hair; that it was perfected by a French scientist; that offices had been established in Paris and London; and to discontinue representing that the hair dye recolors the hair shaft and that the hair will never grow gray again, when all such statements are false.

French Vigortabs and Toniquettes: Carroll V. Gianitrapany, who did business under the trade name Modern Sales Co. and also La France Laboratories Co., both of New York City, sold "French Vigortabs" and "French Toniquettes." These were alleged to be "pep" tablets. Gianitrapany has agreed to discontinue advertising the product or any similar medicinal preparation and to discontinue its sale in interstate commerce.

Valen's Bio-Dynamo-Prostatic Normalizer: This Valen's Bio-Dynamo-Prostatic Normalizer: This imposingly named appliance, sold by the quack, George Starr White, of Los Angeles, was merely a rectal dilator, sold under the claim that it would banish prostate troubles. White has agreed to discontinue advertising the product in newspapers, magazines, or by direct mail. "George Starr White—Quack," was the title of an article published in the bureau of investigation department of The Journal, April 13, 1929. In it White's various excursions into the field of crude quackery were described in detail.

Lanzette Hair Remover: Annette Lanzette (Inc.), Chicago, which sells a synthetic pumice stone, has agreed to discontinue representing that the device permanently removes hair and to discontinue the use of the word "rid" or any other words that imply that the product permanently removes hair, when it has no such Goldman Hair Dye: The Monroe Chemical Co., of St. Paul, using Goldman Hair Dye: The Monroe Chemical Co., of St. Paul, using the trade name Mary T. Goldman, has agreed to discontinue representing that Mary T. Goldman is actively engaged in the business, when the fact is she is dead, and attributing to Mary T. Goldman statements and representations, without indicating that such statements were made when Mary T. Goldman was alive. The company also agreed to discontinue representing that the dye will "restore" the color of the hair, that the treatment takes only seven or eight minutes and requires only a few cents' worth of dye, and that the gray hair regains its youthful color overnight, when such are not the facts. The Goldman product is a hair dye of the silver-salt type. The product was discussed at length in Hygeia some years ago in the article "To Dye or Not to Dve.

Aphrotone: This alleged aphrodisiac was sold by one Charles N. Mallory, who used the trade name L. E. Norton Products Co., Chattanooga. Mallory has agreed to discontinue the use of the trade name "Aphrotone" and to refrain from the use of any other word that might imply aphrodisiac properties, and to discontinue also representing that regardless of age or cause sexual vigor will be restored, when the product does not have any such capacity.

Cystex: The Knox Co., of Kansas City, Mo., which has exploited an alleged cure for bladder trouble, back-ache, muscular pain, etc., under the name "Cystex," has agreed to discontinue making false and misleading claims for its nostrum. The files of the bureau and misleading claims for its nostrum. The files of the bureau of investigation show that the exploiters of Cystex have made a pretense of giving composition of their product. Cystex, it seems, comes in the form of two tablets, gray and brown. A few years ago the gray tablets were said to contain hexamethylenamine, powdered extracts of colchicum, calcium phosphate, and thyroid substance. Later the claims made for these tablets omitted all reference to thyroid substance. The brown tablets have been claimed to contain extracts of hydrangea, corn silk, buchu, and triticum, with boric acid, potassium bicarbonate, and atropine sulphate. No quantities of the ingredients seem to have been published.

Pile-Foe: The Peoples Drug Stores, of Washington, D. C., venders of "Pile-Foe." an alleged cure for hemorrhoids, have agreed to discontinue representing that the preparation will stop pain instantly, regardless of the length of time a person has suffered, and that piles can be relieved or healed in five days or any other definite time. definite time.

Keller's Kapsules: J. T. Keller, who trades as the Keller Kapsule Co., Kansas City, Mo., has agreed to discontinue representing his preparation as a competent treatment for lumbago, rheumatism, neuritis, neuralgia, etc., without qualifying statements, and to discontinue representing that the preparation produces a prompt decrease in uric-acid formation, when such is not the High blood pressure cure: H. B. Tonnies, of Cincinnati, did business under the trade name Landis Medicine Co. and also advertised as C. R. Landis. He sold an alleged treatment for high blood pressure under the false claims that it was the prescription of a famous specialist and was a competent remedy for hyperten-sion due to arteriosclerosis, nephritis, toxic goiter, etc. Tonnies sion due to arteriosclerosis, nephritis, toxic goiter, etc. has agreed to discontinue such claims.

Mak-Ova stomach tablets: This was an alleged treatment for the relief of "stomach agony," pain, vomiting, stomach ulcers, chronic gastritis, acidosis, and indigestion. It was put on the mar-ket by one C. W. Reynolds, trading as the Reynolds Chemical Co., of Mound, Minn. Reynolds has agreed to discontinue advertising that his nostrum is a competent treatment for the conditions just mentioned, or that the formula was the result of years of experi-mentation by a specialist that cost thousands of dollars to perfect.

Stomach-ulcer remedy: Normal H. Tufty, of Minneapolis, who traded as Morgan Miles Co. and sold an alleged treatment for stomach ulcers, has agreed to discontinue advertising this nostrum.

Lepso: This quack epilepsy cure is put on the market by R. P. Neubling, of Milwaukee, doing business under the trade names R. Lepso and Lepso Co. Neubling has agreed to discontinue his claim that the stuff can be taken safely by children, when such is not the fact, and also to cease claiming that the product is a competent treatment for epilepsy without indicating the limits of its effectiveness. Lepso was the subject of an article published in bureau of investigation department of the Journal June the bureau of investigation department of the Journal June 12, 1915. The matter is reprinted in the pamphlet, Epilepsy Cures. The product, at the time it was examined in the American Medical Association chemical laboratory, was found to contain the equivalent of 51 grains of potassium bromide to the dose.

Radium Spa: This was one of the numerous water jars sold under the claim that it will render water radioactive. It was put out by the American Radium Products Co., of Los Angeles. The Federal Trade Commission has ordered the company to cease and desist from misrepresenting the therapeutic value of the jar.

Ten Herbs: This nostrum is put out by the Ten Herbs Co., of Chicago. The concern has agreed to discontinue claiming that the preparation is a remedy for rheumatism, neuritis, nervousness, the preparation is a remedy for rheumatism, neuritis, nervousness, etc. Readers of this department of the Journal may remember that in the issue of June 6, 1931, there was published a photographic reproduction of a posthumous testimonial. This consisted of the facsimile of a Ten Herbs testimonial by a Mr. J. M. Hocker that appeared in the Harrisburg (Pa.) Patriot March 5, 1931, together with the facsimile reproduction of Mr. Hocker's death notice. Both testimonial and death notice appeared in the same issue of the Patriot.

Varicose veins and eczema cure: F. P. John, of Thiensville, Wis., has agreed to discontinue advertising his alleged treatment for varicose veins, old leg sores, and eczema.

Youth-Tint hair dye: This preparation was marketed by L.
Pierre Balligny and Balligny Products (Inc.), of New York City.
The vendors have agreed to discontinue claiming that their product will restore the color of the hair or stating that it is anything other than a hair dye.

Dermolax: H. G. Levy, who traded as the Interstate Laboratories, of Chicago, has agreed to discontinue the use of the firm name "Laboratories," as he neither owns nor operates any laboratories. He has also agreed to discontinue representing that psoriasis is caused by a germ localized in the tissues of the skin and that Dermolax ointment and soaps would reach the seat of the trouble, when such is not the fact. He has also agreed to cease representing that Dermolax is a specific treatment for psoriasis. Information received by the bureau of investigation in 1929 from the National Better Business Bureau was to the effect that the Dermolax treatment consisted of a white product containing ammoniated mercury and a brown preparation that contained chrysarobin.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, in further support of the amendments offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson], I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at this point an editorial appearing this morning in the Washington Herald under the heading "Trade Commission Must Not Be Hamstrung by False Economy Moves."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The editorial is as follows:

TRADE COMMISSION MUST NOT BE HAMSTRUNG BY FALSE ECONOMY MOVES

Altogether wise is the action of the Senate Committee on Appropriations in stipulating that $280,000 shall be available for completing the investigation of public utilities which the Federal Trade Commission has been conducting since 1928.

If the Senate sustains its committee and insists that the House agree to appropriating this sum, the most useful inquiry which the Federal Trade Commission has yet made will be pressed until completed.

The Federal Trade Commission is practically the only governmental agency with the power to protect the public from exploita-tion at the hands of dishonest business.

By the law creating the commission, it is given two main func-ons—one, regulatory, and the other, investigational.

The commission is charged with the responsibility of suppressmonopolies and unfair competition in interstate commerce where the public interest is menaced.

The commission is also given the duty of acting as a fact-finding body for the Congress or the President.

Already the public utilities investigation, which the commission has pressed with fidelity and vigor, "has exposed the vicious proparations of the utilities convertible to the public transfer of the utilities are presented as the contraction of the utilities are presented as the utilitie ganda of the utility corporations through colleges, schools, governmental agencies, and the press."

It has also laid bare the use of inaccurate forms of accounting which resulted in "an extensive padding of costs to operating companies through exorbitant fees charged for alleged services by

But for the commission's inquiry, the country would not yet know that there has been an inflation of capitalization by a deliberate "write-up" of assets of more than $1,000,000,000 in the com-erate "write-up" of assets of more than $1,000,000,000 in the companies already probed.

To shut off this inquiry before it had been completed would be an indefensible blow against the public interest.

If the Senate will appropriate the comparatively small sum required to complete the public utilities investigation, public sentiment will compel the House to support the leadership of the Senate.

It would be false economy of the most flagrant sort to hamstring the Federal Trade Commission by refusing it a sufficient appropriation to keep its searchlight on our public utility companies until their every transgression against statutory law and public morals is dragged into the light and written into the record.

Mr. NORRIS addressed the Senate. After speaking for nearly an hour, he said:

Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary] that, since the interruption has taken place, I prefer to yield to him now rather than a little later, because I understand it will be necessary to conclude the session of the Senate in a short time, in any event. So I yield to the Senator from Oregon. I do not, however, desire to yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). The Chair understands the Senator from Nebraska retains the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

STATEMENT BY SAMUEL TILDEN ANSELL

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from North

Mr. McNARY. I yield. Mr. BAILEY. Out of order, and by unanimous consent, I rise to request that there may be published as a part of my remarks a statement by Samuel Tilden Ansell in answer to the accusations made against him on the floor of the Senate on yesterday and to-day. I have submitted the statement to the Senator who made the attack and he offers no objection to publication of the statement in the RECORD.

Let me say just a word further. My reason, Mr. President, for taking this action is that General Ansell is a constituent of mine, a native of North Carolina, and at the present time a citizen of that State, and I feel that he is entitled to publish his defense in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The statement referred to is as follows:

STATEMENT OF SAMUEL TILDEN ANSELL

The attack upon me in the Senate by the junior Senator from Louisiana, in which he revived accusations conclusively proven to be false at the time they were uttered many years ago, demands attention from me personally, and as attorney for the subcommittee which employed me, I desire that due record be made in justice both to the committee and myself as to these accusations.

He brings up the Bergdoll incident of nearly 14 years ago, the facts of which are as follows: Associated with other counsel I did represent Grover Cleveland Bergdoll who evaded the draft. neither apology nor regret for my conduct in that case. In April, 1920, nearly a year after I had resigned from the Army, I was first consulted and later retained by Bergdoll's Philadelphia attorneys—one of whom was Judge Westcott, a prominent practitioner and political figure of that date, who twice nominated Mr. Wilson for the presidency and who was a friend of Secretary of War Baker—to present to the War Department the question of the legality of Bergdoll's trial by court-martial, which was then of the legality of Bergdon's that by court-martial, which was then pending upon review in the department.

I contended then, and I contend now, that under the Bill of Rights, once so sacred to Americans and all English-speaking peoples, as well as under the draft act itself, Bergdoll, not having been inducted into the Army, was triable only by a civil Federal court and jury for a noncapital civil offense and not by a court-martial for the military capital crime of descripe in time of war. court and jury for a noncapital civil offense and not by a courtmartial for the military capital crime of desertion in time of war.
Federal precedents and principle supported my contention, and the judge advocate handling the case in the War Department told me that he despaired of successfully resisting my view.
But before the question was decided in the War Department
Bergdoll escaped from military custody.

His counsel, representing to me that Bergdoll had money hidden in various places and wanted to leave prison under guard to get it, asked me to present the matter to the War Department. This I did in writing, stating that the representations were those of reputable Philadelphia attorneys whom I believed, but beyond that I myself knew nothing. As a matter of record fact, Bergdoll and his mother had withdrawn over $100,000 in gold from the United States Treasury at or after the time he disappeared in evasion of the draft. The War Department granted the authority evasion of the draft. The War Department granted the authority and, without conference with me and without my knowledge, itself prescribed the size of the military guard, selected the soldiers who comprised it, and gave the soldiers all their orders. I knew nothing further about the matter and was never in the slightest touch with it. Bergdoll escaped from the soldiers assigned to the duty of guarding him.

During the war as the chief law officer of the Army I had incurred the enmity of certain high-ranking militarists and certain political and fireside "natriots" by insisting that military power should cal and fireside "patriots" by insisting that military power should never encroach on civil rights; by insisting on my right to review all death sentences before execution; by ameliorating the harsh sentences imposed by courts-martial upon tends of thousands of our untrained citizen soldiery; by fighting for, and finally obtaining, a revision of our archaic Articles of War; and, after the war, by acting as counsel for a House committee investigating military expenditures, a subject which might well have been investigated with beneficial results to this country. When Bergdoll escaped, these superpatriots and profiteers, who had cared little how many other people's sons were killed, seized had cared little how many other people's sons were killed, seized their opportunity and through their influence had a House committee appointed to investigate the Bergdoll escape, members of which later openly declared that their purpose was to "investigate the investigator" of war expenditures and the "chief critic of the necessarily rigid code of military discipline." I appeared before the committee only as a witness. Three of the members made a report, backed by not one scintilla of evidence but refused by it all, holding me—not the War Department—culpably responsible for the escape.

These committeemen never called up the report and never took

These committeemen never called up the report and never took or manifested any desire to take any action upon it. The House of Representatives was never requested to take and never took any action. My enemies were content to rely upon this unsupported report of this "select committee" to besmirch my record. That committee report has lain dormant from the day it was made until now.

I myself requested that the fullest investigation be made by all I myself requested that the fullest investigation be made by an Government agencies. The Department of Justice, through its several agencies, investigated and found absolutely nothing to connect me in any manner with the escape. The War Department, where at the time I was persona non grata, made, through the Inspector General of the Army, a thorough investigation and absolutely exonerated me. In addition, 12 lawyers of national repute and distinction, acting entirely upon their own initiative, reviewed all the evidence taken by the committee and published their formal conclusions. They completely exonerated me and expressed unqualified approval of my conduct. Those lawyers were Profs. E. M. Morgan and Edward S. Thurston, of the Harvard Law School; Frank J. Hogan and J. Kenyon Miller, former presidents of the District of Columbia Bar Association; George S. Wallace, banker and lawyer, of Huntington, W. Va.; Roy D. Keehn, major general, now commanding the National Guard of Illinois; Fred W. Ash.on, of Nebraska; former United States Senator George E. Chamberlain, of Oregon, chairman of the Military Affairs Committee; Rome G. Brown, publisher of the Minneapolis Tribune; Judge Stephen J. Cowley, of Montana; Frederick A. Brown, of Illinois; and John S. Dean, of Kansas.

These lawyers published it as their conviction that if the so-called select committee had fairly weighed the evidence they could have come to but one conclusion, namely, that I was in no way responsible for or connected with the escape of Bergdoll.

It has always been a matter of great consolation to me that after Bergdoll escaped and the patrioteers had made their vicious attack upon me, the great Chief Justice White, who also came from Louisiana, long a warm personal friend to me, called upon me several times, unfailingly giving me his assurances of the entire rectitude of my conduct, assurances which continued till his death.

In those days war passions took the place of calm judgment. Time has served to vindicate my actions then so bitterly assailed. Most of the leaders in the vehemence of that day long ago sought me out and asked my forgiveness for the part they played. But the utterly discredited statements made then by men confessedly

Time has served to vindicate my actions then so bitterly assailed. Most of the leaders in the vehemence of that day long ago sought me out and asked my forgiveness for the part they played. But the utterly discredited statements made then by men confessedly to serve their unworthy ends are revived to-day by Senator Long. However high war passions ran, I, as principal law officer of the Army, stood firm for the preservation of civil liberty; throughout my professional career I have opposed lawlessness and oppression wherever found, whether in the Army, or on the bench, or at the bar, and at all times I have gone to pains to insist upon the rightful deserts of the men of our armed forces, especially those of the humblest rank, the enlisted men. For the rightful, even if at times unpopular, part I have borne I offer no apology; I have nothing but pride.

The Senator made the statement that by forgery or by false representations I brought about the order that made me the Acting Judge Advocate General of the Army during the War. The absurdity of the statement leaves nothing to answer. President Wilson appointed me brigadier general in the Judge Advocate General was performing the duties of Provost Marshal General I should perform the duties of Acting Judge Advocate General I should perform the duties of Acting Judge Advocate General. I had nothing whatever to do with bringing about my appointment. I performed those duties throughout the war to the evident satisfaction of the head of the War Department. I resigned from the Army, as I had long intended to do, under no pressure of any kind and at the special request of my principal resigned from the Army, as I had long intended to do, under no pressure of any kind, and at the special request of my principal enemy I remained longer than I otherwise should have done in order that my work in releasing thousands of enlisted men who were unjustly imprisoned might be fully accomplished. On January 27, 1919, the following general order, at the direction of President Wilson, was published awarding me the distinguishedservice medal:

"By direction of the President, under provisions of an act of Congress, approved July 9, 1918, and in pursuance of the proceedings of a board of officers appointed to consider awards of such medals, the distinguished-service medal is awarded to the such medals, the distinguished-service medal is awarded to the following named officers and civilians for 'especially meritorious service to the Government in a duty of great responsibility'

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE-ENROLLED BILL

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (H. R. 7522) to provide a new Civil Code for the Canal Zone and to repeal the existing Civil Code.

ECONOMIC ANALYSIS OF FOREIGN TRADE OF THE UNITED STATES IN RELATION TO THE TARIFF

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair) laid before the Senate a letter from Thomas Walker Page, acting chairman of the United States Tariff Commission, transmitting manuscript supplemental to that previously transmitted in partial response to Senate Resolution No. 325, an economic analysis of the foreign trade of the United States in relation to the tariff, stating that these data are in answer to paragraphs 1, 2, 3, 4, and 9 of that resolution and that additional material will follow as quickly as it can be made ready.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, the material referred to in the communication addressed to the Senate by the vice chairman of the Tariff Commission comes in response to a resolution asking information for the use of the Senate and of the incoming Chief Executive of the United States. I move that the material, when fully transmitted, be printed as a Senate document.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, February 23, 1933, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1933

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, who art over all and blessed forever more, whose majesty and glory move the lives of men, we wait at the altar of prayer and praise. In every national emergency Thou hast lifted up one to combat injustice and to confront the foes of the march of civilization. To-day may there burn in all hearts a diviner purpose and a purer flame of patriotism because of that peerless one whose dust sleeps on the shore line of the historic Potomac. The hearts of all loyal Americans are unspeakably grateful to him who refused to tolerate the enemies of free government and the unchangeable foes of human liberty. We praise Thee that he declared to the world that kings' scepters can not harmonize with free, democratic institutions. Grant that his name may resound about every hearthstone, in every schoolhouse, and in every altar in all our land. The Lord God save our people and direct this Congress to the glory of Thy holy name. Amen.

S. J. Res. 256. Joint resolution authorizing the Comptroller of the Currency to exercise with respect to national banking associations powers which State officials may have with respect to State banks, savings banks, and/or trust companies under State laws.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following concurrent resolution, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 43

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, in the enrollment of the bill (S. 4020) to give the Supreme Court of the United States authority to prescribe rules of practice and procedure with respect to proceedings in criminal cases after verdict, to strike out, on page 1, lines 8 and 9, respectively, of the engrossed bill the words "Porto Rico" and insert in lieu thereof "Puerto Rico."

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed with an amendment to the amendment of the House No. 1, to the bill (S. 3508) entitled "An act to amend section 1 of the act entitled 'An act to provide for determining the heirs of deceased Indians, for the disposition and sale of allotments of deceased Indians, for the leasing of allotments, and for other purposes,' approved June 25, 1910, as amended," and had agreed to the amendment of the House No. 2 to said bill.

NAVY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL-FISCAL YEAR 1934

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 14724) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman withhold that a mo-

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kansas desire to limit the time for general debate?

Mr. AYRES. Yes, Mr. Speaker. Pending this motion I desire to consult the gentleman from Idaho and see if we can not agree upon some time for limiting general debate. I would suggest seven hours, to be equally divided and controlled between the gentleman from Idaho and myself.

Mr. FRENCH. That is all right.
Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AYRES. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. I am trying to get an agreement among the leaders on this side that at some time during the day Washington's Farewell Address shall be read in the House. I do not think this time ought to be taken out of the time for general debate on the bill now before the House, and I do not think the Farewell Address should be read in the Committee of the Whole. I wonder if the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Ayres] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], the majority leader, would not be willing to name the hour, say 1 or 2 o'clock, for the Speaker to have the Clerk or some one read the address.

Mr. AYRES. I will say to the gentleman that so far as I am concerned, that will be perfectly agreeable.

Mr. RANKIN, Then I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker-

Mr. AYRES. Suppose we do not set any particular time, but I will yield the time to the gentleman and he can ask the Clerk at that time to read the address, if he wants to.

Mr. RANKIN. I do not think it should be read in the Committee of the Whole. I think the address ought to be read in the House. Another thing, we ought to fix a special hour so that the Members who want to be here will know when the address is to be read.

Mr. AYRES. I may say to the gentleman that we can have an arrangement of that kind. We are pressed for time. We have got to get this bill out. I am perfectly willing to yield time for anyone to read the address.

Mr. RANKIN. I agree that this bill is important, but I do not think anything is more important to the American people, especially at this time, than the fundamental doctrines laid down by Washington in his Farewell Address.

Mr. AYRES. I may say to the gentleman that we intend to have the address read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to know if the gentleman will agree for the committee to rise at 2 o'clock and for the Speaker to appoint some one to read the address?

Mr. AYRES. I do not know that I can enter into that agreement.

Mr. RANKIN. Then I will ask unanimous consent that that be done.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas has the floor and has moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 14724.

The question is whether unanimous consent shall be given to limiting general debate to seven hours to be equally divided and controlled between the gentleman from Kansas and the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. RANKIN. I reserve the right to object-

Mr. SNELL. Under reservation of objection, I have no objection to the reading of George Washington's Farewell Address, but the probabilities are that if it is read this afternoon there will be a point of no quorum, because there will not be a large number of Members on the floor at any time this afternoon on account of the general debate. Why would it not be a good idea to rise at a certain time, say, 4 o'clock, and then have the Farewell Address read?

Mr. RANKIN. What about 2 o'clock?

Mr. SNELL. And then have the House go back into committee again?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; have the House go into committee again after it is over.

Mr. SNELL. Personally, I would rather have it at 4 o'clock, but I will leave it to the gentlemen on that side to Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, if I thought that the Members would stay on the floor and hear it, I, too, would insist on it's being read. We have during the past year placed George Washington's Farewell Address into every schoolhouse in every hamlet in the Nation. I hope that it is being read to-day by the people in the States. In the closing hours of the session, when there will not be over 40 or 50 Members here on the floor to hear the address, and these Members who stay on the floor are familiar with it, I doubt whether stopping business now to read it would accomplish anything of great value.

Mr. RANKIN. The Members of Congress need to hear it. Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is, Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H. R. 14724.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present, and make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

Mr. AYRES. I hope the gentleman will withhold that, because it will take a lot of time now.

Mr. RANKIN. I will not withhold it, and you are going to keep a quorum here unless the address is read to-day. I insist upon the point, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Evidently, there is not a quorum present. The call is automatic.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were-yeas 302, nays 3, answered "present" 1, not voting 120, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded. Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. Doxey in the chair.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Connery] such time as he may desire.

Mr. CONNERY read Washington's Farewell Address, as follows:

To the people of the United States.

FRIENDS AND FELLOW-CITIZENS: The period for a new election of a Citizen, to administer the Executive Government of the United States, being not far distant, and the time actually arrived, when your thoughts must be employed in designating the person, who is to be clothed with that important trust, it appears to me proper, especially as it may conduce to a more distinct expression of the public voice, that I should now apprise you of the resolution I have formed, to decline being considered among the number of those, out of whom a choice is to be made.

I beg you, at the same time, to do me the justice to be assured, that this resolution has not been taken, without a strict regard to all the considerations appertaining to the relation, which binds a dutiful citizen to his country-and that, in withdrawing the tender of service which silence in my situation might imply, I am influenced by no diminution of zeal for your future interest, no deficiency of grateful respect for your past kindness; but act under and supported by a full conviction that the step is compatible with both.

The acceptance of, and continuance hitherto in, the office to which your suffrages have twice called me, have been a uniform sacrifice of inclination to the opinion of duty, and to a deference for what appeared to be your desire. I constantly hoped, that it would have been much earlier in my power, consistently with motives, which I was not at liberty to disregard, to return to that retirement, from which I had been reluctantly drawn. The strength of my inclination to do this, previous to the last election, had even led to the preparation of an address to declare it to you; but mature reflection on the then perplexed and critical posture of our affairs with foreign nations, and the unanimous advice of persons entitled to my confidence, impelled me to abandon the idea.

I rejoice that the state of your concerns, external as well as internal, no longer renders the pursuit of inclination incompatible with the sentiment of duty or propriety; and am persuaded, whatever partiality may be retained for my services, that in the present circumstances of our country, you will not disapprove my determination to retire.

The impressions, with which I first undertook the arduous trust, were explained on the proper occasion. In the discharge of this trust, I will only say, that I have, with good intentions, contributed towards the organization and administration of the government, the best exertions of which a very fallible judgment was capable. Not unconscious, in the outset, of the inferiority of my qualifications, experience in my own eyes, perhaps still more in the eyes of others, has strengthened the motives to diffidence of myself; and every day the increasing weight of years admonishes me more and more, that the shade of retirement is as necessary to me as it will be welcome. Satisfied, that, if any circumstances have given peculiar value to my services, they were temporary, I have the consolation to believe, that, while choice and prudence invite me to quit the political scene, patriotism does not forbid it.

In looking forward to the moment, which is intended to terminate the career of my public life, my feelings do not permit me to suspend the deep acknowledgment of that debt of gratitude, which I owe to my beloved country, for the many honors it has conferred upon me; still more for the steadfast confidence with which it has supported me; and for the opportunities I have thence enjoyed of manifesting my inviolable attachment, by services faithful and persevering, though in usefulness unequal to my zeal. If benefits have resulted to our country from these services, let it always be remembered to your praise, and as an instructive example in our annals, that under circumstances in which the Passions agitated in every direction were liable to mislead. amidst appearances sometimes dubious, vicissitudes of fortune often discouraging, in situations in which not unfrequently want of success has countenanced the spirit of criticism, the constancy of your support was the essential prop of the efforts, and a guarantee of the plans by which they were effected. Profoundly penetrated with this idea, I shall carry it with me to the grave, as a strong incitement to unceasing vows that Heaven may continue to you the choicest tokens of its beneficence-that your union and brotherly affection may be perpetual—that the free constitution, which is the work of your hands, may be sacredly maintained—that its administration in every department may be stamped with wisdom and virtue-that, in fine, the happiness of the people of these States, under the auspices of liberty, may be made complete, by so careful a preservation and so prudent a use of this blessing as will acquire to them the glory of recommending it to the applause, the affection, and adoption of every nation, which is yet a stranger to it.

Here, perhaps, I ought to stop. But a solicitude for your welfare, which cannot end but with my life, and the apprehension of danger, natural to that solicitude, urge me on an occasion like the present, to offer to your solemn contemplation, and to recommend to your frequent review, some sentiments; which are the result of much reflection, of no inconsiderable observation and which appear to me all important to the permanency of your felicity as a People. These will derives from the East supplies requisite to its growth and comfort, and what is perhaps of still greater consequence, it must of necessity owe the secure enjoyment of indispensable outlets for its own productions to the weight, influence, and the future maritime strength of the Atlantic side of the Union, directed by an indissoluble community of interest, as one Nation. Any other tenure by which the be offered to you with the more freedom, as you can only see in them the disinterested warnings of a parting friend, who can possibly have no personal motive to bias his counsels. Nor can I forget, as an encouragement to it your indulgent reception of my sentiments on a former and not dissimilar occasion.

Interwoven as is the love of liberty with every ligament of your hearts, no recommendation of mine is necessary to fortify or confirm the attachment.

The Unity of Government which constitutes you one people, is also now dear to you. It is justly so; for it is a main Pillar in the Edifice of your real independence; the support of your tranquility at home; your peace abroad; of your safety; of your prosperity in every shape; of that very Liberty, which you so highly prize. But as it is easy to foresee, that, from different causes, and from different quarters, much pains will be taken, many artifices employed, to weaken in your minds the conviction of this truth; as this is the point in your political fortress against which the batteries of internal and external enemies will be most constantly and actively (though often covertly and insidiously) directed, it is of infinite moment, that you should properly estimate the immense value of our national Union to your collective and individual happiness; that you should cherish a cordial, habitual, and immovable attachment to it; accustoming yourselves to think and speak of it as of the Palladium of your political safety and prosperity; watching for its preservation with jealous anxiety; discountenancing whatever may suggest even a suspicion that it can in any event be abandoned, and indignantly frowning upon the first dawning of every attempt to alienate any portion of our country from the rest, or to enfeeble the sacred ties which now link together the various parts.

For this you have every inducement of sympathy and interest. Citizens by birth or choice of a common country, that country has a right to concentrate your affections. The name of American, which belongs to you, in your national capacity, must always exalt the just pride of Patriotism, more than any appellation derived from local discriminations. With slight shades of difference, you have the same Religion, Manners, Habits, and political Principles. You have in a common cause fought and triumphed together. The Independence and Liberty you possess are the work of joint councils, and joint efforts—of common dangers, sufferings and successes.

But these considerations, however powerfully they address themselves to your sensibility, are greatly outweighed by those, which apply more immediately to your Interest. Here every portion of our country finds the most commanding motives for carefully guarding and preserving the Union of the whole.

The North in an unrestrained intercourse with the South, protected by the equal Laws of a common government, finds in the productions of the latter great additional resources of maritime and commercial enterprise-and precious materials of manufacturing industry. The South in the same intercourse, benefiting by the agency of the North, sees its agriculture grow and its commerce expand. Turning partly into its own channels the seamen of the North, it finds its particular navigation invigorated; and, while it contributes, in different ways, to nourish and increase the general mass of the national navigation, it looks forward to the protection of a maritime strength to which itself is unequally adapted. The East, in a like intercourse with the West, already finds, and in the progressive improvement of interior communications, by land and water, will more and more find, a valuable vent for the commodities which it brings from abroad, or manufactures at home. The West derives from the East supplies requisite to its growth and comfort, and what is perhaps of still greater consequence, it must of necessity owe the secure enjoyment of indispensable outlets for its own productions to the weight, influence, and the future maritime strength of the Atlantic side of the Union, directed by an indissoluble community of interest, as one Nation. Any other tenure by which the from its own separate strength, or from an apostate and unnatural connection with any foreign Power, must be intrinsically precarious.

While then every part of our Country thus feels an immediate and particular interest in Union, all the parts combined in the united mass of means and efforts cannot fail to find greater strength, greater resource, proportionably greater security from external danger, a less frequent interruption of their Peace by foreign Nations; and, what is of inestimable value! they must derive from Union an exemption from those broils and wars between themselves, which so frequently afflict neighboring countries, not tied together by the same government; which their own rivalships alone would be sufficient to produce; but which opposite foreign alliances, attachments, and intrigues would stimulate and embitter. Hence likewise they will avoid the necessity of those overgrown Military establishments, which under any form of government, are inauspicious to liberty, and which are to be regarded as particularly hostile to Republican Liberty: In this sense it is, that your Union ought to be considered as a main prop of your liberty, and that the love of the one ought to endear to you the preservation of the other.

These considerations speak a persuasive language to every reflecting and virtuous mind, and exhibit the continuance of the Union as a primary object of Patriotic desire. Is there a doubt, whether a common government can embrace so large a sphere? Let experience solve it. To listen to mere speculation in such a case were criminal. We are authorized to hope that a proper organization of the whole, with the auxiliary agency of governments for the respective subdivisions, will afford a happy issue to the experiment. Tis well worth a fair and full experiment. With such powerful and obvious motives to Union, affecting all parts of our country, while experience shall not have demonstrated its impracticability, there will always be reason to distrust the patriotism of those, who in any quarter may endeavor to weaken its bands.

In contemplating the causes which may disturb our Union, it occurs as matter of serious concern, that any ground should have been furnished for characterizing parties by Geographical discriminations-Northern and Southern-Atlantic and Western: whence designing men may endeavor to excite a belief, that there is a real difference of local interests and views. One of the expedients of Party to acquire influence, within particular districts, is to misrepresent the opinions and aims of other districts. You cannot shield yourselves too much against the jealousies and heart burnings which spring from these misrepresentations; they tend to render alien to each other those who ought to be bound together by fraternal affection. The inhabitants of our Western country have lately had a useful lesson on this head. They have seen, in the negotiation by the Executive, and in the unanimous ratification by the Senate, of the treaty with Spain, and in the universal satisfaction at that event, throughout the United States, a decisive proof how unfounded were the suspicions propagated among them of a policy in the General Government and in the Atlantic States unfriendly to their interests in regard to the Mississippi. They have been witnesses to the formation of two Treaties. that with Great Britain, and that with Spain, which secured to them every thing they could desire, in respect to our Foreign Relations, towards confirming their prosperity. Will it not be their wisdom to rely for the preservation of these advantages on the Union by which they were procured? Will they not henceforth be deaf to those advisers, if such there are, who would sever them from their Brethren and connect them with Aliens?

To the efficacy and permanency of your Union, a Government for the whole is indispensable. No alliances however strict between the parts can be an adequate substitute. They must inevitably experience the infractions and interruptions which all alliances in all times have experienced. Sensible of this momentous truth, you have improved upon your first essay, by the adoption of a Constitution of Government, better calculated than your former for an intimate Union, and for the efficacious management of your common concerns. This government, the offspring of our own choice uninfluenced and unawed, adopted upon full investigation and mature deliberation, completely free in its principles, in the distribution of its powers, uniting security with energy, and containing within itself a provision for its own amendment, has a just claim to your confidence and your support. Respect for its authority, compliance with its Laws, acquiescence in its measures, are duties enjoined by the fundamental maxims of true Liberty. The basis of our political systems is the right of the people to make and to alter their Constitutions of Government. But the Constitution which at any time exists, 'till changed by an explicit and authentic act of the whole People, is sacredly obligatory upon all. The very idea of the power and the right of the People to establish Government, presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established Government.

All obstructions to the execution of the Laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle, and of fatal tendency. They serve to organize faction, to give it an artificial and extraordinary force—to put in the place of the delegated will of the Nation, the will of a party; often a small but artful and enterprising minority of the community; and, according to the alternate triumphs of different parties, to make the public administration the mirror of the ill-concerted and incongruous projects of faction, rather than the organ of consistent and wholesome plans digested by common councils, and modified by mutual interests. However combinations or associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely, in the course of time and things, to become potent engines, by which cunning, ambitious, and unprincipled men will be enabled to subvert the Power of the People and to usurp for themselves the reins of Government; destroying afterwards the very engines, which have lifted them to unjust dominion.

Towards the preservation of your Government and the permanency of your present happy state, it is requisite, not only that you steadily discountenance irregular oppositions to its acknowledged authority, but also that you resist with care the spirit of innovation upon its principles, however specious the pretexts. One method of assault may be to effect, in the forms of the Constitution, alterations which will impair the energy of the system, and thus to undermine what cannot be directly overthrown. In all the changes to which you may be invited, remember that time and habit are at least as necessary to fix the true character of Governments, as of other human institutions-that experience is the surest standard, by which to test the real tendency of the existing Constitution of a Country—that facility in changes upon the credit of mere hypothesis and opinion exposes to perpetual change, from the endless variety of hypothesis and opinion: and remember, especially, that, for the efficient management of your common interests, in a country so extensive as ours, a Government of as much vigor as is consistent with the perfect security of Liberty is indispensable. Liberty itself will find in such a Government, with powers properly distributed and adjusted, its surest Guardian. It is, indeed, little else than a name, where the Government is too feeble to withstand the enterprises of faction, to confine each member of the society within the limits prescribed by the laws, and to maintain all in the secure and tranquil enjoyment of the rights of person and property.

I have already intimated to you the danger of Parties in the State, with particular reference to the founding of them on Geographical discriminations. Let me now take a more comprehensive view and warn you in the most solemn manner against the baneful effects of the Spirit of Party, generally.

This Spirit, unfortunately, is inseparable from our nature, having its root in the strongest passions of the human mind. It exists under different shapes in all Governments, more or less stifled, controlled, or repressed; but, in those of the popular form, it is seen in its greatest rankness, and is truly their worst enemy.

The alternate domination of one faction over another, sharpened by the spirit of revenge-natural to party dissension, which in different ages and countries has perpetrated the most horrid enormities, is itself a frightful despotism. But this leads at length to a more formal and permanent despotism. The disorders and miseries, which result, gradually incline the minds of men to seek security and repose in the absolute power of an Individual: and sooner or later the chief of some prevailing faction, more able or more fortunate than his competitors, turns this disposition to the purposes of his own elevation, on the ruins of Public Liberty.

Without looking forward to an extremity of this kind (which nevertheless ought not to be entirely out of sight), the common and continual mischiefs of the spirit of Party are sufficient to make it the interest and duty of a wise

People to discourage and restrain it.

It serves always to distract the Public Councils, and enfeeble the Public administration. It agitates the community with ill-founded jealousies and false alarms, kindles the animosity of one part against another, foments occasionally riot and insurrection. It opens the doors to foreign influence and corruption, which find a facilitated access to the Government itself through the channels of party passions. Thus the policy and the will of one country, are subjected to the policy and will of another.

There is an opinion that parties in free countries are useful checks upon the Administration of the Government, and serve to keep alive the Spirit of Liberty. This within certain limits is probably true—and in Governments of a Monarchical cast, Patriotism may look with indulgence, if not with favor, upon the spirit of party. But in those of the popular character, in Governments purely elective, it is a spirit not to be encouraged. From their natural tendency, it is certain there will always be enough of that spirit for every salutary purpose, and there being constant danger of excess, the effort ought to be, by force of public opinion, to mitigate and assuage it. A fire not to be quenched; it demands a uniform vigilance to prevent its bursting into a flame, lest, instead of warming, it should consume.

It is important, likewise, that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those intrusted with its administration, to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres; avoiding in the exercise of the powers of one department to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism. A just estimate of that love of power, and proneness to abuse it, which predominates in the human heart, is sufficient to satisfy us of the truth of this position. The necessity of reciprocal checks in the exercise of political power, by dividing and distributing it into different depositories, and constituting each the Guardian of the Public Weal against invasions by the others, has been evinced by experiments ancient and modern; some of them in our country and under our own eyes. To preserve them must be as necessary as to institute them. If, in the opinion of the People, the distribution or modification of the Constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the Constitution designates. But let there be no change by usurpation; for though this, in one instance, may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed. The precedent must always greatly overbalance in permanent evil any partial or transient benefit which the use can at any time yield.

Of all the dispositions and habits, which lead to political prosperity, Religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of Patriotism, who should labor to subvert these great Pillars of human happiness, these firmest props of the duties of Men and Citizens. The mere Politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and to cherish them. A volume could not trace all their connections with private and public felicity.

Let it simply be asked where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths, which are the instruments of investigation in Courts of Justice? And let us with caution indulge the supposition, that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure—reason and experience both forbid us to expect, that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle.

'T is substantially true, that virtue or morality is a necessary spring of popular government. The rule indeed extends with more or less force to every species of Free Government. Who that is a sincere friend to it can look with indifference upon attempts to shake the foundation of the fabric?

Promote, then, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge. In proportion as the structure of a government gives force to public opinion, it is essential that public opinion should be enlightened.

As a very important source of strength and security, cherish public credit. One method of preserving it is, to use it as sparingly as possible: avoiding occasions of expense by cultivating peace, but remembering also that timely disbursements to prepare for danger frequently prevent much greater disbursements to repel it-avoiding likewise the accumulation of debt, not only by shunning occasions of expense, but by vigorous exertions in time of Peace to discharge the debts which unavoidable wars have occasioned. not ungenerously throwing upon posterity the burden which we ourselves ought to bear. The execution of these maxims belongs to your Representatives, but it is necessary that public opinion should cooperate. To facilitate to them the performance of their duty, it is essential that you should practically bear in mind, that towards the payment of debts there must be Revenue—that to have Revenue there must be taxes—that no taxes can be devised which are not more or less inconvenient and unpleasant; that the intrinsic embarrassment inseparable from the selection of the proper objects (which is always a choice of difficulties) ought to be a decisive motive for a candid construction of the conduct of the Government in making it, and for a spirit of acquiescence in the measures for obtaining Revenue which the public exigencies may at any time dictate.

Observe good faith and justice towards all Nations. Cultivate peace and harmony with all. Religion and Morality enjoin this conduct; and can it be that good policy does not equally enjoin it? It will be worthy of a free, enlightened, and, at no distant period, a great nation, to give to mankind the magnanimous and too novel example of a People always guided by an exalted justice and benevolence. Who can doubt that in the course of time and things, the fruits of such a plan would richly repay any temporary advantages, which might be lost by a steady adherence to it? Can it be that Providence has not connected the permanent felicity of a Nation with its virtue? The experiment, at least, is recommended by every sentiment which ennobles human nature. Alas! is it rendered impossible by its vices?

In the execution of such a plan nothing is more essential than that permanent, inveterate antipathies against particular nations and passionate attachments for others should be excluded; and that in place of them just and amicable feelings towards all should be cultivated. The Nation, which indulges towards another an habitual hatred or an habitual fondness, is in some degree a slave. It is a slave to its animosity or to its affection, either of which is sufficient to lead it astray from its duty and its interest. Antipathy in one nation against another disposes each more readily to offer insult and injury, to lay hold of slight causes of umbrage, and to be haughty and intractable, when accidental or trifling occasions of dispute occur. Hence frequent collisions, obstinate, envenomed and bloody contests. The Nation prompted by ill-will and resentment sometimes impels to War the Government, contrary to the best calculations of policy. The Government sometimes participates in the national propensity, and adopts through passion what reason would reject; at other times, it makes the animosity of the Nation subservient to projects of hostility instigated by pride, ambition, and other sinister and pernicious motives. The peace often, sometimes perhaps the Liberty, of Nations, has been the victim.

So likewise a passionate attachment of one Nation for another produces a variety of evils. Sympathy for the favorite nation, facilitating the illusion of an imaginary common interest in cases where no real common interest exists, and infusing into one the enmities of the other, betrays the former into a participation in the quarrels and wars of the latter, without adequate inducement or justification: It leads also to concessions to the favorite Nation, of privileges denied to others, which is apt doubly to injure the Nation making the concessions; by unnecessarily parting with what ought to have been retained, and by exciting jealousy, ill-will, and a disposition to retaliate, in the parties from whom equal privileges are withheld; and it gives to ambitious, corrupted, or deluded citizens (who devote themselves to the favorite Nation) facility to betray, or sacrifice the interests of their own country, without odium, sometimes even with popularity: gilding with the appearances of a virtuous sense of obligation, a commendable deference for public opinion, or a laudable zeal for public good, the base or foolish compliances of ambition, corruption or infatuation.

As avenues to foreign influence in innumerable ways, such attachments are particularly alarming to the truly enlightened and independent Patriot. How many opportunities do they afford to tamper with domestic factions, to practice the arts of seduction, to mislead public opinion, to influence or awe the public councils! Such an attachment of a small or weak towards a great and powerful nation, dooms the former to be the satellite of the latter.

Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence, I conjure you to believe me, fellow-citizens, the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake, since history and experience prove that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican Government. But that jealousy, to be useful, must be impartial; else it becomes the instrument of the very influence to be avoided, instead of a defense against it. Excessive partiality for one foreign nation and excessive dislike of another, cause those whom they actuate to see danger only on one side, and serve to veil and even second the arts of influence on the other. Real Patriots, who may resist the intrigues of the favorite, are liable to become suspected and odious; while its tools and dupes usurp the applause and confidence of the people, to surrender their interests.

The great rule of conduct for us, in regard to foreign Nations, is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little Political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements, let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith. Here let us stop.

Europe has a set of primary interests, which to us have none, or a very remote relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence therefore it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves, by artificial ties in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics, or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships, or enmities.

Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course. If we remain one People, under an efficient government, the period is not far off, when we may defy material injury from external annoyance; when we may take such an attitude as will cause the neutrality we may at any time resolve upon to be scrupulously respected. When belligerent nations, under the impossibility of making acquisitions upon us, will not lightly hazard the giving us provocation when we may choose peace or war, as our interest guided by our justice shall counsel.

Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice?

"T is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliances, with any portion of the foreign world; so far, I mean, as we are now at liberty to do it—for let me not be understood as capable of patronizing infidelity to existing engagements (I hold the maxim no less applicable to public than to private affairs, that honesty is always the best policy). I repeat therefore let those engagements be observed in their genuine sense. But in my opinion it is unnecessary and would be unwise to extend them.

Taking care always to keep ourselves, by suitable establishments, on a respectable defensive posture, we may safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies.

Harmony, liberal intercourse with all nations, are recommended by policy, humanity, and interest. But even our commercial policy should hold an equal and impartial hand: neither seeking nor granting exclusive favors or preferences; consulting the natural course of things; diffusing and diversifying by gentle means the streams of commerce, but forcing nothing; establishing with Powers so disposed—in order to give trade a stable course, to define the rights of our Merchants, and to enable the Government to support them-conventional rules of intercourse, the best that present circumstances and mutual opinion will permit; but temporary, and liable to be from time to time abandoned or varied, as experience and circumstances shall dictate; constantly keeping in view that 't is folly in one nation to look for disinterested favors from another, that it must pay with a portion of its independence for whatever it may accept under that character—that by such acceptance, it may place itself in the condition of having given equivalents for nominal favors and yet of being reproached with ingratitude for not giving more. There can be no greater error than to expect, or calculate upon real favors from Nation to Nation. 'T is an illusion which experience must cure, which a just pride ought to discard.

In offering to you, my Countrymen, these counsels of an old and affectionate friend, I dare not hope they will make the strong and lasting impression, I could wish, that they will control the usual current of the passions, or prevent our Nation from running the course which has hitherto marked the destiny of Nations. But if I may even flatter myself, that they may be productive of some partial benefit; some occasional good; that they may now and then recur to moderate the fury of party spirit, to warn against the mischiefs of foreign intrigue, to guard against the impostures of pretended patriotism, this hope will be a full recompense for the solicitude for your welfare, by which they have been dictated.

How far in the discharge of my official duties, I have been guided by the principles which have been delineated, the public Records and other evidences of my conduct must witness to You, and to the world. To myself the assurance of my own conscience is, that I have at least believed myself to be guided by them.

In relation to the still subsisting War in Europe, my Proclamation of the 22d of April 1793 is the index to my plan. Sanctioned by your approving voice and by that of Your Representatives in both Houses of Congress, the spirit of that measure has continually governed me: uninfluenced by any attempts to deter or divert me from it.

After deliberate examination with the aid of the best lights I could obtain, I was well satisfied that our country, under all the circumstances of the case, had a right to take, and was bound in duty and interest, to take a Neutral position. Having taken it, I determined, as far as should depend upon me, to maintain it, with moderation, perseverance, and firmness

The considerations which respect the right to hold this conduct, it is not necessary on this occasion to detail. I will only observe, that, according to my understanding of the matter, that right, so far from being denied by any of the Belligerent Powers, has been virtually admitted by all.

The duty of holding a neutral conduct may be inferred, without anything more, from the obligation which justice and humanity impose on every Nation, in cases in which it is free to act, to maintain inviolate the relations of Peace and Amity towards other Nations.

The inducements of interest for observing that conduct will best be referred to your own reflections and experience. With me, a predominant motive has been to endeavor to gain time to our country to settle and mature its yet recent institutions, and to progress without interruption to that degree of strength and consistency, which is necessary to give it, humanly speaking, the command of its own fortune.

Though, in reviewing the incidents of my Administration, I am unconscious of intentional error—I am nevertheless too sensible of my defects not to think it probable that I may have committed many errors. Whatever they may be, I fervently beseech the Almighty to avert or mitigate the evils to which they may tend. I shall also carry with me the hope that my country will never cease to view them with indulgence; and that after forty-five years of my life dedicated to its service, with an upright zeal, the faults of incompetent abilities will be consigned to oblivion, as myself must soon be to the mansions of rest.

Relying on its kindness in this as in other things, and actuated by that fervent love towards it, which is so natural to a man, who views in it the native soil of himself and his progenitors for several generations; I anticipate with pleasing expectation that retreat, in which I promise myself to realize, without alloy, the sweet enjoyment of partaking, in the midst of my fellow-citizens, the benign influence of good Laws under a free Government, the ever favorite object of my heart, and the happy reward, as I trust, of our mutual cares, labors, and dangers.

GEO. WASHINGTON.

UNITED STATES, September 19th, 1796.

[Applause.]

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] 30 minutes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, the sums provided in the naval appropriation bill always seem large, although they total only 7 or 8 per cent of the total Federal appropriations. The Army and Navy bills are always looked to when economies are demanded. Great reductions have been made in those bills in recent years, and it is proper that reductions should have been made, in view of the economic conditions throughout the country. But there are limits beyond which the Congress should not go. It would be foolish to spend hundreds of millions of dollars in the creation of a Navy and the training of its officers and men and then destroy the Navy that has so painstakingly been built up by providing insufficient funds to maintain it.

The Federal appropriations for the fiscal year 1933 total $4,149,627,304. The table below shows the purposes under general heads for which that sum was expended.

	Amount	Per cent
Veteran's Administration	$1, 020, 464, 000	24. 59
Public debt retirement. Interest on the public debt. Executive Offices, legislative and independent establish-	496, 803, 478 640, 000, 000	11. 97 15. 42

Nonmilitary activities, War Department. War Department, military activities. Navy.	162, 864, 819 305, 739, 924 328, 906, 141	3. 93 7. 37 7. 93

Pacifists throughout the country are prone to state that the expenditures in this country for wars—past, present, and future—are in excess of 70 per cent of the total Federal appropriations. In that 70 per cent they include the cost of the Veterans' Administration, the funds provided for the retirement of the public debt, and the interest on the public debt. These three items in 1933 consumed 51.98 per cent of the Federal appropriations for that year. These expenditures added not one iota to the strength of our national defense or to its readiness to-day to defend the Nation. The $2,157,267,478, which comprises 51.98 per cent of the total appropriations, is the cost that this country pays annually for unpreparedness. Prior to our entry into the Great War, Colonel House, the intimate adviser of President Wilson, made this most significant statement:

If war comes with Germany, it will be because of our unpreparedness and her belief that we are more or less impotent to do her harm.

In the figures which I have just given to you, the only items which directly contribute to the national defense of this country are the $305,739,924 which are spent for the military activities of the War Department and the $328,906,141 which are spent for the Navy. These two sums are equal to only 15.3 per cent of the total Federal appropriations.

Large though these sums may seem, they do not constitute that crushing burden of armaments which the pacifist speaks of so glibly. Why, gentlemen, the citizens of this country spend more each year upon perfume alone than is spent for the maintenance, upbuilding, and operation of the Navy. They spend approximately one-third of the sum necessary for the Navy on chewing gum alone. The income derived from the tax upon tobacco would build and maintain our Navy with ease. In other words, gentlemen, the cost of armament in this country does not constitute the crushing burden which the pacifist would have you believe. The Navy costs each person in this country less than one cent per day. Armament and preparedness are not the things that cost so much; it is the result of unpreparedness that is so costly. Again and again history repeats itself. Our national defense in time of peace is allowed to decline and to grow weak, and when war comes, as unhappily it does. billions of dollars are poured out in the vain effort to build up our Navy and to create an Army to meet the emergency that we find upon us. Again and again we must be taught that soldiers can not be made in a day and that it takes years to create ships.

In the last war we laid down 171 destroyers, but by the time the armistice had been declared we had been able to complete only 38 of that number, and only 27 of those completed reached the war zone before November 11, 1918. We sent our men to battle against the most highly trained army in the world when some of them did not know how to load and fire a rifle or a machine gun. They had not been trained to do it. Thorough military and naval training requires time. The policy of our country has been to maintain a relatively small Army, to which civilian components could be added in the event of an emergency, but on the other hand to maintain a strong Navy, which would act as a sure protection to our country while our Army was being prepared.

I do not for a moment wish to indicate that the amounts expended upon our Navy should not be carefully scrutinized or that the expenditures made by the Navy should not be regulated by the strictest economy, but if we are to have a Navy we must appropriate adequate funds to build it, to maintain it, and to operate it. The income of our people. even in these times of depression, is greater than that of any other country in the world. Under normal conditions forty-three one-hundredths of 1 per cent of our national income went to the maintenance of our Navy. Three times as great a percentage, or 1.48 per cent, of the national income of Great Britain went to the maintenance of her navy, exclusive of her air force; 1.67 per cent of the French income went toward the navy, exclusive of the air force; 1.75 per cent of the Italian national income went for their navy. exclusive of the air force. And in Japan 2.39 per cent of the national income went for the maintenance of the Imperial Japanese Navy. If we are to remain a great power and a great force for good in this troublesome world, we must have the will to do so, the will to provide a proper Navy, for the influence that we will exert in Europe and in the Far East will be largely in proportion to the naval strength which we have.

It must be remembered that appropriations made for the Navy are in no sense an economic waste. The money provided for the Navy is expended for American commodities and is used to pay the wages of Americans. These funds placed in circulation furnish the medium for the purchase of products that are produced in all parts of the country. The wages paid to the men at shipbuilding plants enable them to purchase food and clothing, which helps to maintain commodity prices throughout the country. But food and clothing are not the only items to benefit. During a recent 12-month period the Navy drew from its storehouses for use more than 20,000 tons of iron and steel, more than 2,700 tons of nonferrous metal, more than 1,100 miles of insulated wire and cable, nearly 800,000 gallons of paint. It utilized more than 5,700,000 barrels of fuel oil, more than 500,000 tons of coal, more than 20,000,000 feet of lumber, more than 3,400 bales of cotton, and more than 200,000 pounds of wool.

These items had to be replaced, and the replacement furnished labor for the steel worker in Pennsylvania, the brass worker in Connecticut, the oil driller in Texas, the coal miner in Virginia, the lumberman in the great Northwest, the cotton grower in the South, and the sheep herder in Montana.

To feed the enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps, millions of pounds of meat, flour, vegetables, dairy products, and fruit, and millions of eggs are required annually, and this demand aids in keeping up the market price for the products of the farmer, the stockraiser, the dairyman, and the poultryman. These funds appropriated for the construction of new ships and for the maintenance and operation of those ships already built percolate to all parts of the country. Every State benefits.

In 1932 it is estimated that more than a million dollars of the naval appropriation was expended for the products of each of the following States: West Virginia, Tennessee, Minnesota, Kentucky, Kansas, Iowa, Colorado, and Alabama; more than $2,000,000 for the products of Wisconsin, Indiana, Georgia, and Florida; more than $3,000,000 for those of Texas, South Carolina, Missouri, and Michigan; more than $5,000,000 for those of Washington, Rhode Island, Maryland, Maine, Illinois, Delaware, and Connecticut; more than $10,-000,000 for the products of New Jersey; and even greater sums in Virginia, Pennsylvania, New York, Massachusetts, and California. Every State benefits by these expenditures, and its industries are stimulated thereby.

The following table shows an estimate of the distribution of naval expenditures for the fiscal year 1932-that is, the States whose activities would receive direct benefits from these naval appropriations through the stabilization of markets:

There can be no better means of providing relief for the unemployed than through the construction of new ships for the Navy and through the maintenance and operation of those which we now have. As indicated above, the benefits of such construction extend to every corner of this great country. When you place out of active commission a battleship, you immediately decrease the demand for those products and manufactured articles which are necessary to maintain and operate it. The greater the number of ships so taken from active commission, the greater will be the decrease in the demand. Decreased demand means a still further lowering of price levels, and this lowering of price levels means further unemployment on the farm and in the factory. That is one phase of the naval situation, but an important one.

One of the primary duties that the Constitution places upon the Congress is to provide for the national defense. That obligation rests upon us individually and collectively. In view of the conditions pertaining throughout the world to-day and the inferior strength to which our Navy has fallen in heavy cruisers, aircraft carriers, light cruisers, destroyers, and submarines, it behooves every Member of this House to consider carefully if he wishes to still further reduce the relative strength of our Navy in comparison with that of Japan and Great Britain.

The 5-5-3 ratio so often spoken of, sounds well but is fast becoming for us only a self-deluding fiction.

Under the terms of the London and Washington treaties the United States may have a total maximum combatant ship tonnage of 1,201,700, as compared with 1,201,700 for Great Britain and 763,000 for Japan. Separate tonnage limitations are applied to the battleships, aircraft carriers, heavy cruisers, light cruisers, destroyers, and submarines as follows:

2 9 vessels.
1 France and Italy are not limited as to number of vessels, but are limited in tonnage to 175,000 tons.
2 30,000 tons may not be completed until 1936, 1937, and 1938.
5 France and Italy did not ratify the London treaty fixing allowances in these categories.
7 15,500 tons may be added to this amount if the United States elects to have only fifteen 8-inch-gun cruisers instead of eighteen 8-inch-gun cruisers.

As you know, the United States has led the world in its efforts to reduce and limit armaments. It instigated the Limitation of Armaments Conference that resulted in the Washington treaty of 1922. After the ratification of that treaty we neglected to lay down and to build ships of those types in which we were inferior to other powers, in the vain hope that they would follow our example and that competition in naval armaments might be eliminated; but while we failed to build, other nations proceeded to construct ships of those types which the Washington treaty did not limit, and they have continued consistently to lay down ships in those categories.

We became a signatory of the London conference in 1930, | which established tonnage limits on those types of ships which were not limited by the Washington treaty. But while definite ratios have been established, the necessary steps have not been taken to provide for the construction of ships in those types in which we are below the treaty ratio, or even to replace ships which are becoming over age.

Since the Washington treaty of 1922 we have provided for but 40 ships, of a total of 197,640 tons, as compared with 148 ships, of a total of 472,311 tons for Great Britain, and 164 ships of 409,867 tons for Japan. During that period France has provided for 196 ships of 507,737 tons, and Italy for 144 ships of 297,072 tons. The types and tonnages that go to make up totals are as follows:

¹ United States, England, and Japan have each converted 2 ships to aircraft carriers since the Washington treaty; France, 1.
² 2 additional authorized, but may not be laid down until 1934 and 1935.
³ Only 5 actually under construction, but contracts have been awarded for 3 additional.
⁴ Includes Promethee and Ondine, sunk.
⁴ Includes 1 aircraft tender of 4,862 tons converted from merchant steamer.

Our failure to provide new ships to bring us up to the ! treaty ratios and replacements for those ships that became over age has resulted in our having on the 31st of December, 1932, only 101 under-age ships of 728,000 tons, as compared with 138 of 980,169 tons for Great Brintain and 184 of 726,138 tons for Japan. The detailed distribution of ships and tonnage is as follows:

That situation, when you analyze it, is astounding. Instead of a 5-3 ratio as to Japan, we find ourselves with less than five-ninths of the number of under-age ships that she has and about an equal tonnage. In under-age heavy cruisers, light cruisers, destroyers, and submarines we are inferior to Japan, both in numbers and in tonnage.

Let us consider this situation, type by type, as it existed on the 31st of December, 1932.

CAPITAL SHIPS

Take first the capital ships; that is, the battleship or battle cruiser. Japan has 10 under-age ships of this type with a total of 298,400 tons' displacement, as compared with 15 possessed by Great Britain of 473,650 tons' displacement and 14 possessed by the United States of 429,300 tons' displacement. Although we are below our treaty ratio, we can not under the terms of the London treaty lay down any capital ships prior to the expiration of that treaty in 1936.

AIRCRAFT CARRIERS

Japan has 4 under-age aircraft carriers of a total of 68,870 tons, as compared with 6 of Great Britain of 115,350 tons and 3 of the United States of 77,500 tons. One of our 3 carriers is the Langley, an old converted collier.

HEAVY CRUISERS

Japan has 12 under-age heavy cruisers of 107,800 tons, as compared with 19 of Great Britain of a total of 183,686 tons and 9 of the United States of 82,850 tons.

LIGHT CRUISERS

Japan has 17 under-age light cruisers of a total of 81,455 tons, as compared with 24 of Great Britain of 114,020 tons and 10 of the United States of 70,500 tons. We are completely outclassed in light cruisers.

DESTROYERS

Japan has 72 under-age destroyers of a total of 93,205 tons, as compared with 40 of Great Britain of 52,849 tons and only 14 of the United States of 16,560 tons. Our vaunted destroyer superiority has vanished, and we are far below Great Britain and Japan.

SUBMARINES

Japan has 69 under-age submarines of a total of 76,408 tons, as compared to 34 of Great Britain of 40,614 tons and 51 of the United States of 51,290 tons. Although we are superior to Great Britain in the number and tonnage of under-age submarines, we are far below Japan in both numbers and tonnage.

It is true, gentlemen, that we have the following over-age

It must ever be remembered when we consider over-age | ships that such ships are just as obsolete to-day as are the aircraft which were built in 1918. Some of the planes we then sent our aviators aloft in were referred to as "flying coffins." These over-age ships, with inferior gun power, with slower speed, with deteriorated hulls and machinery will truly be "floating coffins" if they are sent to battle against modern ships. We keep them to-day because we have nothing better, but they are no ships on which to send the youth of this country to do battle with an enemy. No country has a moral right to demand that her soldiers and sailors go into battle with strength and equipment inferior to her opponents. Yet, unless we prepare adequately in time of peace, that is the inevitable necessity when war comes. Once war has been declared it will be too late to prepare, and all the wealth of Cresus would not be able to furnish ships and guns and proper training to be effective in sufficient time. Battle is a gruesome contest, upon which the fate of our other ships are built-will be as follows:

Nation may depend. Are the people of this country, the richest country in the world, even in spite of the depression, willing to send their sons out to meet an enemy in ships that are old, slow, obsolete, and of inferior strength, in order to save a few dollars? Is the defense of your country to be jeopardized? Are the lives of your sons and grandsons to be offered up as a living sacrifice because you are unwilling to provide the funds for the support of a proper Navy in time of peace?

Bad as is the situation to-day, it will be far worse in 1936 unless the Congress takes immediate steps to authorize and lay down new ships. As I previously indicated, no capital ships can be laid down prior to the expiration of the London Treaty in 1936. The under-age aircraft carriers, heavy cruisers, light cruisers, destroyers, and submarines that the several powers will then have-provided that the ships now building and appropriated for are completed and that no aircraft carrier, heavy cruiser, light cruiser, destroyer, and submarine categories, as compared with 130 for Great Britain and 151 for Japan.

It must be apparent to anyone that if the Navy of the United States is to be able to support our policies, protect our trade, and defend our possessions it must be provided with new aircraft carriers, new light cruisers, new destroyers, and new submarines.

The position of our country as a world power and the strength of our policies are closely related to the strength of our Navy. Without doubt, our influence in the Far East has been greatly lessened with the decrease of the strength of our Navy, as compared with that of Japan.

The international situation to-day is far from reassuring. The future is far from bright.

We stand practically alone and friendless in this turbulent world, and must depend upon ourselves for our protection and defense. This is no time to scuttle the Navy and Jeopardize the safety of our country. Rather must we proceed to build up that Navy to the relative strength provided by the Washington and London treaties. We must provide replacements for those ships that become over age and build new ships to bring us up to treaty strength. That building up of our Navy must be along gradual and progressive lines in order that the ships may be constructed with the greatest economy. With such a progressive continuing program, our Navy can be built up with an expenditure, for new construction, of about $63,000,000 per year, and that sum is the amount that is available for expenditure during the fiscal

I wish hereby to give notice to the House that, with the convening of the next Congress, I propose to introduce a bill providing for the upbuilding of our Navy and to use my utmost endeavor to have it enacted into law. The time has not yet come when America must depend upon the Navy of some foreign power for its safety and the protection of its interests. [Applause.]

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I will, with pleasure.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The speech of the gentleman from Georgia is most timely, and what is even more important, it is accurate and very informing. If convenient,

We will have a total of only 60 underage vessels in the | I hope my friend, after the percentages of expenditures listed, he will translate into dollar and cents such percentages. Also after the statement showing food products, which the Navy purchases, it would be interesting to have the gentleman insert the low cost per man that the Navy maintains its personnel on.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I will do so.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman further insert the building programs that have been authorized since the program of 1916?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I will. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Underhill].

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to address myself for just a moment to a very important insertion in the Record of yesterday, February 21, 1933, beginning on page 4720, entitled "Work of the League of Nations from July 24, 1922, to September 30, 1922." That is some 11 years ago. The question under consideration at the time was the joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. I have looked carefully through the speech, although I have not read it all, to find some allusion to the subject matter, but I find, instead, that the salaries of the registrars of the Permanent Court of International Justice take up quite a little space, and also find that minorities in Albania, and in Estonia are given considerable prominence; also that the Silesian question comes into this discussion of a change in our Constitution, and the work of council in the Aaland Islands.

I do not know where they are, though I suppose I ought to, but they are not part of the United States. Then there is a whole lot about Eastern Carelia in this speech. Going through it I found something along toward the end that I thought would have something of interest in it, and that is the position of Georgia, but upon reading it I find that it does not refer to the Georgia from which our good friend CARL VINSON comes, but a Georgia somewhere in the innermost recesses of the Balkan Mountains.

This whole thing must have been of very great importance, because it takes up 24 double pages of the RECORD, and cost the people of the United States over $1,200 to print.

Mr. BRITTEN. I suggest to the gentleman that it takes | 40-odd pages instead of 20.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I said double pages. It cost over $1.200.

Mr. Chairman, we are not allowed to refer in any way, shape, or manner to another body, and I have not done so, but it seems to me that action should be taken in the Committee on Printing to bring about a continuity of action on the part of the House and the Senate. I am leaving this body, but for the past several years I have perhaps handicapped my colleagues here by objecting to the insertion in the RECORD of matter which would have cost the taxpayers an unconscionable sum of money. The House has been very generous with me. Its Members have treated me kindly; they have accepted the position I have taken in respect to these matters, realizing that I did it not because of anything which might bring me benefit, but because I was trying to protect them from the criticism of the press, to protect them and to protect the taxpayers of this country. But it is unfair that a man should rise on the floor of this House and ask for an insertion in the Record of certain matter, and that I should object, or that some other person should object for the reasons set forth, and that somebody in another body can put such drivel as this into the RECORD. which costs the taxpayers more money than it would cost to print the book in the first place and print it as a public document. It has nothing whatever to do with the United States. It is subject matter in which not one-half of onetenth of 1 per cent of the people of our country could have any interest, and I protest at this waste of public money. [Applause.]

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Mansfield].

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, much has been said in recent years about the condition of the farming industry and especially as to that of the cotton farmer. Congress has speculated on almost every supposed remedy that human ingenuity might suggest. The equalization fee, the export debenture, and the allotment plans have all been seriously considered, though none of these measures have been put into actual practice.

The Federal Farm Board has been created, and tariffs have been levied upon the importation of certain farm products. Still the condition of the cotton farmer has been growing worse with each year, and few, if any, farm crops can be sold for a price sufficient to cover the cost of production.

In 1929, when the Committee on Ways and Means was holding hearings upon the Hawley-Smoot tariff measure, with a view, as stated, of "equalizing the products of the farm with the products of the factory," I went before that committee and made an argument for a tariff to be levied upon the importation of copra and coconut oil.

These articles were then coming in from the Orient, and principally from the Philippines, at the rate of about $50,000,000 worth per annum, and constituted by far the greatest competitor of cottonseed oil. The imports of copra and coconut oil at that time constituted about 12 per cent of the total imports at San Francisco, 34 per cent of the imports at Portland, and 49 per cent of the total imports at Oakland. Other importations of these commodities, but in less volume, comparatively, were received at Los Angeles and other Pacific ports and at Atlantic and Gulf ports.

My statement before the Committee on Ways and Means was bitterly assailed by the importers, manufacturers, and users of coconut oil. They contended that the principal consumption of coconut oil was in the manufacture of laundry soap, though large quantities were also used in making toilet soap and for various other purposes.

Those gentlemen contended that cottonseed oil could no longer be profitably used in the manufacture of soap for the reason that the public had become educated to the white soap made from the coconut oil and would buy no other. They said that the soap made from cottonseed oil was of a yellow tint, and to which the customers objected. It was an admitted fact, however, that the yellow-tinted soap made from the cottonseed oil was just as good as the white soap made from the coconut oil.

At the time of those hearings, I was not aware of the fact that the railroads were discriminating against cottonseed oil in their freight rates to the large consuming centers of the interior. Under more recent developments we find that it was not the difference in the color of the soap, but the difference in the freight rates charged by the railroads, that rendered it impossible for the cottonseed oil to compete with the coconut oil.

My colleague from Texas, Hon. Marvin Jones, chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, has been making investigations in regard to freight rates as they affect farm products. In an able address on December 16, 1930, he presented some interesting figures obtained from the Interstate Commerce Commission. Among other things it was shown that the rail rate on coconut oil from Galveston to Chicago was 35 cents per 100 pounds, while on cottonseed oil it was 55 cents. The rate from Galveston to Cincinnati on coconut oil was 30 cents per 100 pounds, while on cottonseed oil it was 61½ cents.

It will be observed that in the rate to Cincinnati, the discrimination against cottonseed oil was in far greater proportion than it was in the rate to Chicago. The rate on coconut oil to Cincinnati was 5 cents less than it was to Chicago, while on cottonseed oil it was 6½ cents more, and a little more than double the rate on coconut oil. In every instance the advantage in rates was in favor of the coconut oil, but in the enormously discriminatory rates to Cincinnati, the effect has been to completely eliminate cottonseed oil from competing with coconut oil in the manufacture of soap.

It will be borne in mind that Cincinnati is the location of the establishment of the Procter & Gamble Co., the largest manufacturers of soap in the world. That company is also said to be the largest consumer of coconut oil in the United States. With this great discrimination in freight rates against cottonseed oil, it is plain enough to see why such great effort has been put forth by interested parties to popularize the white soap made from the imported coconut oil

A few months ago, Thornton Hamilton, president of the Cuero Cotton Oil & Manufacturing Co. of Cuero, Tex., shipped several tank-car loads of what is known as "cottonseed foots," a by-product of the refined oil. The price received lacked about $110 of paying the freight charges. In former years, one tank-car load of this oil was worth more than $2,000, f. o. b. at Cuero. While the market price of this farm commodity has been reduced enormously, the freight rate upon it has been increased enormously.

This is an illustration of the course mapped out by the railroads. All other industries in the United States, including labor and agriculture, must bear their part of the great burden of the depression, but railroad rates must not be interfered with. They must stand, though the heavens should fall.

The South is largely interested in the production of cotton-seed oil. The production in Texas alone, in normal times, is about 525,000,000 pounds, and worth about $42,000,000. Many other States are largely interested. The 35,000,000 people who inhabit those States can do much to aid this industry. Other things being equal, they should patronize its products. They should at least do as much to promote the industry as other interests have done to destroy it through discriminating and confiscatory freight rates.

The soap made from cottonseed oil, having a delicate yellow golden tint, is a thousand times more beautiful than the plain white soap made from the imported coconut oil. All admit that it is just as good. Why not purchase and use it? The yellow color in soap is the cotton farmer's trademark. It represents the product of the toil of many millions of our home people, now in the hour of their greatest adversity.

Every possible effort should be put forth to popularize and encourage the use of the tinted soap made from the product of our native soil. Every newspaper of the South should call it to the attention of the public. Every chamber of commerce should put forth an organized movement in its behalf. An intensive program of advertising would | add many millions to the income of our cotton farmers, and without one cent of additional cost to the consumers. Factories would adjust themselves to the demands of the trade, and freight discriminations against cottonseed oil would soon disappear. While we are conducting intensive studies to discover new uses for cotton, this movement would be a forward step in that direction.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 minutes. Mr. Chairman, the first thought that is in my mind is to acknowledge the debt of gratitude of myself, and I am sure, of my colleagues upon the committee, to our distinguished chairman, the Hon. WILLIAM A. AYRES, of Kansas. Gracious, courteous, kindly at all times, he has presided over the committee with such fairness, dignity, and sense of patriotic devotion as to command the confidence and support of all. [Applause.]

The Congress at all times is solicitous of the welfare of the Republic. Particularly upon the occasion when supply bills are brought to our attention that have to do directly with national defense do we make special inquiry and ask,

With the presentation of the annual Budget for the support of the Naval Establishment we want to think over the mission of the Navy and consider whether or not it is in a state of readiness to perform its mission.

The Naval Establishment is an adjunct of our Government. Its mission, its policies, must be the mission, the policies of our Government. Our country is dedicated to the ideals of peace; we have no grudges to satisfy, no scores to make even; we aspire to no conquests. As a member of the world community of nations, we have rights to uphold and defend-rights that are not narrow or selfish, but that are world-wide and under which humanity as it is represented in all nations may go forward.

It is not difficult to write formulæ to which substantially all people may subscribe, declarations of love for humanity, professions of devotion to country, dedications to the ideals of peace, condemnation of the waste of war, approval of adequate national defense; but the writing of these formulæ into statutes and budgets and ships and men in uniform,

"aye, there is the rub!"

I think of our Naval Establishment just as I think of the fire department of a city. I can not agree with the patriotic, earnest men and women who feel that world peace would be more secure if the United States alone were to wipe out our Navy, any more than I could retire at night with a sense of added security if the fire department had been abolished. Nor would I approve of a fire station with engines and hose and ladders and clanging cars and sirens and fire fighters on every corner. I should be afraid the fighters would strike matches just to have something to do and to maintain public interest.

So, Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to greater naval establishments than we need. We must not be moved by the advice of centers that have navy yards to maintain, or that hope to add pay rolls to their communities by the establishment of navy yards; we must not be controlled by the advice of officers, no matter how honest and patriotic they may be, who are entirely wrapped up in the service, who have promotions to consider, retirement pay to augment, and personal interest to serve, and who by their very environment have been given a distorted opinion oftentimes of world affairs; and we must be deaf to the advice of munition manufacturers who grow strong on war and who make profits through death and carnage.

Hazards that threaten conflagration in any city determine the adequacy of the fire department. Cities give thoughtful attention to the removal of hazards. Naval and other military establishments exist because of world hazards. Nations must give attention to their removal.

When the World War came to an end November 11, 1918, all great powers found themselves with enormous armies and navies and with a distorted conception of what would constitute adequate peace-time military and naval establishments. An army of 300,000 to 500,000 men, a navy that would cost $500,000,000 or more a year to maintain-these I through which reductions were made in the number and were recommendations of devoted Army and Navy officers for America.

Only last week one of our illustrious naval officers repeated the stock argument of a dozen years ago that if in 1914 the United States had been prepared with an adequate navy "we could have prevented the World War." Of course, there can be no basis for such a statement. People who make it forget that history is against them. They forget that the nations that were not drawn into the war speedily or at all were the nations of moderate naval and military programs. They forget that during the decade prior to 1914 the nations that first of all became involved had made themselves the most heavily armed; that during those 10 years these nations had been building up their so-called defense establishments, until at the time the World War broke there existed the most powerful armies and the most powerful navies the world had ever known. They forget that each of these powerful nations pretended to think, and probably did think, that its army and its navy would prevent war.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at this point?

Mr. FRENCH. No. I am following a line of thought that I want to carry through. Later I shall be glad to yield.

With what conceit may we assume that if only one more nation had been wickedly armed-that nation the United States-the World War would not have been?

CONFLICTING COURSES

With blurred vision, sometimes with quickened and sometimes with disturbed understanding, world powers during all the years following the armistice have tried to follow two courses that lie in opposite directions.

Through their statesmen, they have solemnly said that the World War was the war to end war; through the treaty of Versailles they have arraigned military establishments as responsible for war and provocative of war; through that same treaty the victorious nations placed limitations upon the military establishments of Germany as the declared basis for bringing about reduction of their own; through the Paris peace pact they have renounced war as a means of determining international relations and covenanted that they will not be aggressors in war.

But the other side of the picture is disturbing. Whereas in 1913 the powers that were to enter upon war were spending upon their military and naval establishments about $2,000,000,000 annually, they were expending nearly $3,000,-000,000 in 1932.

THE WASHINGTON AND LONDON TREATIES

Mr. Chairman, when the treaty of Versailles was approved, thoughtful people of our and other lands said, "The time has come when we may free the world of the burdens of armaments." In this inspiring movement the United States took leadership. The Washington conference was called and through the driving force and clarity of vision of the then Secretary of State, the present Chief Justice Hughes, the first treaty for the limitation of naval establishments was brought into being. This treaty accomplished much.

·It called a halt to competition in tonnage in two of the major types of battle craft. It placed limits upon gun power. It set a pattern for further agreements. It saved construction of ships that for the United States alone would have entailed a cost of some $350,000,000 under the 1916 program. It saved the United States alone an annual expenditure of $200,000,000. It has saved the five contracting nations a grand total approximating $8,000,000,000 in ship construction and in operation cost during the past 10 years.

But the war for competition in armaments was not closed; it was transferred to cruiser and other types not limited by the Washington treaty.

The most significant work of President Hoover has been his leadership in efforts to remove international causes of world trouble and to pave the way for peace.

In this work probably the most far-reaching factor was his activity in conjunction with Prime Minister Ramsey McDonald, of Great Britain, in bringing to a successful termination the London Naval Conference and agreement tonnage of capital ships and definite limits were brought about in tonnage, number, replacement, and other factors of all military types of craft.

This treaty was agreed to by the United States, Great Britain, and Japan. France and Italy were not able to concur, but their building programs have not been out of harmony with the spirit of the treaty.

GUNS AND TONS

The London treaty (1930) revised and fixed the total unit limits in capital ship, aircraft carrier, cruiser, destroyer, and submarine classes, for the United States, Great Britain, and Japan, with the following limitations:

United States	(alternately	British	cruiser	types	and	Tons tonnage may	be substitut	ted)				1, 123, 700
Great Britain						1, 151, 450
Japan						717, 170

Within the battleship type alone are all nations built up to the limint of authorization.

As to all the other types—aircraft carriers, cruisers, destroyers, and submarines, the nations were given the privilege of extensive construction work by way of replacement—the United States to the extent of 451,750 tons; Great Britain, 376,626 tons; and Japan, 185,584 tons.

At this point may we consider the status of the Naval Establishment of the United States and particularly its status as compared with the establishments of the other powers that were signatory to the Washington (1922) and London (1930) treaties.

BATTLESHIPS

The London treaty modified the Washington treaty as to battleships, reducing the number for each of the three greatest naval powers, so that each to-day may have capital ships as follows: United States, 15; Great Britain, 15; Japan, 10.

Prior to December 31, 1936, no new ships of the battleship type may be built. The battleships of the three powers are of substantially comparable age and effectiveness. Eleven of the capital ships of the United States are in full commission; one is reduced; three are undergoing modernization at a cost of approximately $30,000,000. The comparable ships of Great Britain and Japan are in full commission.

AIRCRAFT CARRIERS

Aircraft tonnage was fixed by the Washington conference at 135,000 tons for the United States and like tonnage for Great Britain, 81,000 tons for Japan, and 60,000 tons each for France and Italy. The London conference clarified but did not change the tonnage.

Of the tonnage allowed, the United States has in her fleet three carriers of 77,500 tons, and another ship, the Ranger, of 13,800 tons, under construction, to be completed in the spring of 1934. Of our existing tonnage, the Langley, of 11,500 tons, being an experimental ship, may be replaced. The United States thus may build 55,200 tons of aircraft carriers under the treaties.

These ships have not been authorized, and it has been the sound judgment of the United States that we have more to gain by following a slower construction program on carriers and building eventually the types most suited to our needs.

With the Ranger well on the way toward completion, already there is great demand for radical modification of her plans that will cost some $2,000,000. Unquestionably, experience has shown us that of 55,000 tons remaining we had better build four or five carriers of the Langley or Ranger size than two only slightly smaller than the Saratoga or the Lexington. More than that, we are learning how to build.

Great Britain, of her 135,000 tons, has 6 carriers of 115,300 tonnage in her navy; while Japan has 4 carriers of 68,700 tons; France, 1 carrier of 22,146 tons; and Italy, none at all.

CRUISERS

The treaty provides for two types of cruisers—cruisers carrying guns of more than 6.1-inch caliber and spoken of as 10,000-ton, 8-inch cruisers, and cruisers of 6.1-inch guns or less.

Of the former, the United States was allowed 180,000 tons, of which on December 31, 1932, she had 10 in full commission, 6 under construction, and 1 appropriated for, 1 provided for in the pending bill, and 1 which may not be appropriated for until the fiscal year 1935. These latter three may not be completed until 1936, 1937, and 1938, respectively. With the exception of one old cruiser, the Rochester, which is in service in the Orient, all of the ships of this class are new, the oldest one having been completed in 1929.

Of the cruisers carrying 6.1-inch guns, the United States was allowed 143,500 tons, of which she has 10 in full commission, of 70,500; and 70,000 tons remaining to be authorized.

Probably I should say that 25 per cent of the tonnage in cruisers may be equipped with landing decks.

Great Britain has 183,686 tons of large cruisers all underage. As she is entitled to 146,800 tons under the London treaty, she will need to retire four cruisers, with a total of 36,886 tons. Of the smaller cruiser type, she is entitled to 192,200 tons; she has 114,020 tons in underage craft, 36,855 tons over-age, and 66,000 tons building or appropriated for. She will need to retire about 25,000 tons.

Japan is entitled to 108,400 tons of the large-type cruisers. She has 107,800 tonnage under-age and 15,720 tonnage in two over-age ships; none building. She is entitled to 100,450 tons of the smaller cruisers, and has 81,455 tons in underage craft, 11,920 tons in craft over-age, and she has appropriated for or is building four cruisers of 34,000 tons. Upon the completion of this latter building program, she will retire about 27,000 tons of her oldest craft.

DESTROYERS

Under the London treaty, the United States was allowed in destroyer strength 150,000 tons. The life of a destroyer was fixed at 16 years, and thus most of the tonnage allowed the United States will be eligible for replacement prior to December 31, 1936. Even so, all of our destroyers were completed following the World War, and most of them have had extensive overhaul and have not seen more than one-half their normal service because we have had so many that sometimes two-thirds have been held in decommissioned status. Of this type, we are building or have appropriated for eight of 12,000 tons, and money is carried in the pending bill for four others of 1,850 tons each. Authorization has not been made for more.

Great Britain is entitled to 150,000 tons of destroyers. She has 52,849 tons of under-age craft of this type, 123,490 tons over age, and 26,325 tons building. She will need to retire about 52,000 tons.

Japan is entitled to 105,500 tons, of which she has 93,205 tons under-age, 28,680 tons over-age, and 16,536 tons appropriated for or building. She will need to retire about 33,000 tons.

SUBMARINES

Of submarines, the United States was allowed 52,700 tons, and has 51,290 tons in 51 submarines under-age. Of this tonnage, 29,750 tons will become over-age by the expiration of the treaty.

We are now building two submarines with a tonnage of 2,260 tons. No further tonnage has been authorized.

Great Britain is entitled to 52,700 tons, and has 40,614 tons of under-age craft, 10,710 tons over-age, and has appropriated for or is building 9,125 tons. Some 8,000 tons will be retired.

Japan is entitled to 52,700 tons and has 76,408 tons of under-age craft, 1,434 tons over-age and has 11,700 tons appropriated for or building. Japan will need to dispose of about 40,000 tons under the treaty.

In the matter of new construction work the United States, as of December 31, 1932, had 21 vessels—1 aircraft carrier, seven 10,000-ton cruisers, 11 destroyers, and 2 submarines—building or for which appropriations had been made, aggregating 102,500 tons (we are carrying money in the bill for 1 additional destroyer); Great Britain, 42 vessels—ten 6-inch-gun cruisers, 22 destroyers, and 10 submarines—105,450 tons; and Japan, 25 vessels—four 6-inch-gun cruisers, 12 destroyers, and 9 submarines, of 62,236 tons.

The United States has been more conservative in her programs of new construction work under the treaties than have some of the other nations.

Under the treaties we may know that no nation will go above certain definite limitations. We recognize that the treaties are not mandates to build up to tonnage limits, but rather that while we may have assurance that no nation will exceed limits fixed in tonnage we or any other nation may within the limits fixed for that nation, from the standpoint of developing types at the least cost and from the standpoint of holding the tax burden to the lowest level, or for any other reason, pursue a course of moderation.

WILL THE WORLD BE SANE?

Within two years the signatory powers to the Washington and London armaments agreements will be face to face with whether or not the provisions of those treaties shall be renewed, abandoned, or modified, and whether or not any other nations will join in the understanding.

Upon the latter idea it would seem that since all the great powers are adherents to the Paris peace pact, other powers besides the United States, Great Britain, Japan, France, and Italy might be desirous of becoming members of the limita-

Again, it would seem that the original five signatory powers would gladly renew their agreements and that the limitations might be extended downward.

The money savings to the five signatory powers will have been not less than approximately $10,000,000,000 from 1922 to 1936 over what the expenditures would have been had the Washington and London conferences never been held.

But we may go further: The Versailles treaty clearly outlined the purposes of the great powers to reduce armaments. That at the time of the Versailles agreement the army and navy burdens should have been at the peak of peacetime numbers of men and money costs is not surprising; we had just emerged from war; men and nations were mad; but that 14 years after the treaty that marked the end of the World War they should still be on a plane far above the level of costs prior to the World War is astounding.

At this point I desire to insert a table that will indicate the comparative costs of operating and maintaining naval and military establishments for the seven most heavily armed world powers just prior to the outbreak of the World War and the costs on the last date for which reliable figures may be obtained:

Military and naval burdens of the seven most heavily armed

It is estimated that, including the figures given as to the seven leading nations, all nations were expending for naval and military establishments $3,000,000,000 in 1914, and that 14 years after the close of the "war to end war" those same nations were expending $4,000,000,000.

THE ZERO HOUR

We approach the zero hour. Under the terms of the London treaty another conference of the powers signatory to that pact will be convened in 1935. Its problem will be to study again the relative needs of the world powers in the matter of armaments.

We all know that when the conference was held in Washington, the abortive conference in Geneva, and the conference in London the need of nations was obscured by pride in existing craft and reluctance of nations to destroy ships that they then had. The result was that the terms of neva Armaments Conference of 1927?

Washington and of London were far above the needs of nations. They were framed that nations might not need to destroy that which they possessed. Great good was done, competition was removed in substantial part, and vast moneys were saved, but more could have been accomplished had more reasonable tonnage figures been possible.

It has been my hope and prayer that when the conference shall convene in 1935 nations would be found not to have built up to their tonnage limits so that the more readily could they come to common understanding. More than any other nation the United States has pursued the course of moderation.

If nations will keep that thought in mind, in another two years we ought to be able to make still further strides in reduction of the great burden of armaments, which rests upon our world, and at the same time make the peace of the world more secure and avoid a condition that in another 30 years or less might lead to the incalculable loss of life and burdens of tax that governments must meet, to which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] referred, and that are the result of war.

I was disappointed in the part of the speech of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] where he referred to the selfish attitude that apparently he believes ought to be assumed by every State that has an ax to grind. If it has something to sell that the Navy can buy, then apparently he urges a bigger and still bigger Navy, because producers can sell more.

The argument is not only selfish; it is fallacious. To the extent that it means greater appropriations for the support of the Navy, to that extent increases in taxes must surely follow.

Again much is heard of navy yards and the effect any modification of the Naval Establishment will have upon pay rolls and local interests, whether reductions will be made or new yards created. I can not say with too much emphasis that it is utterly abhorrent to think of world peace, of human lives, of humanity, in terms of whether or not a navy yard shall be created here or constructed there. The size of our Naval Establishment ought not to rest upon any such basis; it ought to rest alone upon our country's need.

Again, I say, we approach the zero hour.

The course that I recommend will be opposed by a variety of interests. The unconscious influence of personal selfbenefit will be addressed against it. Communities with pay rolls and centers of activity, communities that hope for pay rolls, splendid patriotic officers with possible rank to attain and positions to defend-many of these will oppose; but it will be opposed by the selfish interest of the basest sort; it will be opposed by fabricators of munitions and ships and stores; it will be opposed by those who make profit out of human wretchedness and war.

Have we forgotten the deliberately false propaganda published in the press of Great Britain and of France for 10 years prior to the World War of what Germany was doing by way of increasing her armaments, for the plain purpose of influencing those countries to increase their armaments?

Have we forgotten the deliberately false statements published in Germany during the same period of what Great Britain and France proposed to do?

Have we forgotten that these stories were manufactured by fabricators of ships and of munitions for all countries alike?

Have we forgotten that vehement denunciation of Lord Welby in 1914 in the House of Lords, when he unmasked the sources of propaganda and said:

We are in the hands of an organization of crooks. politicians, generals, manufacturers of armaments, and journalists. All of them are anxious for unlimited expenditure and go on inventing scares to terrify the public and to terrify ministers of

Do we remember only five years ago the spectacle of Shearer, an American, suing American manufacturers of ships and munitions for $255,000, balance due for services that he claimed that he had rendered for them at the GeHave you read that powerful article in the New Outlook for February, from the pen of Dorothy Dunbar Bromley, on the subject, What Does France Want? There is told the sordid story of munition manufacturers of France, long after it was apparent that there would be war between France and Germany, shipping their munitions to the Krupp factories of Germany, and that certain of their products throughout the war, obviously with their knowledge and approval, continued to flow into Germany though a neutral country. These same fabricators of three-fourths of all munitions shipped from one country to another control and dominate the most influential papers of the French capital. Similar forces are engaged in propaganda elsewhere.

The drive is on to compel all nations to build up to the limit, and you will see in two years from now the drive will be against reducing a single ship on the plea that they are new.

Looking to the future, having in mind recognition of nations in the solemn hour when the Treaty of Versailles was written that large military establishments are provocative of war, having in mind the crushing taxes that support military and naval institutions, having in mind the waste of life of officers and enlisted men when service is not needed, one of the factors of major significance to which thoughtful men and women of all lands may address themselves is to prepare the way for the conference that will be held in 1935.

The needs of nations in naval and military strength are relative. Greater security can be brought about by their reduction. This reduction can be attained most reasonably by team work upon the part of the fine and patriotic people of our respective lands.

The gentleman [Mr. Vinson] in his address referred to the great wealth of the United States. Similar data have been sent to my office, I assume to every Member of Congress.

In a data sheet prepared by the Navy Department as of January 7 to 9, 1932, it was pointed out that the annual income of the people of Japan is $5,500,000,000; of Italy, $4,500,000,000; of France, $8,500,000,000; of Germany, $12,-000,000,000; of Great Britain, $18,390,000,000; and of the United States, $89,419,000,000.

The argument is made that because of this we should spend more upon our Navy; that we can afford to spend.

We seek security, and the way of security lies in world reduction of armaments, not in their increase.

Having in mind the position of security that geography has given us, having in mind the very conditions of wealth that gentlemen point out, having in mind our freedom from entanglements, the United States is in that happy position, that blessed position referred to in the message of the Father of his Country that you heard read this morning, through which better than any other nation we can afford to take leadership in the reduction of the burden of armaments. Such a course will not mean the laying of our country and other lands open to spoliation; rather it will mean strength, strength that comes from peace and fellowship and good will, which ought to be the everlasting tie that binds the nations of the world one to another. Such a course will develop the elements of justice in determining the rights of humanity. Mr. Chairman, in this great program our country can play an important part, indeed, because of wealth, a part that would be denied to a nation less favored by natural resources, or with respect to other powers of precarious location, and whose object might be misunderstood. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cooper].

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, Saturday, February 11, I spoke from this floor and called to the attention of Congress the large amounts of steel imports entering the United States from foreign countries.

A few days later the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON], in a speech delivered during the debate to discharge the Committee on Ways and Means of the Crowther bill, stated that I was unduly alarmed about steel imports as the value of steel-skelp imports into our country, which was one of the items I mentioned, in 1932 was so small that there was nothing to be alarmed about.

After I read his speech, printed in the RECORD, I concluded the proper place for me to get authentic information relative to the value of steel imports into the United States was from the Commissioner of Customs, which I did.

The records at the office of the Commissioner of Customs show that the total value of steel imports into our country in 1930, which included ore, pig iron, completed steel, and finished steel products, amounted to $18,883,235, and in 1931, $21,960,887, making a total value of ore and steel products imported into our country in 1930 and 1931, $40,884,122. I was unable to secure the completed figures for 1932. I was, however, informed that the imports for last year fell below that of 1930 and 1931.

Mr. Chairman, I want to call to the attention of the House the fact that there is a vast difference between $100,681, which the gentleman from Kentucky stated was the value of certain steel imports in 1932, and the report of the Commissioner of Customs, which shows that the value of steel imports into the United States in 1930 and 1931 amounted to $40,884,122, which resulted in the curtailment of our own steel production and deprived many thousands of steel workers of employment. I want to say, however, that the gentleman from Kentucky referred to only a small part of the value of steel imports into our country in 1932 and not to the total value of 1931–32.

It is fair to say that large quantities of iron ore enter our country duty free. But if we cut the ore out of the total value, we still have steel imports for 1930 and 1931 amounting to $32,224,874.

Mr. Chairman, the steel industry is not alone in its fight against foreign competition to-day. In 1931 Japan imported into the United States 70,000,000 electric-light bulbs. In addition, more than 54,000,000 Christmas-tree lights from Japan were sold on the American market. We are told that the importation of Japanese Christmas-tree lights compelled the General Electric Co. to close two of its plants—at Cleveland and Buffalo—which deprived 1,800 American workers in these factories of the jobs. It is estimated that the loss in wages to American workers on account of the importation of Japanese light bulbs amounted to $1,805,000 in 1931, and the loss in 1932 is expected to be as high as $2,320,000. China and Soviet Russia are now, or will be shortly, importing millions of light bulbs into the United States also.

IMPORTATION OF SHOES

For the first nine months of 1932 there were 1,057,446 pairs of women's and misses' leather shoes, valued at $1,335,672, imported into the United States, approximately half of which came from Czechoslovakia. In addition to the women's and misses' shoes in 1932, there were sold on the American market 135,190 pairs of men's leather shoes, valued at $431,191, which came from other countries. During the same period we received from foreign lands 60,491 pairs of children's shoes, valued at $81,739.

For the first nine months of last year there were imported into the United States 3,764,525 pairs of boots and shoes with uppers of cotton, silk, and fiber; 2,292,261 pairs, valued at $263,584, had rubber soles; and 1,472,264 pairs, valued at $263,584, had soles other than rubber. The importation of rubber-sole shoes into the United States has about destroyed our own rubber-sole shoe industry.

LEATHER IMPORTS

Imports of leather into the United States for the first nine months of 1932 were: Belting leather valued at $189,-565; leather welting, value $120,345; patent leather, value $44,969; upholstery leather, value $97,104. The following figures give a true picture of the inroads foreign leather is making upon the American market: For the month of October, 1932, there was imported into the United States 373,702 square feet of goat and kid leather, valued at $91,904.

The same month we also received from foreign countries 1,209,681 square feet of calf and kip leather, valued at $223,112.

POTTERY IMPORTS

The absolute need of tariff protection to save the American pottery industry from disaster on account of the flood of cheaply produced china from Japan and other countries of extreme low labor costs should be considered by every Member of Congress.

Fully half of the dishes used in the United States to-day are made in foreign countries, such as Japan, England, Germany, Holland, and Czechoslovakia, and this competition is growing every year, especially from Japan, whose imports in 1932 were 11 per cent greater than they were in 1931. To-day in the Capital City of our Nation you can find cups and saucers imported from Japan selling for 15 cents for 1 dozen cups and the same price for 1 dozen saucers. The cost of manufacturing this same cup and saucer, or the equivalent thereof, in the American industry is 72 cents per dozen.

Decorated gold band cups and saucers made in Japan are being sold on the American market for 58 cents per dozen. It costs $1.50 to make the same article in our own industries.

I have here a very beautiful small china table piece. It is decorated with a gold finish and a fine painting on the inside of the dish. This piece of table chinaware was purchased in one of the Washington stores for 10 cents and on the next counter there was a sign 3 feet long, "Buy American." On the bottom of this dish you will find the stamp "Made in Germany." The landed cost of this piece of china into the United States is 4 cents. The cost of manufacturing this same article in the American industry would be no less than 10 cents.

The skilled pottery worker in Japan received 46 cents per day. He works 11 hours and 7 days per week, earning about 4 cents per hour. Japanese children, 9, 10, 11, and 12 years old, are permitted to work 4 hours a day and for this they receive 1 pot of tea, 1 bowl of rice, and about 1 cent in money. The tariff rates on china must be increased if we are going to maintain and save the American pottery industry from cheaply produced china from Japan and other countries of extreme low manufacturing and low labor costs.

Lumber production in the United States in 1932 reached its lowest level in more than 50 years. Mill prices on lumber were less than half the 1929 level, which was itself below the level of preceding years. The gross income of the lumber industry in 1932 was about 16 per cent of its 1929 income, and approximately one-half of this was paid out in State and local taxes. Unemployment in forest regions, particularly in the Pacific Northwest, is critical.

Yet, with unsold lumber piled high in all the mills and yards in the country and offered at pre-war prices, Soviet Russia managed to more than double its sale of lumber in the United States, in spite of a tax of $4 per thousand feet imposed on lumber imports.

The growth of Russian lumber trade is indicated by the following table of imports into our country:

	Feet
1927	9,000,000
1928	21,000,000
1929	37,000,000
1930	72,000,000
1931	13,000,000
1932	30,000,000

It will be noted that the imports of Russian lumber grew by leaps and bounds from 1927 to 1930. However, in 1930, on account of the law which we passed prohibiting imports into the United States of goods manufactured by forced and indentured labor, and which the Treasury Department tried to enforce, the imports of lumber from Russia dropped in 1931 to 13,000,000 feet. However, we found we could not enforce that law, and as a consequence in 1932 imports into this country of Russian lumber jumped to 30,000,000 feet, and they will continue to increase all the time.

Shortly after Russia began to send her lumber into the United States reports from that country indicated that its lumber industry was being developed by transporting to the sparsely populated north of Russia convoys of convicts; and where additional labor was needed the typical Russian method of exile was invoked. In an effort to protect itself against the growing menace, the American lumber industry began to collect evidence concerning the conditions surrounding production of lumber in Russia. In the course of its investigation an agent was sent abroad to secure additional facts and to determine the effect of Russian trade on the lumber markets of Europe. As a result of the evidence thus secured the Treasury Department, early in 1931, made a formal finding to the effect that convict labor was being widely used throughout the lumber section of north Russia. Subsequently all cargoes of Russian lumber were made the subject of special inquiries, but because of a defect in the law prohibiting imports of goods made by convict and forced labor it proved impossible to deny entry to any shipment of Russian lumber. Nevertheless, fear on the part of the Russians that a case against them would be made out resulted in decreased imports during 1931 from 70,000,000 to 13,000,000 feet.

In 1932, when it appeared that the law could not be effectively enforced against Russia, lumber imports increased to 30,000,000 feet, notwithstanding the severe decline in consumption and the lowest price level since 1913.

I hold here in my hand a news dispatch sent out by the Associated Press from Archangel, Russia, February 4, 1933. This dispatch was carried on the front page of all our leading newspapers, and is as follows:

RUSSIAN PEASANTS DRAFTED TO SAVE LUMBER-EXPORT PLAN

NORTHERN FARM FOLK MOBOLIZE FOR MONTH'S LABOR CUTTING TREES IN "STALIN'S MARCH TO FOREST"—WILL FORM BRIGADES

ARCHANGEL, RUSSIA, February 4.—All peasants in the northern region, whose numbers run into thousands, have been summarily drafted for one month's labor in the lumber camps in an effort by the Soviet Government to prevent failure of the timber-export plan for 1933-34.

Admitting that recent bad work in cutting and transporting of lumber endangers this import phase of the second 5-year plan, the northern region communist party has proclaimed a 31-day period, beginning February 7 and ending March 10, as a month for "Stalin's march to the forests." All able-bodied peasants, individuals, and collectivists, in the whole northern region, covering 1.119,000 square kilometers, stretching from the White Sea to the Urals and southward to the Vologda district, will be mobilized for compulsory work compulsory work.

SHIRKERS TERMED "TRAITORS"

During this period the party's order, reading like a war-time military decree, directs women and children to carry on the work of the villages, which will be stripped of men, and declares that those peasants who refuse service in the forests will be considered traitors and dealt with accordingly.

The peasants will be required to supply their own horses. They will be formed into brigades each based by a trusted experience.

will be formed into brigades, each headed by a trusted appointee.

Lumber markets in western Europe have been destroyed by soviet competition and is penetrating into the United States. In addition to lumber imports from Russia $2,700,-000 worth of Russian coal found its way into American markets in 1932, which amounted in pay losses to our miners of $1,600,000. All labor in Russia is forced. It is not only conscripted-male and female-but is also controlled by arbitrary and militaristic power.

DAIRY PRODUCTS

There is probably no industry in our country to-day that is more depressed than agriculture, yet we find that $14,-000,000 worth of dairy products from foreign countries were sold on the American market in 1932. Mr. Chairman, it is repeatedly stated on the floor of this House by our Democratic Party brethren that protective tariff only benefits the big industries and the rich. Ah, my good Democratic friends from the South, you do not hear the demand that is being made by millions of workers in the industrial sections for protection against foreign competition.

Mr. Chairman, in presenting these figures to-day relative to the value of imports into the United States I have only scratched the surface. In addition to the imports I have mentioned there were many, many millions of dollars worth | the European nations. Chief among those who advocate of foreign imports into the United States in 1930, 1931, and

VOICE OF LABOR

A short time ago in a speech delivered over a nationwide radio hookup by Mr. Matthew Woll, vice president of the American Federation of Labor, he said:

It is well enough for the theorists in tariff to spin their arguments and recite their formulas, but our wage earners do not live by those things. They live by jobs and wages. Every article of American consumption that is produced abroad at wage our level and thus offered to our consumers is that much taken from the wage total of our country and that much, also, taken from the manufacturing capacity of our country. By this process there is nothing added to our purchasing power. Given protection against the peonage and near-peonage wage products of Europe and Asia, and the no-wage products of the bolsheviks, given a fair wage in our own country and the masses of our orkers will take care of American production and consumption

To-day there are 25 foreign nations that charge a higher average rate of duty than the United States.

November 18, 1932, at the Hotel Astor in New York City, there was held a convention of the Academy of Political Sciences. England's speaker, a London banker, devoted most of his time to a denunciation of the tariff, in which

The tariff must be slashed in order to reduce the trade barriers so that England could pay her war debts out of current earnings.

Eighteen months ago England declared in her protectivetariff policy to shut out imports. The president of England's board of trade, who in connection with the treasury prepares England's tariff, recently stated:

That the principal purpose of her tariff was to shut out imports as they were only interested in protecting their own market and developing their industries.

On March 1, 1932, Mr. Chamberlain, chancellor of the exchequer, said:

We propose by a system of protection to transfer to our fac-ories and fields, work that is now done elsewhere, thereby, decreasing unemployment in the only way we can.

In a recent address delivered by Prime Minister Bennett, of Canada, he said:

Our business is to see we do not expand the foreign trade of any country when we ourselves are producing, or can produce, the goods so imported.

Mr. Chairman, in presenting these figures relative to value of imports into the United States, I have scratched only the surface. In addition to those imports which I have mentioned there were many millions of dollars worth of foreign imports into our country the last two years.

That the American industries are badly affected by the present condition is apparent from a report of the Treasury Department showing that 103 articles imported into this country were sold at an average profit of more than 300 per cent above the landed cost, with some individual articles sold at a profit as high as 3,325 per cent above the landed cost. Imagine the cost of production when goods are manufactured, packed, transported to this country, duty paid, and then sold at profits ranging from 300 to over 3,000 per cent in successful competition with American-made goods.

The Department of Labor gives the statistics of wages paid in 11 industries in the United States compared with 8 other countries as follows.

Per week of 48	Per week of 48 hours
United States	$26.30
England	11.37
Sweden	10.20
Germany	9.02
France	7.25
Belgium	6.21
Japan	5.31
Hungary	5.08
China	1.31

INTERNATIONAL BANKERS AND IMPORTERS

There are those who advocate the lowering of our tariff duties so as to admit into this country more goods of foreign manufacture for a proportionate lowering of tariff rates by this policy of lowering of tariff rates are the international bankers and importers who are more interested in the welfare of foreign nations and their own selfish interests than the welfare and prosperity of the American people. Oh, they say if we lower our tariff to permit the foreign nations to sell more of their goods on the American market they in turn will buy more of our commodities. If the foreign importer can now get past our tariff duties and drive American production out of our domestic market, how can American products, with our standard of living and wages, compete in the foreign markets with low production costs of articles produced by cheap, peon, and forced labor in the countries of depreciated currencies. The paramount duty of America to-day is to protect its home market against foreign competition.

We regulate immigration. For the last year and a half we have almost entirely restricted immigration into the United States. Why? Because we have millions of unemployed in our country. Ninety per cent of our people approve of our present restrictive immigration policy. Now we should go a step farther and exclude importation of those foreign products into our country which is now a serious menace to American industries, agriculture, and labor.

"BUY AMERICAN"

To-day we hear a great deal about "Buy American." This campaign was started some time ago by Mr. William Randolph Hearst, owner of a powerful chain of newspapers. There was a time, not very long ago, when he opposed the principle of protective tariff. Now he seems to be a strong advocate of the same. I congratulate him on his good sense and rejoice that he has seen the light and been converted to the Republican Party policy of protection. A short time ago there was published in Mr. Hearst's newspapers a photo of several Members of Congress standing on the Capitol steps in a moving picture entitled "Buy American."

In this moving picture there were several Democratic Members of Congress, who wanted to get into the movies, including the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath] who have always voted, and would vote to-day, against any protective-tariff legislation.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. COOPER of Ohio. In just a minute.

Mr. SCHAFER. And also the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. Norton].

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. And the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. Norton]. I believe the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath] has been in Congress now for about 24 years, and during that time he has never voted for one single measure that would protect American industry and American labor from foreign competition; and then he has the nerve and the hypocrisy to get into a movietone to be flashed all over the country and advocate "Buy American."

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield one additional minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cooper].

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. The campaign "Buy American" is a worthy and patriotic American movement. However, all the editorials Mr. Hearst can write, and all the speeches and ballyhoo made in behalf of "Buy American," will do no good unless Congress enacts tariff legislation which will prevent foreign imports from coming into our country and preserve American market for our own products. The buying power of the Nation must come from the rank and file of the working classes, and the first step we must take to restore this buying power is to close our market to the entry of any foreign goods that American labor, industry, and agriculture can produce. [Applause.]

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I think my time has expired. Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The gentleman should be fair and let me know what he said referring to me.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. The gentleman has his own time,

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Then let me have your printed speech so I can see what you said.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. The gentleman just heard me.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. No; I was not on the floor when the gentleman began his speech, and made specific reference to me.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I will let the gentleman have that part of my speech in which I referred to him.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Schaffer].

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I agree with almost everything that the preceding speaker has stated.

I, however, want to call the attention of the country and the House to the fact that for one day at least the Democratic majority has thought first of America and her people instead of first for foreign nations and foreign people. Yesterday when it came to adopting the Senate amendment, the "Buy American" amendment, requiring the Federal Government to "Buy American" in all of its purchases, there was not a voice raised on the Democratic side against it. The Democratic Party for one day at least, therefore, went on record unanimously in favor of an embargo tariff. I hope the party will continue a protective-tariff policy. After reading to-day's papers we have no hope, because we find two Cabinet appointments for the next administration. One, the next Secretary of State, a simon-pure free trader, who will, no doubt, enter into treaty negotiations with foreign countries to carry out the Democratic platform pledge of reducing our already too-low tariff rates and canceling, in part or in whole, with that reduction the billions of dollars handed to foreign nations by the last Democratic administration.

With that policy in effect our Democratic-controlled Government will then let the products of the industries and farmers and workers of foreign nations, who have been relieved of this tax burden, come into competition with American factories and farmers and workers who will have to bear the extra burden from which the foreign taxpayers have been relieved.

You Democrats claimed during the last campaign that prosperity of America and of the world depended upon great foreign trade and great foreign importations. It appears that during the next few years we will have a great foreign trade at the expense of the American taxpayers, American industry, farmers, and workers. We will have plenty of cheap foreign importations, but there will not be many pay checks for the American workers or for the American farmers with which to purchase these foreign products, as the flood of foreign products will destroy the American market for American products, and the American people will have less jobs and less money with which to purchase.

It was rather surprising that after appearing in the movietone our distinguished Democratic brethren and sister who took the leading part in advocating "Buy American," which is an embargo tariff, did not vote to bring the Crowther bill before the House for consideration. As usual with the Democrats, it is the case of much talk and no action.

Mr. Chairman, Democratic movietone speeches of "Buy American" can not meet unfair competition of foreign importations and help furnish pay checks for American workers and farmers. We must have a protective tariff to do so. This Democratic talk of "Buy American" and vote against protection from unfair foreign competition is just another sample of Democratic demagoguery and hypocrisy.

Mr. Chairman, in the last campaign in Wisconsin the La Follette progressive Republican leaders, in collusion with Democratic leaders, had a working arrangement which was so cohesive that $2,000 was sent into Wisconsin by the Democratic National Campaign Committee, received and expended by the La Follette progressive faction of the Republican Party to pay its primary election campaign debts, in violation of the Wisconsin corrupt practices acts. This unholy alliance denounced the protective tariff and supported the Democratic presidential candidate, who promised to carry on the interrupted march of the Democratic war administration, which so ruthlessly tried to politically crucify the late Senator La Follette; they denounced the Hawley-Smoot bill, claiming that it was responsible for most of the ills of America and of the world.

Shortly after the election the Democratic United States Senator elect from Wisconsin had his picture appear in the Hearst papers with a wonderful statement in favor of the principles of an embargo tariff—"Buy American"—although he denounced tariff protection throughout his campaign.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. SCHAFER. The Democratic speaker of the Wisconsin State Assembly, who, with his companions in the campaign, denounced protective tariff, introduced in that Democratic-controlled State legislative body a "Buy-American" resolution and spoke eloquently in its behalf.

Why, Mr. Chairman, our State Senate is controlled by a coalition majority of La Follette Republicans and Democrats. The leaders of this coalition in the last campaign ran all over our State denouncing protective tariff. Our State assembly is controlled by an overwhelming majority of Democratic brethren, and still, what do we find? The present Wisconsin State Legislature spent about $200 of the Wisconsin taxpayers' money in unanimously passing a resolution, a part of which I quote:

Whereas the action of foreign countries which are large producers of wood pulp, in going off the gold standard, and the resulting depreciation in their currencies, has given foreign producers an unfair advantage over American producers and enabled them to flood the American markets; * * * Therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring). That the legislature of Wisconsin hereby respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to pass bill H. R. 13999, by Congressman Hill of Washington, or some similar measure, imposing a compensating tax on wood pulp and other articles imported from countries with depreciated currencies sufficient to offset the depreciation in their currencies.

Mr. Chairman, Joint Resolution 239, which I hold in my hand, was also passed unanimously by our Democratic and La Follette Republican controlled State legislature.

This resolution asks Congress to raise existing tariff rates on butter, casein, Swiss cheese and other cheese, condensed and evaporated milk and cream, dry malted milk, cream, milk, and all dairy products.

I want to say to my Democratic and La Follette Republican friends in Wisconsin and this Congress that spending about $200 of the Wisconsin taxpayers' money to pass such memorializing resolutions to Congress, talking "Buy American" in movietone pictures, and releasing "Buy American" statements to the press while the Democratic-La Follette Republican controlled Congress fails to raise one tariff rate, but talks about lowering the existing ones will not protect the American markets from unfair competition of cheap foreign importations which are flooding our country. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. Leavitt].

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Chairman, the matter I have to present is not of a controversial nature. I hesitate to break into this spicy debate for the presentation of it, but I do consider it to be of great importance. It has to do with the matter of alleviating to some extent the unemployment situation, and I wish to emphasize that in the proposal I am about to make, I am not claiming that I have here a solution for the entire unemployment problem. Neither have I anything that is in conflict with other proposals, such as the one that has come to the House from the Senate for the use of the cantonments that were built during the great war, for the housing of the unemployed in connection with military training or other uses.

What I have to propose applies in some measure to 38 different States, in greater measure, of course, to those States of the western part of the country in which the greater part of the national forest areas are found. It is a discussion, and I am going to make it a brief one, of the part that the national forests properly should play in the relieving of the unemployment situation.

There are about 150,000,000 acres of national forest lands in this country. This is land that belongs to the United States of America and the development of which is the problem of the United States of America. Thus money spent on this land in legitimate ways can be considered an investment rather than use of money without a permanent purpose and a permanent value.

These areas are so distributed in these 38 States as to give a kind of employment that will benefit directly the people, not only of the localities but to a great extent that great army of wandering young men who would be attracted to work in the forest areas, and who, instead of being damaged by the life they are forced to live under present unfortunate conditions, would be greatly benefited, not only by the possibility of employment but also by the fact that they would be in contact with the beauties and the inspiration of the forest itself.

The question is asked as to what could be done in the forest that would be of benefit to the Nation and at the same time help to alleviate this situation of unemployment. It would be work that is now being done under appropriations made by the Congress, but by speeding it up and by doing in the next year or so what otherwise would be spread out over a period of five or six or seven years or more would meet the immediate emergency to the extent of employing 269,668 men for a 6-month period. That is as long, of course, as men could be profitably employed in the forest areas under ordinary conditions, and perhaps a little longer than would be possible under most conditions.

We will take the 6-month idea, first, as to the number of men that could be employed. This will take care of about 270,000 men scattered over 38 States. If you gave them a 3-month period of employment, it would take care of something over 500,000 men.

I see my friend here from the State of Washington [Mr. Horr], and I will use his State as an illustration of the result

Out in his home town of Seattle within the last two or three days 5,000 unemployed took possession for a day or two of the courthouse. This character of unemployed men—on account of the foreign competition that was spoken of here a few moments ago by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cooper] and which has thrown out of employment men who largely work in the woods—have been thrown out of employment.

There are in the State of Washington about 50,000 unemployed men, and about 17,000 of these men could be given six months' work this year in the National forests of that State.

If you divide by two the length of periods they were allowed to work, you could provide for twice that many men. For three months you would thus take up a very large proportion of the unemployed.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVITT. With pleasure.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman tell us the kind of work that they would do?

Mr. LEAVITT. I was leading up to that by showing first the number of men that could be put to that labor. Here is the kind of work they would do. It is contemplated to construct 704 lookout houses, towers, and observatories for forest-fire detection. Those would be in the eastern forests as well as in the western. Nine thousand eight hundred and forty-four miles of telephone line ought to be built, 2,740 firebreaks, 4,682 camp grounds. You might ask what use is to be made of the camp grounds, but they are proper, and it means a great deal in the protection from fire in forests where people are using the areas for recreation purposes. There would be constructed 6,691 miles of range fence. That fence will need to be constructed in the next few years. We could speed up the construction. That would greatly aid in the handling of livestock and would mean a great deal in the manufacture of the barbed wire that would be used in the construction and add thereby to employment.

Then there are 54,404 miles of roads and trails. These are not those referred to as high-class roads, but they are roads and trails that are useful in the protection of forests from fires.

Then there would be improvement thinnings, and so forth, on 2,560,420 acres of forest lands—

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVITT. I yield.

Mr. GOSS. Can the gentleman give us the estimated cost of the various projects that he is laying out?

Mr. LEAVITT. I have a tabulation that will segregate these possibilities for the different States and give the estimated cost. The whole proposal I am making is not to have the men working without wages, as you may suppose. They would be paid the going wages of the various communities, so that they will be able to take care of their families. It would also result in putting a great deal of money into circulation. The velocity of circulation of which from these somewhat isolated forest areas might easily multiply the value many times.

Mr. GOSS. And will the gentleman also put in the cost of this material that he is proposing to use?

Mr. LEAVITT. I have not all those details, because the time given was very short. There is also planned the eradication of major infestation of insects of trees and tree diseases from 787,650 acres. This is work we are carrying on, and nothing would be more valuable to promote the protection of forests than to speed it up.

Then there is the planting. It has been proposed that a great deal of tree planting might be done to help relieve the unemployment situation. Unfortunately, that has been met with ridicule, because the proposal was not explained and the time that would be necessary to grow the necessary nursery stocks, and so on, not outlined.

The planting, due to lack of planting stock available, would have to be held down to about 75,000 acres the first year. Even that might be found to be greater than could be achieved in the first year. That will probably be the maximum. But a start needs to be made toward procuring additional planting stock through seed planting and so on. Considerable labor could be employed in that way, and we would have under way a program that would ultimately, within the next very few years, employ a great many men beneficially. I call attention to the fact that there is nothing in all this proposal that can be called "made" work; nothing that is just proposed to keep men busy, without having results in themselves beneficial.

In addition there is, of course, work that might have to do with soil erosion and that sort of activity which, to make it entirely efficient, has to be extended over a considerable period of years. A start could be made on that.

To break down my statement of range development, there would be, in addition to the fencing, many corrals and driveways, and much water development in these national forests. There would be the possibility of increased eradication of poisonous plants and rodents. We could extend that work

Mr. GARBER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. LEAVITT. Yes.

Mr. GARBER. How many States would receive the benefit of this work?

Mr. LEAVITT. Thirty-eight States. There are forest areas that would be benefited in 38 States and indirect benefits beyond that. Of course, the bulk of the national forests are in the western country. There, however, we do not have these Army cantonments that are being spoken of to any extent. That form of relief could not be greatly beneficial to us in the West. Out there we could better use these men in the national forests in the development of national property. On the other hand, many of the Eastern States do have some national forest areas that have been acquired by purchase under the Weeks Act and in other ways, so that the forest plan I am proposing would be extended into the Eastern and Southern States.

This is not a completely-new work. Some States have been putting people to work on their forest areas. Connecticut, for example, has done quite a little work along that line which has been locally very beneficial.

Governor Trumbull recently brought out something about the work done in these Eastern States, and it could be extended and applied to national forest areas in these States. He says it is essential to safeguard these forests against fire, and that fire lanes 15 feet wide are cleared of all material, and that all dead trees 50 feet back are removed, and so forth. Then he says:

This work opens up a new and important argument for the extension of our State forests, for they will always furnish remunerative labor to a considerable number of local residents. Experience of older countries proves that well-managed forests will support a larger population than a similar area of poor land devoted to agricultural pursuits. There is a great deal of land in Connecticut of this character which can be more profitably used for timber raising than for any other purpose.

I use that quotation to show what is being done in several of the Eastern States.

California last year established several forest camps, and employed in the year 1932 about 17,000 men and boys. They were not paid wages. The camps give an opportunity for a place where men can be comfortable and can eat and do something that is useful rather than simply be fed somewhere by charity. My information is that a fine character of people have taken advantage of that. Only one forest officer is in charge of each of these camps. They have their own kangaroo court and take care of policing and the care of those camps and they do valuable work, particularly in building fire breaks.

The question was asked as to where these forest areas are. I can illustrate it best by a map which I have here. Gentlemen will see from this map the location of the national forest areas, and also the extent. One can see, in figures, the number of men that could be employed on this useful work for six months. If it is done for a 3-month period, of course, you could take care of twice that many men. If I had time this afternoon, from a forestry standpoint, I would like to develope another feature of this question which would be of special value to the eastern part of the country. I refer to speeding up the acquisition of forest areas. At no time in our history could they be acquired more easily than now, from farmers who have marginal land who would be glad to dispose of a part of their holdings, retaining only their agricultural land. That would put money in circulation with them, and would bring other forest land under the control of the Government. Then this useful labor in the development of those forest areas could be carried on more extensively in this eastern country.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. LEAVITT. I yield.

Mr. TABER. I wonder if the gentleman would put in, as a part of his remarks, something about the cost of such

Mr. LEAVITT. Yes. I will be glad to do that. I am glad the gentleman referred to that, as it is very important. Figuring out the amount of work I have proposed here, from the standpoint of the payment of local wages-that is, the going scale of wages in various parts of the country—it would cost about $160,000,000, but entirely in the development of our own property. Of course, that seems like a tremendous amount of money, but we are considering almost that amount of money to put men in the cantonments, where they will not be doing this kind of useful work. This is merely speeding up to do in one year what will otherwise extend over a period of several years.

Mr. SWICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVITT. I yield.

Mr. SWICK. Will the gentleman state in that cost, the allocation to the various States?

Mr. LEAVITT. Yes. I will be glad to put in a tabulation showing just what could be expended advantageously in the various States, under a plan which has been worked out through the Forest Service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Montana has expired.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to include the material I have referred to.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DECEMBER 23, 1932, ESTIMATES OF NUMBERS OF MAN-SEASONS (1) AND COSTS (2) OF SERVICEABLE (3) WORK AVAILABLE ON THE NATIONAL FORESTS FOR UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

The numbers given below are also shown, in rounded-off form, on the map by States.

"Indirect labor" needed for the production of materials, other than the minor amount shown on the tabulation, is not included in the figures by States.

Basis of 150 work days per season.
 At going wage of $3.60 per day in West and $2.40 per day in East, plus all other costs.

(3) The classes of work in the detailed estimates are divided

Class A. Projects or activities for which the Forest Service would ask appropriations in normal times and which (in the case of investments) would be useful enough to the public or to (national forest) activities so that the Forest Service would be willing to carry the construction costs in its investment records and currently charge depreciation and maintenance to the activity benefiting.

Class B. Other projects which the Forest Service would not be willing to carry in its investment and depreciation records, but which would improve the national forest properties or facilitate their use and enjoyment by the public as well as contribute to the preservation of human and social values by giving work to the unemployed. "Made" work, which will merely result in keeping men busy, is excluded.

The classes of work to be done include the construction of telephone lines, roads, trails, landing fields, fire breaks, lookout towers and observatories, other small structures for the fire protection and administration forces, range fences and range water developments, corrals and driveways, public camp ground improvements, planting, erosion control, insect and tree-disease control, eradication of poisonous plants and of rodents, and other range and forest cultural work.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Lankford] such time as he may desire.

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record and to include therein a bill introduced by me on the 9th day of March last, entitled "A bill to provide for the settlement of past-due interest and installments due Federal land banks, to prevent foreclosure of loans due such banks, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt in my mind that Congress is criticized unduly about minor and insignificant matters but is subject to much more criticism than is heaped upon it about the larger and more important affairs. This paradoxical statement is true because those who approve the failure of Congress to handle promptly the larger and most important matters are most anxious to draw the attention of the public away from those in Congress and out of Congress who are servile to the big interest and away from the crookedness of the big interest. And, they are succeeding in this respect by magnifying, twisting, and falsifying the record of Members of Congress concerning small and very minor affairs.

Those most responsible for our present, awful plight much prefer to lead the public to believe that the cause of the present depression is a few dollars stationery allowance or a few dollars mileage allowance, or the franking privilege, rather than the corner of the money of the Nation by the big bankers. They rather cause the public to blame the panic on the salary of some humble Government employee who is struggling to exist rather than admit that their own hands are dripping with the innocent blood of countless thousands whose lives are being snuffed out because of the murderous designs of the international and other big bankers.

The greatest guilt of Congress—Democrats and Republicans—is procrastination. Talk, talk, talk, and nothing done. Promise, promise, promise, and nothing performed. The country is praying and I am praying that the next Congress may render some real service to the average individual citizen.

At the very beginning of this Congress, when we met in December, 1931, I began to offer amendments, introduce bills, and plead and beg for something to be done to stop loan foreclosures. Those in authority in the House blocked every effort I made along the line of seeking legislation to stop loan foreclosures. The only thing that was done, in so far as the Federal land banks-the chief offenders-are concerned, was to hand them another hundred and twentyfive million dollars to use in the further slaughter of the farmers. Finally, the depression has become so serious that the farmers are taking the law into their own hands, and now some of those who 12 months ago blocked all this kind of legislation in the House are beginning to talk about doing something to stop loan foreclosures. And it is possible that either more money will be voted to the Federal land banks to use in furtherence of their orgy of foreclosures, or, after all the farmers have lost their homes, it may be that some sort of law may be written on the books to stop foreclosures. There will be no need of such law after all the farmers are ruined and the Federal land banks have sold, bought in, and speculated on the lands of the farmers to the surfeit of the greedy financial desires of the officials of this institution.

Along with the numerous efforts I made many months ago to secure the passage of some legislation to help this situation, I introduced on the 9th day of March, 1932, H. R. 10326, entitled "A bill to provide for the settlement of past-due interest and installments due Federal land banks, to prevent the foreclosure of loans due such banks, and for other purposes."

The bill provides:

That when any Federal farm loan association, or any member or members thereof, become in default as to any interest and/or principal installment during the year 1932 or 1933 and the Federal farm loan association determines that neither it nor said member or members are financially able to pay said interest and/or installment without undue financial burden on it or any of its members, the Federal land bank through which said association obtained its loans shall loan said association sufficient money to purchase enough bonds of said Federal land bank for the purpose of and to be used in paying off and retiring said past-due interest and/or installments. Said loan to said association shall be for five years with interest at 6 per cent payable annually for said period and with interest and principal to be amortized or paid annually for five years after said first five years. The Federal farm bank shall neither require nor accept any security for said loan other than a lien for said amount on the land by which said loan in default is secured and second only to the said lien of such Federal land bank. The bonds of the Federal land bank shall be accepted by it at face value in payment of such past-due interest and/or installments; and the Federal land bank, for the purpose of carrying this act into effect, shall sell to the Federal farm loan association said bonds at the then market value of the same from bonds now owned or hereafter purchased by said bank, and shall accept as full and complete security for said loan and in execution of said contract by the Federal farm loan association an extension agreement as to said past-due interest or principal for said 10 years as hereinbefore mentioned, after same has been credited with and by the difference between the market value and the face value of the bonds used in the transaction.

SEC. 2. In carrying into effect said contract it shall not be necessary to enter written transfers of said bonds to the Federal farm loan association to be in turn retransferred to the Federal land bank, but the proper bookkeeping entries shall be made by the bank and the extension agreement executed as herein provided.

SEC. 3. When and where since January 1, 1930, land has been sold under foreclosure by the Federal land bank, bid in by the bank, and is still owned by the bank, upon request by the original owner or by the Federal farm loan association of which said owner was a member, in the event the original owner refuses or fails to make the request, the said land shall be resold to the said original owner or to the association in the event he refuses to make such request and it is made by the association. The consideration for such resale shall be the balance due on the loan at the time of the foreclosure and interest on the principal amount date. In no event shall any expenses or cost of said foreclosure or attorneys' fees be included. The terms of payment shall be the same as those of the said original loan and the borrower and the association shall have the same rights as to the payment of interest and/or installment that would have been due had said foreclosure not taken place, as is provided in this act for delinquent borrowers where no foreclosure has taken place.

Mr. Chairman, the bill which I have just inserted in the Record is intended to give relief to the farmers whose land is about to be sold by foreclosure or which has been sold and bid in by the Federal land banks. If my bill had become law last March and if the Federal land banks had given it a sympathetic enforcement, there would not have been any more foreclosures and much of the land already lost to the farmers would have been returned to the original owners.

It is admitted that for some time the Federal land banks have been foreclosing on farm land which should have been carried longer, but which the banks sell for the express purpose of buying in, at a great sacrifice, and then reselling it at a still greater sacrifice for cash so as to use this cash in buying in the bonds of the particular land bank at a sacrifice to the owner and at a great profit to the bank. These banks are not willing to accept their own bonds in settlement of either the interest on these loans or the principal thereof, but they sell the farmers' lands for much less than they are at all willing to accept from the farmers in the way of an extension of the loan, so as to speculate in and with the bank's own bonds. These land banks were set up for the farmers, and the farmers were even forced to buy and pay for the stock in these banks; and yet while the farmers own these institutions, they are among the farmers' most deadly enemies during this awful depression.

Several bills have been introduced seeking to force the Federal land banks to accept their own bonds in payment on the loans of the farmers. These bills would help some, and I would vote for them, realizing that very little good would come from their enactment. If the farmer can not get money to pay his interest and taxes, how can he get money to buy these bonds for cash, so as to use them in part payment on his loan? The fact is that these bills would only enable those who are trying to get farm lands for nothing to obtain them without the necessity of a foreclosure and with all the profit going to the one buying in the farm lands rather than be split between the Federal land banks and the purchaser of these lands covered by distressed loans. Even this though would take from the Federal land bank officials part of the incentive which causes them now to make foreclosures instead of renewing these loans

I seek to provide that whatever profit is made by buying in these bonds at a discount shall all go to the distressed farmers who are not able to pay the interest, taxes, and principal installments on their loans. I would require the Federal land banks to use the money voted to them by Congress to buy in these bonds for the use and benefit of the farmers and then accept these bonds at face value in payment of the past-due interest and principal installments due on these loans. The money would be appropriated by Congress to be used by the banks to stop loan foreclosures. The Federal land banks would buy the bonds and then the balance of the procedure would be simply a matter of bookkeeping. In theory the banks would loan enough money to the farmers to purchase enough of these bonds at their present selling price to pay the farmer's past-due interest and principal installment and the bank would then accept the bonds at their face value in settlement of this interest and installments. The farmer would get the benefit of buying the bonds at a discount and using them at face value in the settlement of part of his loan. The loan would be credited with the payment after the cost of the bonds used in connection with the particular loan had been added to the original amount due before the payment. In this way the additional amount loaned to the farmer to buy the bonds would be secured by the original lien on the farmer's land. The net result would be that the farmer would be able to make enough profit out of the transaction to pay his interest and past-due principal installments and find himself no further in debt and with his loan in good shape for another year or term of years. The low price of these bonds which are causing these foreclosures at this time would become the agency by which the farmers would be enabled to save their homes.

Why should this not be done for the farmers? This money was appropriated by Congress for the use of the farmers. These banks were set up for the farmers and are now owned by the farmers and the officials of these banks are the agents of the farmers, and why should this agency with these officials not be loyal to and act for the farmers?

With my bill enacted into law there would be absolutely no trouble whatever about either the legality or mechanics of the proposition. The only question is, Does Congress want to do this for the farmers?

Since so much time has elapsed and there has been so many foreclosures and the farmers' condition has become so much worse it is becoming more and more evident that there must be used even more drastic means than could have been effectively used a year or two ago.

I am now thoroughly convinced that the most effective manner of handling this matter is by the monetization of farm lands and farm products. I am absolutely opposed to furnishing any more money to the Federal land banks without the most positive directions as to the expenditure of every dollar of the fund. In fact, I believe this matter should be handled by the monetization of farm lands and farm products so as to make the Federal land banks absolutely unnecessary.

To my mind the idea of issuing bonds to raise money to loan farmers on their lands is all wrong and should be handled, in the first instance, by issuing the money on the lands as the base for the currency and thus save all this red tape. all these salaries, all this interest, and all this orgy of foreclosures and vandalism.

Practically every suggestion of a remedy for the depression provides for the issuance of billions upon billions of dollars of additional bonds with the additional interest that always goes with the issuance and sale of bonds, and with years to tax money in hoarding each month, regardless of the additional taxes that must be collected to pay this interest.

As I have repeatedly said, the Government goes in debt less by issuing $1,000,000,000 of currency than it does by issuing the same amount of 3 per cent bonds. The exact difference is the interest on the bonds to the amount of $30,000,000 per year. There is another very vital difference; the bonds will very probably only cause the purchasers to further hoard their riches, whereas the currency, if issued to help the farmers, or to pay the adjusted compensation due the veterans, or to give employment to labor, will go into active circulation. Some are urging that no more taxexempt securities should be issued. To my mind, during this depression there ought not be any more securities of any kind issued carrying either a tax or interest when taxfree and interest-free currency can be issued instead. If we do this within reasonable limits during the depression, we will not find cause to abandon the policy after the return of more prosperous times. Here is the greatest cause of the depression and its elimination will go far in bringing back much better times.

Regardless of what brought about the depression in the first instance, I am sure that our vicious banking system contributed much to our serious condition and that a proper remedy applied here will relieve the situation very much. When I say banking system I do not have in mind the small bankers or the small banks. They are victims of the same awful system which is wrecking and destroying everybody else. I am criticizing the greatly centralized political and financial power of the Wall Street and allied interests.

At the present time our people are suffering death because of the lack of a sufficient medium of exchange. All must admit this, and yet the big interests are determined that nothing shall be done to overcome this awful condition. They have cornered the money market and as yet have not decided that the time has come for them to relax their grip on the throats of the people. They are determined not to let go until they have the Nation more completely in their grasp than ever before, with greater centralization of wealth and political influence than was ever dreamed of by our founders and with the people further enslaved and in the most complete subjection ever exercised since the beginning

The fight between the people and the great wealth of the Nation goes on, with corporate greed winning every important objective. Of course, some laws will be enacted in the name of the common people, but unless there is a great improvement over the past, for every slight advance of the private individual citizen there will be a tremendous victory for the corporate interest, overcoming and annulling all that is gained by the people.

Take the proposal to issue money or certificates as a medium of circulation, to be taxed by attaching a 2 per cent stamp every time the certificate passes, and you have an example of the idea of how many people would seek to help this situation. If this scheme was put into effect, it would burden the poorest of the poor with the most vicious sales tax ever suggested. The general sales tax has exemptions and is very light, whereas this stamp tax on every transaction would know no exemptions and would be on every transaction with respect to every article of food, clothing, or medicine. The general sales tax, which I oppose so much as a Federal proposition, would only be paid by the manufacturer of certain articles, with no tax to be paid on the articles used in the production of the particular articles or on any sale by which the manufactured article was handled after it left the manufacturer. Not so with the proposed stamp tax levied and collected each time money is used in buying any article, or in paying taxes, or in use in any other

I have heretofore pointed out the vast difference between this proposal to tax the use of money, thus putting a burden on the circulation of money, and the plan which has been in use in one form or another in various nations for many whether it is in circulation or not. I am only mentioning | this stamp sales tax plan now as an illustration and shall not further discuss it at this time.

Mr. Chairman, the greatest economic need of the hour is for a greater-yes, a much greater-circulation of currency, both in velocity and amount.

Those who now have the money of the Nation cornered are urging that it will never do to inflate the currency. They can not control an inflated currency as much and as well as they can the present smaller volume. The trouble is that our currency has been deflated in circulation and inflated in value. We now at least need to reflate the circulation back to where it was and deflate the cost of the dollar to its original position. It is just as vicious and criminal to deflate the currency too far as it is to inflate it too much, and just as criminal to inflate the cost of the dollar too much as it is to deflate the value of the dollar to an unreasonable extent. To my mind the present process or program of deflation of the circulation and inflation of the cost of the dollar is the principal direct cause of the present depression, and the proper inflation of circulation and deflation of the cost of the dollar would relieve the depression and with proper other legislation entirely overcome the present awful economic condition.

There should at least be a reasonable reflation of the currency. No one who is a student of this subject can honestly ask for either an overinflation or too much deflation of our currency, such as is wrecking our Nation at this very minute.

On the 6th of this month at a banquet at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in New York City, Dr. Irving Fisher, professor of political economy of Yale University, in an address expressed what to my mind is the true rule in this respect, as follows:

But reflation really is not inflation. The distinction between the two is important. We should aim, like a good chauffeur, to keep in the middle of the road, veering neither to the inflation side of the road nor to the deflation side. But once we find ourselves, as at present, in the deflation ditch, our first task must be to get back in the middle of the road. That is, reflation is, in my opinion, not only a need but a necessity if we are to recover from this depression soon and without great further bankruptcies and unemployment. and unemployment.

Doctor Fisher concluded his New York address by saying:

Anyone who wants uncontrolled inflation is as much an enemy of society as those who want no control over deflation. We must have control over both. We must get our great machine, now out of control, under control. We must get it back into the middle of the road and keep it there.

Mr. Chairman, our currency is controlled at this time by the big banking interests. They now inflate and deflate the currency in their own behalf, regardless of the effects on the rest of the country. This very important governmental function should be controlled by an agency acting for all the people of the whole Nation, or an automatic commodity standard should be put into effect so that our currency would adjust itself to the needs of the people and at all times be the agency or medium of all the people of the whole Nation.

Doctor Fisher mentioned the fact that Sweden has adopted a true commodity standard of money, thus stabilizing her unit of money value, the krona, and asked why not the United States do likewise and stabilize the American dollar.

To my mind this is what we should do, but I realize that it will never be done until Congress is able to break loose from the domination of the big bankers and act solely and only for the best interest of all the people.

We can very easily monetize our commodities and our farm products and solve practically all our serious troubles at this time. Then again we can even stay on the gold standard and yet solve our most serious trouble—the lack of sufficient circulation of money both in volume and amount. We can even keep the amount of our currency just where it is and yet overcome the depression by putting sufficient money in circulation to do the job. We can do this and at the same time save our people hundreds of millions of dollars in interest on the public debt-all without putting the Nation further in debt but by reducing our public debt.

Then why not let us do this and do it at once and save all the anguish and wreckage that now exists on every side? There is only one answer—the big financiers of the Nation object.

Now, how can all this be done? How can we actually stay on the gold standard, actually not increase the amount of our currency, actually reduce our public debt, actually save hundreds of millions of dollars of taxes for our people, and yet increase the volume of our money in active use and increase its speed so as to overcome the present awful depression? The answer is: Withdraw from the banks the money now hoarded by them, cancel the bonds which is the basis for this money, cut down the public debt the amount of the annual interest on these bonds, save the taxpayers the amount of this interest, and, in lieu of this present big bankers' monopoly, issue to the farmers Government bonds in exchange for first liens on farm property, with both drawing the same rate of interest and maturing at the same time; then let the farmers file their bonds back in the Treasury Department as the basis for the equivalent amount of currency to be owned by the farmer or used by him in settling the indebtedness now against his property. This will do everything I suggested in my question and at the same time put a first lien on absolutely safe property behind every bond issued under this scheme in addition to that which is there now, the unsecured promise of the Government to pay.

But, it may be suggested that where banks own the bonds which are on deposit as the base for the issuance of the currency, the Government can not recall the bonds or cancel them without paying the amount of the bonds in cash. This is true but the Government could issue the currency to pay off the bonds just as easily and as safely as it issues the bonds and at the same time reduce the public debt the amount of the annual interest on the bonds which are paid by interestfree money. Then again, even if the bonds be not cancaled, they could be returned to the owner bank and the money based on them withdrawn and an equivalent amount of money issued to the farmers in exchange for first liens on farm property, thus keeping the amount of currency just where it is and at the same time speeding up the circulation of the currency. It would get the money out of hoarding, get it in the hands of the farmers, stop loan foreclosures, help the insurance companies, give liquidity to long-term farm loans and go a long distance in making the Reconstruction Finance Corporation unnecessary.

To my mind, instead of our issuing Government bonds for every imaginable purpose, we should issue currency, save the interest and furnish a medium of circulation in the first instance. If farm lands had been monetized when the Federal Farm Loan Board was first set up, all the farmers would still have their homes, no interest or principal installment would have accrued and the enormous amount of loss occasioned by the owners of Federal Land Bank bonds would have been avoided. Practically all, if not entirely all, of the Government activities where bonds are issued and sold in order to secure money for their operation, could be financed much better by the issuance of currency to begin with and without interest. I am thoroughly convinced that the most available complete remedy for the depression can be promptly and effectively administered by the Government withdrawing a very large amount of Government bonds and issuing in lieu thereof the equivalent amount of currency.

On the 17th of this month the great editorial writer, Arthur Brisbane, said:

GOVERNMENT AIDS HOARDING

In its postal savings banks it does not compete with your avings banks, and so the little man who can accumulate $1,000 or so can not hoard through the Government. But to the man who has $10,000,000 the Government gives every facility for hoarding, for it has outstanding $22,000,000,000 in bonds.

If I were the dictator of this country, I would call in $10,000,000,000 of those bonds and issue in their place whatever was necessary. I would say to the rich man: "You now have the Government's promise to pay with interest; I will give you in exchange the Government's promise to pay that will not bring any interest."

Thus the Government would save $400,000,000 a year on the interest. The remaining $12,000,000,000 would be used for banking purposes, bank reserves and so forth.

Mr. Chairman, our entire economic trouble is one of currency and the control of the inflation, deflation, and circulation thereof. Of course the question of a proper base enters into the question. These matters, if properly handled, along with farm-relief legislation and other remedial measures, will solve our difficulties and forever make sure our national success. We are nearing an awful economic abyss of dreadful and unknown horrors, and can only turn aside and save our national existence by a proper handling of our currency. Will we be equal to the occasion or will we be weighed in the balance and found wanting?

There is now much talk about holding large amounts of cotton off the market by the Government buying it in and entering into a contract with the farmers concerning this cotton and the farmers' production. I am very much in favor of this proposal. It is in part what I had hoped could be accomplished by the farm marketing act, and is much akin to the contract system of controlling production, marketing, and prices so long advocated by me. But why should the Government have to raise money by taxation or the issuance of bonds in order to handle any of these marketing or farm-relief schemes? Why not use the cotton-or other farm product for that matter—as the base for the issuance of sufficient currency to handle the entire situation by putting up a lien on the property—cotton or other farm product-to secure Government bonds for an equivalent amount to be held by the Government as security for the issuance of the equivalent amount of currency with which to purchase the farm product? The farm problem will become much easier when we give the farmer and the masses of our people a fair deal in the issuance and control of the currency.

There is another matter I wish to mention in this connection. I have always believed that our farm-loan system was on the wrong idea. There is too much expense to the farmer and not enough real help. Why not cut out all this expense and make foreclosures impossible by simply monetizing farm lands and issuing to the farmers tax-free and interest-free currency instead of all this expense and awful destruction of the farmers' property rights?

For many years I have favored and worked for the settlement of all farm loans by a bond issue and by greatly reducing the interest rate of the farmers' loans, but we have now come to the place where this will not be sufficient. We must do much more; and I now believe that the entire matter should be handled by issuing money on these lands as the base, either with Government bonds intervening or without, so as to refinance the farm loans at a great discount, on long terms, without the payment of any annual interest or installment of principal, and under an arrangement which will enable the farmers to actually carry the loans indefinitely without the payment of any principal or interest. I have discussed this particular matter rather freely heretofore and shall not do so again now.

I have endeavored to make clear my idea of a cure for the depression. Now let me suggest that in order for this cure to be effective it must be given to the patient who is ill, and not to some one in good health as a proxy for the patient. Medicine in large containers in the drug store does not help the sick man until it is carried to his bedside and administered in proper doses to him. The issuance of more currency by the big bankers and held by them does not help the average run of people. Billions of money hoarded in Wall Street banks do not help my farmers in Georgia. They need more money in their own pockets with which to pay their debts and buy the necessaries of life. More money is the remedy for the depression, but we must see that the remedy is carried to and administered to those who are suffering because of all these economic ills.

Let us ever remember that the way to make our country happy and prosperous is to help the average run of people and all else will be well. We can not cure our present troubles by administering to the rich and expect them to help the poor. Neither medicine nor financial aid administered to the rich of New York City will aid or cure the poor man down in my district, suffering with either a physical or financial disability. This kind of aid has been tried too long. Let us strengthen the foundation if we would build a permanent superstructure.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS].

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, the farm-mortgage question continues acute. Congress should not adjourn without enacting some constructive legislation to refinance farm mortgages. I have called this to the attention of the House before. I prepared and introduced a comprehensive bill on the subject (H. R. 14135). It provides for the creation of Federal rural mortgage land banks similar to the Federal land banks, one for each of the 12 Federal land-bank districts, with a capital of from $25,000,000 to $40,000,000 each, to be subscribed by the Secretary of the Treasury with funds to be furnished by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and with the authority to issue bonds guaranteed by the Government in the sum of twenty times their capital.

By this bill loans are provided to be made to farmers up to 60 per cent of the appraised value of the land and 25 per cent of the value of the permanent insured improvements at 3 per cent interest, to be repaid upon the amortization plan.

The Bureau of Economics has reported that there are $9,241,000,000 of farm-mortgage loans outstanding, and that there are $4,283,000,000 of other farm loans outstanding not secured by real-estate mortgages. This will aggregate more than $13,500,000,000 of indebtedness of farmers.

Of course the farmers are deeply interested in legislation of this character. Everyone in the agricultural sections—laborer, merchant, banker, professional man—is interested in the welfare of the farmer. They depend upon him.

During the past 10 years it is an exceptional farmer who has made enough to pay the taxes and upkeep of his farm from the sale of farm products. The result is that 42 per cent of the farms throughout the country are mortgaged. Untold thousands of farms have been foreclosed, and in the Middle West and South a very large percentage of the farms are owned by mortgage companies, insurance companies, and others, and are occupied by tenants.

When the farmers can not pay their taxes, schools and county governments and municipalities are affected. Many schools are closed. The condition throughout the country is very serious. We need permanent, constructive legislation. I do not favor temporary or emergency legislation.

Among other things legislation must provide for a low rate of interest, and for an extension over a period of years, in order to induce the farmer to hazard the risk of going back on the farm and investing all he has in improving it and trying to make it pay. He can not do this on loans for 1 or 2 or 5 years. It must be done over an extended period of years. The bill which I have introduced provides for the payment of the principal of the loans upon the amortization plan by adding 1 per cent to the principal, extending over a period of $34\frac{1}{2}$ years.

Not only are the agricultural communities deeply interested in this legislation, not only are the schools and municipalities interested, but the people of the East, including New England, are vitally interested in the farm problem.

The Bureau of Economics reports that of the $9,241,390,-000 of farm loans, the Federal land banks have loaned $1,200,000,000, the joint-stock land banks have loaned $667,000,000, commercial banks $1,020,000,000, mortgage companies $988,000,000, insurance companies $2,164,000,000, retired farmers $1,006,000,000, active farmers $339,000,000, other individuals $1,453,000,000, and other agencies, including savings banks, $685,000,000. The savings of a lifetime are involved and threatened. What are we going to do about it?

The report shows there are $1,098,610,000 loans on farm lands in the State of Iowa, $428,227,000 in Missouri, $487,-122,000 in Kansas, and $214,033,000 in my State of Oklaboma

Savings banks, insurance companies, individuals, and ac- ! tive farmers all have very large sums of money invested in farm mortgages.

At one time farm mortgages were regarded as the safest investment. In the event the value of farm mortgages is reduced to the vanishing point, of course, everyone appreciates how the assets of all the companies and individuals above enumerated will be affected.

I am just reminded by the gentleman from Connecticut IMr. Gossl that there are 125,000,000 life-insurance policies in the United States. While many individuals do not have a policy, untold thousands have one or two or twenty or more. In the aggregate, I am assured there are 125,000,000 life-insurance policies outstanding.

Everyone will see, therefore, that the East is vitally interested in the refinancing of farm mortgages. The East is also interested looking at the matter from a commercial standpoint. When the farmers are bankrupt, their purchasing power is gone. They can buy goods only sparingly, and the local merchant buys less from the jobbers and wholesale houses and manufacturers. This affects adversely the unemployment situation, until to-day it is estimated there are from twelve to fifteen million unemployed in this country. It also affects the railroads, because they haul less freight.

Members of Congress, we see in reviewing the situation that every section of our country is deeply interested in the prosperity of the farmers. We can not live to ourselves alone. The farmers felt these distressed conditions first. They can not continue without Government aid.

Mr. CAVICCHIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. CAVICCHIA. There are insurance companies in my town which hold $200,000,000 in mortgages on farm lands in the gentleman's section of the country. These companies have decided not to foreclose and also not to press the payment of interest in order to help these farmers out of their difficulty. Does the gentleman think this is stimulating the farmer any at all?

Mr. HASTINGS. I am glad to hear the statement of the gentleman, for I am sure it will encourage many other insurance and mortgage companies to follow their example; but perhaps there are mortgage or insurance companies not in the same financial position and not able to postpone collections as the insurance companies to which the gentleman has referred.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. GIBSON. The gentleman has stated that the East is vitally interested in this mortgage situation. In support of this statement I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the savings banks and trust companies of the State of Vermont, holding the savings of the people, have $50,000,000 invested in real-estate mortgages in the West and the South-

Mr. HASTINGS. Of course, if the farmers lose their farms and if the value of farm lands depreciate to the vanishing point, the assets of those companies are of little or no value, and I know that the East is beginning to appreciate the importance of this question.

When I was interrupted a moment ago I said I believed we ought not to have any temporary or emergency legislation; that we ought to have constructive legislation; and I was about to refer to other bills on the subject.

Mr. GARBER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes.

Mr. GARBER. I was very much interested in the bill that the gentleman introduced, and I believe it is the best farmmortgage finance bill pending, without disparaging other

The gentleman has suggested that the policy be a constructive one and extended over a period of a long time.

Mr. HASTINGS. I thank the gentleman for the complimentary reference to the bill I introduced; but, regardless of the author of the bill, we ought to get some legislation during this Congress, no matter who prepared or who introduced the bill.

The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, Mr. Jones, has introduced a bill. I think it is H. R. 14476. It accomplishes the same purpose. It permits long-time loans. It permits loans to be made up to 80 per cent of the value of the farm lands. The bill which I introduced and to which my colleague, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Garber] refers, permits loans to 60 per cent of the value of farm lands and up to 25 per cent of the value of insured improve-

Mr. GARBER. That was one of the strongest features of the gentleman's bill, because it is sound. The great trouble with the bills pending is that the value is too high, the security is not sufficient, and the Government is required to take too much risk.

Mr. HASTINGS. There are a number of other bills pending before the House, some before the Banking and Currency Committee, some before the Committee on Agriculture, and others are pending in the Senate. I do not have the time to analyze all of them. I am in favor of any one of these bills that will supply the money or bonds to refinance farm mortgages on long terms and at a low rate of interest. I have heretofore discussed my bill, H. R. 14135. I am sure it is conservative and, if enacted, would bring no loss to the Government other than perhaps the expense of its administration. However, I am not wedded to any one particular bill.

My attention, as I stated a moment ago, has been invited to a bill just introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Jones | which would create a division of agricultural loans in the Department of Agriculture, with authority to concentrate in that division many agricultural bureaus and activities, including all bureaus and agencies which are authorized to make agricultural loans.

The bill would authorize the establishment of regional offices in the Federal land-bank cities throughout the country, through which mortgages may be exchanged up to 80 per cent of the value of the lands for Government bonds which are tax exempt and which would have the circulation privilege. This would insure the bonds' bringing par. The bill would authorize any amount of bonds to be issued to meet the situation. It would permit the exchange of first mortgages made by farm land banks, joint-stock land banks, commercial banks, insurance companies, individuals, and, in fact, those held by all of the companies, corporations, or individuals above mentioned. It also provides for repayment of the principal on the amortization plan. That is a good feature. It would provide for new loans.

There is not much difference in principle between this bill and the one which I have introduced. Both would provide ample funds for the refinancing of farm mortgages. Both provide for low rates of interest on the loans. The one which I introduced provides for 3 per cent interest, whereas the Jones bill would authorize loans not in excess of 31/2 per cent, but would also provide for an exchange for 2 per cent Government tax-exempt bonds. Both would provide for repayment of the principal on the amortization plan. Both would be permanent legislation. I would be glad to support that bill. Other bills are mere flyspecks. One assists farm land banks. Why not aid all interested in farm mortgages? Let us do the job well and not enact legislation to care for only one class of mortgages.

I have taken the floor again this afternoon to detain the House to bring to your attention this acute situation and to again express the hope that some one of the many bills, permanent and constructive, may receive the favorable consideration of the House before adjournment.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein Table No. 1 of the Commerce Year book for 1932.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I rise in order to keep the record straight. On Saturday, February 11, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cooper], who occupied the floor a few moments ago and whom I now see on the floor in debate upon the Crowther tariff bill affecting depreciated-currency countries, referred to the fact that Belgian skelp was being imported into this country and fabricated into steel pipe, to such extent that it was hurtful to American steel industry.

In that same speech the gentleman also referred to the importation of steel bars, tin, and pig iron. At the conclusion of his speech I made certain investigations relative to the items and articles referred to by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cooper], particularly with reference to Belgian skelp and steel bars.

I contacted the Tariff Commission for the information, and I found from them that there was such a small amount of Belgian skelp used in the American steel industry that they were unable to tell me in what quantity it had come in during 1931 or 1932.

It was included in paragraphs 307 and 308 of the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill, which included many other items. For the sake of accuracy, we will quote these paragraphs:

Par. 307. Boiler or other plate iron or steel, except crucible plate steel and saw plate steel, not thinner than one hundred and nine one-thousandths of 1 inch, cut or sheared to shape or otherwise, or unsheared, and skelp iron or steel sheared or rolled in grooves, valued at not above 3 cents per pound, five-tenths of 1 cent per pound; valued at over 3 cents per pound, 20 per cent ad valorem: Provided, That all sheets or plates of iron or steel thinner than one hundred and nine one-thousandths of 1 inch shall be subject to duty as iron or steel sheets.

Par. 308. Sheets of iron or steel, common or black, or whatever dimensions, and skelp iron or steel, valued at 3 cents per pound or less, thinner than one hundred and nine one-thousandths and not thinner than thirty-eight one-thousandths of 1 inch, forty-five one-hundredths of 1 cent per pound; thinner than thirty-eight one-thousandths and not thinner than twenty-two one-thousandths of 1 inch, fifty-five one-hundredths of 1 cent per pound; thinner than twenty-two one-thousandths and not thinner than ten one-thousandths of 1 inch, seventy-five one-hundredths of 1 cent per pound; corrugated or crimped, seventy-five one-hundredths of 1 cent per pound; all the foregoing when valued at more than 3 cents per pound, 20 per cent ad valorem: Provided, That all sheets or plates of common or black iron or steel not thinner than one-hundred-and-nine one-thousandths of 1 inch shall be subject to duty as plate iron or plate steel.

It will be remembered that I was endeavoring to secure the best information I could relative to the quantity of all skelp imported, as well as its value.

As stated in my speech of February 13, the Tariff Commission said that all of the articles, including a very limited amount of skelp, described in paragraph 307 of the Smoot-Hawley bill, aggregated 752 tons in the year 1931 and 409 tons for 1932; that the valuation of all such imports in 1931 was $32,306 and in 1932, $9,088.

With the same purpose in mind, as affecting paragraph 308 of the tariff act, I used the figures given me by the Tariff Commission relative to the total tonnage and value of all the steel products referred to in section 308, which included some skelp. For 1931, all of the articles in paragraph 308 total 10,827 tons as compared to a total of 3,931 tons for 1932. The valuation of all such articles in 1931 was $416,147 as compared with the value of $100,681 for 1932.

Then, with reference to steel bars, I gave the Tariff Commission figures that in 1931 steel bars which had a value of not over 3½ cents per pound, showed a tonnage of 46,759 tons, valued at $1,009,223; for 1932, the tonnage was reduced to 29,628 tons, with a value of $483,696. For steel bars valued at 3½ cents and more per pound, in 1931, the tonnage was 3,259 tons, with a value of $522,393; for 1932, the tonnage was reduced to 1,493 tons, with a value of $233,058.

Further, at that time, I referred to the fact that it is inescapable that such imports as there were of Belgian skelp and steel bars came mainly from Belgium, France, Germany, and other nations, who had not depreciated their currency, and consequently would not be affected by the passage of the Crowther bill. We have been unable to get the amount of Belgian skelp imported—it is so small.

To-day the able and distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cooper], in debate upon this floor, took the position that I had made the statement that the total importation of steel for the year 1932 was $100,681, when, according to him, it totaled a much larger sum. I quote from the gentleman's statement. He said:

All ore, pig iron, completed steel, and other finished products in 1930 totaled $18,883,235, and in 1931, $21,960,887 plus.

Adding the two years together, he reaches the figure of $40,884,122, and then he said there was a vast difference between $100,681, to which I referred, and $40,884,122, the sum total of the two years to which he referred.

The gentleman from Ohio used the figures of $40,884,122. Let it be understood that is the total imports for two years, 1930 and 1931, according to his own statements. He says, further along in his speech:

I was unable to secure the completed figures for 1932. I was, however, informed that the imports for last year fell below those of 1930-31.

I would say to the gentleman that not only did they fall below the total of 1930-31, but the imports for last year, to which he referred, fell below the imports of either year. All iron and steel imports in 1932 were $11,804,880.

Now, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cooper], in his speech on the floor on February 11, 1933, mainly referred to Belgian skelp. In no place in my remarks of February 13 did I state the total of importations of ore, pig iron, completed steel, and other finished products. It is not in the speech. So when the gentleman from Ohio takes the total of two years for the imports of "ore, pig iron, completed steel, and other finished steel products," and says that they add $40,-884,122, his mathematics is correct, but when he compares that total of $40,884,122 to the total of $100,681 I used in regard to the largest possible value of Belgian skelp under section 308 for 1932, it is inaccurate and unfair.

In the first place, the gentleman totals 1930 and 1931, the two years, to get his $40,884,122. It is the value of two years' imports instead of one year. In the second place, he uses the value of all "ore, pig iron, completed steel, and other finished products," whereas the reference that he uses from my speech is to the value of Belgian skelp under section 308, tariff act for the year 1932, which was $100,681.

I have no purpose to enter into a tariff discussion. The remarks of the gentleman from Ohio on February 11 referred to the Crowther tariff bill, dealing with depreciated-currency countries. My remarks on February 13 dealt with the same Crowther bill.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I will be more fair with the gentleman than he was with me. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Well, if the gentleman feels that way about it—

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I came on the floor when I heard the gentleman had used my name. I sought information from the gentleman and he declined to yield. After the gentleman concluded I endeavored to secure the statement. I did not get it except after insistence.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. The gentleman knows that my time had expired.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. But it had not expired when I first sought it of the gentleman.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I have no desire at all to try to misrepresent the gentleman. I will be very glad to change my remarks and have it so printed in the Record, that the gentleman referred only to steel products for 1932, such as Belgian skelp, and so forth.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The gentleman from Ohio did not say that the total of $18,000,000 for 1930 and $21,-000,000 for 1931 referred to Belgian skelp.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I said that represented all steel products; and I shall be glad to make the correction.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I am very happy to have the gentleman correct it, because it really questions my accuracy and fairness. I practiced law back in the old | days and I always tried to be fair with court and jury. In my remarks here to the House I want to be fair and accurate; and this inaccurate statement impelled me to take

The gentleman from Ohio was talking about certain specific imports on Saturday, February 11, with no figures involved. On the Monday following I addressed my remarks to his statement. Of course, when he puts in my mouth the comparison that it was $100,681 for total steel imports, I am now certain that it was an oversight.

The gentleman referred to certain importations. I wish to say now that I believe in fair protection to American industry. The trouble is the propaganda that went through this country in regard to this depreciated-currency bill represented that every ill with which this Nation now suffers as coming from importations from depreciated-currency countries when in fact this is not the case. Take, for instance, the reference the gentleman makes to shoes. He refers to importations from Czechoslovakia. Why, Mr. Chairman, Czechoslovakia is not a depreciated-currency country. Czechoslovakia would not be affected by the Crowther bill.

The gentleman refers to rubber shoes imported from Japan and Czechoslovakia. The imports from Czechoslovakia would not be affected; and the Tariff Commission just within the last two or three weeks, just a few days before the hearings, remedied this situation under the flexible tariff provision; it was met, not because it was a depreciated-currency competition but because the cost of production, as they found it, justified the increase in the rate.

I feel sure the gentleman from Ohio understands that the comparison he made is not applicable. [Applause.]

Under the leave granted me, I am inserting at this point Table 1-Iron and steel summary, found on page 307 of the Commerce Yearbook for 1932, corrected by the Department of Commerce and including the figures for 1932, which is proof conclusive that the aggregate imports of iron and steel for 1932 was 43,000 tons less than in 1931, and about one-half of what they were in 1929. Their total value for 1932 was about one-half that shown by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cooper] for 1931.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HORR].

Mr. HORR. Mr. Chairman, I want at this time to express the appreciation of my State and city for the presentation of the conditions that exist in my home city of Seattle, as presented by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. LEAVITT]. The gentleman told of the 5,000 people who encamped in our city hall, remained there for days asking for relief, and presented to you, in my opinion, a method of relief which you may hesitate to adopt because of the amount of money it would cost to carry out the program; but when you consider that you have sent into my own city alone in the past four months through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, to be paid out as a dole, over $1,250,000, you can realize that the gentleman from Montana has presented to you a mighty good investment. My remarks here to-day are going to be along the line of what it has cost the West in supplanting such men as the gentleman from Montana [Mr. LEAVITT] and many of the other great leading figures of this House, through the last Democratic victory that we have just passed through. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, as this Congress is drawing to a close and a new Congress will soon take over the matters of national legislation, with many new Members supplanting men of long and distinguished service, it is of interest to note how this change in personnel will affect the West, that great territory lying beyond the Mississippi and embracing almost two-thirds of the area of the United States.

In referring to any particular locality which through political upheaval, has become favored in the matter of positions of power and influence on committees in the Senate and the House, may I not be misunderstood as being critical of such State or group of States. But may I rather be credited with a desire to bring home to the people of the West the great loss sustained by them in changing from Republican to Democratic representation.

I congratulate the South and East—and particularly the South—on what the recent election has brought to them.

But to the people of my country, the West, I wish to say that in changing from Republican affiliation to Democratic they have thrown away the advantages gained in representation through almost a century of national life. Never in the history of the country did the West exert such influence in national legislation as it exerted before this Congress became Democratic.

In the new Congress, the Seventy-third, only 23 Republican Members will have seats representing States west of the Mississippi River.

In the Seventy-second Congress the House Republican membership is 89 from the West. Even with this representation from the West, when the House became Democratic the South was given 11 of the 14 major committee chairmanships. Ten of these major chairmanships now held by the South belonged to the West and were lost to it when the Democrats got control of the House at the first session of the Seventy-second Congress.

The Democratic Members elected from the West to the Seventy-third Congress will not supplant any of the 11 southern chairmen, as these chairmen are protected by seniority, which governs in the selection to those posts.

By changing to Democracy Oregon surrendered the chairmanship of the powerful Ways and Means Committee to Mississippi. Iowa is succeeded by Texas on the great Agricultural Committee.

The chairmanship of the Irrigation and Reclamation Committee, one of the most important committees in the development of the West, through the Democratic victory went from Idaho to Alabama. Utah lost the chairmanship of the Public Lands Committee to Florida.

Following is a list of committees the chairmanship of which the West lost through the Democrats securing control of the House of Representatives:

- 1. Ways and Means Committee.
- 2. Judiciary Committee.
- 3. Agriculture Committee.
- 4. Irrigation and Reclamation Committee.

- 5. Pensions Committee.
- 6. Mines and Mining Committee.
- 7. World War Veterans' Legislation Committee.
- 8. Public Lands Committee.
- 9. Claims Committee.
- 10. War Claims Committee.

These are all important committees, and the chairmanship of them is very material when legislation affecting the West comes before Congress for determination.

There are 47 standing committees, large and small, of the House of Representatives. The South now has the chairmanships of 30 out of these 47 committees. Six are controlled by Tammany, and only 11 chairmanships are north of the Mason and Dixon line.

The West has only one committee, Indian Affairs, its chairman being from Nebraska. Of the 11 northern committee chairmanships, not one can be classified as a major committee of the House.

Texas has 6 committee chairmanships in the House, Alabama has 4, North Carolina has 4, South Carolina has 4, Mississippi has 2, Florida has 2, and other Southern States have one.

The Democratic victory also destroyed the prestige of the West in the Senate. The chairmanships of the great Committees on Appropriations, on Finance, on Post Offices and Post Roads, held by the West, now go to the South and East.

The Naval Affairs Committee of the Senate, which means so much to California and Washington, leaves the Pacific coast and goes in all probability to either Florida or Virginia. This is a wonderful boon to the Norfolk Navy Yard, but is not so advantageous to the Puget Sound Navy Yard in Washington or to Mare Island in California.

The chairmanship of the great Agriculture Committee leaves Oregon and goes in all probability to South Carolina.

Texas, in line of seniority for the chairmanship of the very important Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, takes the place of Idaho.

The Democratic victory deprived the West of the following Senate committee chairmanships, and moves the majority of them to the South:

- 1. Agriculture Committee.
- 2. Appropriations Committee.
- 3. Banking and Currency Committee.
- 4. Claims Committee.
- 5. Commerce Committee.
- 6. District of Columbia Committee.
- 7. Expenditures in the Executive Departments Committee.
 - 8. Finance Committee.
 - 9. Foreign Relations Committee.
 - 10. Interoceanic Canals Committee.
 - 11. Irrigation and Reclamation Committee.
 - 12. Judiciary Committee.
 - 13. Mines and Mining Committee.
 - 14. Naval Affairs Committee.
 - 15. Post Offices and Post Roads Committee.
 - 16. Public Lands and Surveys Committee.

Out of the 14 major committees of the Senate, under Democratic control, 10 go to States of the South. May we again congratulate the South and commiserate with the West.

How long will it take the West to regain its former prestige? It took Haugen, of Iowa, 34 years to achieve his commanding position on the Agriculture Committee; Hawley, of Oregon, former chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, has 26 years to his credit; French, of Idaho, saw 26 years of service, and he now holds the fourth ranking position on the Appropriations Committee; Smith, of Idaho, Dyer, of Missouri, Johnson of Washington have served 20 years each in Congress, and under Democratic control have relinquished, respectively, their committee chairmanships of Irrigation and Reclamation, Judiciary, and Immigration and Naturalization.

HADLEY, of Washington, and TIMPERLAKE, of Colorado, each had 18 years of continuous service, and have attained the fourth and fifth ranking places on the powerful Ways and Means Committee. BARBOUR, of California, spent 18 years in Congress in reaching the eighth ranking position on the Appropriations Committee. Summers of Washington, the only Washington man to serve on Appropriations, has been in Congress for 14 years. These are only a few typical examples of what the West has lost through the Democratic victories.

There is little likelihood that the new Members from the West will gain admission to any of the major committees for several years to come. After membership is acquired years of seniority in service on those committees is necessary before the prize of chairmanship may be realized.

It took the West almost a hundred years to reach its peak of influence. Out of the new western Members there may come a committee chairman if he survives elections for 20 or 25 years. But not in 50 years, or even a longer period of time, with everything being favorable, will the distinction of having 10 major committee chairmanships come to the country west of the Mississippi. Estimates by men of experience in the House indicate that it would probably take the West from 60 to 75 years to regain its position lost two years ago.

I am going to digress a moment to refer to what this means to the Pacific Northwest. Naturally, in matters of irrigation and reclamation, the gentleman from Alabama who will be the presiding Chairman of this committee, and the gentleman from Tennessee, whose committee controls appropriations, are going to see more merit in the projects in their own State than they will in the great Columbia Basin where the Government has already brought in a favorable report.

Then I pick up the paper to-day and what do I find?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. HORR. I will yield if the gentleman can get me more time. At the end of my remarks I will yield to the gentleman and talk to him for an hour.

I want to call your attention to the new appointments in the next Cabinet. I find here headlines "Hull"—Strong Indorser of Slashes in Tariff. Oh, my people of Washington, I want you to realize what you have done when you changed over and lost the prestige that had been brought to you through 100 years of national life. Tariff is necessary for your very existence. You must know what foreign competition has done to your industries. Your timber, your pulp, your fisheries, your fruit—all have been destroyed by foreign competition and cheap foreign labor. And soon the arch enemy of tariff will be at the helm of the new Cabinet.

Your depreciated currency legislation, has that been taken care of by our Democratic friends? They refused to report out the bill, and when we Republicans brought it out, they killed it as dead as a gnat.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield? Has the gentleman forgotten Woodin, who is to be Secretary of the Treasury and who has large investments in foreign countries?

Mr. HORR. Yes. Here is a wonderful opportunity for my friend from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] to again start his impeachment proceedings, because I find here in Mr. Woodin's record almost an exact analogy to Mr. Mellon. that Mr. Woodin is the responsible head of the American Car & Foundry Co., and American Locomotive, two of the country's largest corporations. He is also a director of Remington Arms, New York Federal Reserve Bank, three concerns with railroad and sugar interests in Cuba, Montreal Locomotive Works, and several smaller organizations. "He is also considered quite a musician." A wonderful opportunity, Mr. PATMAN, and I only wish that the fates had been so kind as to decree that I could be here and join, as I did not in the past, in your impeachment proceedings against the gentleman who will represent you in the Department of the Treasury in the next administration. [Applause].

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The gentleman shed tears over the fate of the Columbia River Basin project. Is it not the fact that a Republican House voted down the project and refused to provide for it?

Mr. HORR. No; that is not the fact. It is O. K'd by the President, by the Department of Interior and by all the engineers of the War Department. Since survey and favorable report by engineers no vote has been taken.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. But what happened to it in the House of Representatives when we voted on it?

Mr. HORR. That was before the feasibility of the project was determined. But now let us return to the subject of representation lost to the West by the recent unpleasantness and the probability of the West regaining her once proud Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, and other States east of the Mississippi returned their Members, and probably will retain them as long as those Members are physically and mentally able to serve. With the return of a Republican administration the major committees will go to them under the rule of seniority.

To the uninformed the advantage of the control of committees may not be apparent.

In the Committee on Agriculture, will corn and wheat and other northern products be the first concern of that committee, or will cotton-the product of the State from which the chairman hails-receive first consideration.

With FREE of California gone, the West loses its only representation on the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries. The chairman of that committee is from the inland State of Tennessee. Has he an understanding of the necessities of the merchant marine and of the problems confronting the salmon and halibut fisheries on the Pacific Coast, or the extensive fisheries of the Atlantic.

From the powerful Ways and Means Committee can the West hope for a protective tariff when the ranking Democratic Member thereof, and the next ranking Democratic Member, are emphatically opposed to protecting the Western industries, such as timber, fish, oil pulp, and similar products? The effect of Democratic control of the Ways and Means Committee has already been felt in the industrial sections as a result of the action of the Democratic majority on that committee in refusing to favorably report the depreciated currency bill. The Republicans, by petition, forced a vote on this bill on the Floor of the House, but it was defeated by a solid Democratic majority against it. Only an aroused people will force passage of this bill in the new Congress. [Applause.]

The shifting of power in the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation from Republican to Democratic control has already resulted in the consideration of southern rather The President elect knows than western projects. where the legislative power lies. Development of the Tennessee watershed, calling for reclamation of lands, power production, and reforestation covering an area of 640,000 square miles, and running over the States of Virginia, West Virginia, Tennessee, the Carolinas, Kentucky, and Alabama, is the first development of natural-resources projects to receive his consideration. Why should this project be first in line? It is because Alabama has the chairmanship of Irrigation and Reclamation and Tennessee of Appropriations.

The Tennessee project is not as far advanced in survey or authorization as western projects. The arguments advanced for it are not as sound as those advanced for western projects. If overproduction can be taken care of through the consuming capacities of the settlers, as the President elect cites as a solution, surely it can not be denied that the western appetite compares favorably with that of the South.

Why select Tennessee when we have in my own State of Washington the Columbia Basin project? The feasibility of the latter project has been established. The Army Engineers, after three years of intensive investigation and survey and the expenditure of much money, have made a favorable report on the Columbia Basin project. The Board of Engineers have affirmed the findings of the district engineer, the Interior Department is favorable, and the Executive of the Nation has placed his stamp of approval on it.

Why go to the Tennessee to survey and determine the feasibility of a project when another project in the West, bringing into cultivation over 2,000,000 acres of land with a power development greater than that at the Hoover Dam.

lies ready and declared sound from an economic and engineering standpoint?

Washington State, you went Democratic and your neighboring States followed your example. Do you realize that through that action you took from the West the chairman of the committee who will eventually pass upon our Columbia Basin project? Can you blame the gentleman from Alabama, chairman of the Irrigation and Reclamation Committee, and the gentleman from Tennessee, chairman of the Appropriations Committee, if they see more merit in the development of projects in their own States than the advancement of the one in the State of Washington? Give this matter a little thought, fellow Washingtonians.

The West has lost. Years must pass before that great out-of-doors country again comes into its own. This is a tragedy when one considers the needs of this great undeveloped territory. But the people so desired it. The desire for a change, occasioned by depression, caused a normally Republican group of States to turn Democratic-but with what sad results!

However, the expression of the will of the people must not be curtailed. In the language of my good friend, Colonel Robertson, newspaper dean and publisher, of Yakima, Wash .:

It was the people's victory; they must like it that way. They decided to return to the position of beggar at the rich man's table; it will be 30 years before they can possibly sit up at that table again and get anything better than a wing.

Yes, Colonel; it will be twice 30 years—and why the wing? That is not the part of the bird which goes last over the fence. [Laughter.]

Once again we salute the new rulers of the Nation-the South. The West has lost, and while we regret the passing of a long-time-acquired position, we yet congratulate the South upon its opportunity to serve. May we of the West be rewarded with the crumbs of the feast. [Applause.]

May I submit the following list of committees and their respective chairmen:

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Warson].

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, the issue of a manufacturers' sales tax at this time is very important, not only to raise revenue, but to balance the Budget. As was stated by the Treasury Department, a 2 per cent sales tax would raise $600,000,000.

I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an article written by my colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] upon the subject of the sales tax.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article, entitled "The Why of the Sales Tax," by Hon. ALLEN T. TREADWAY, of Massachusetts, which appeared in the North American Review for March:

THE WHY OF THE SALES TAX

(ALLEN T. TREADWAY, one of its leading congressional advocates, argues the merits of the manufacturers' excise tax)

The Federal Government has gone in the red five and one-half billion dollars in the 3-year period ending June 30 next. What can be done about it?

Nothing is more unpopular than taxes. Nothing is more intri-cate and perplexing to the average man or woman than any system of taxation. Nothing except death is more certain than the absolute necessity of some form of tax collection to meet Federal, State, and municipal expenditures.

On the other hand, States can not exist without expenditures, and the average citizen expects much, and rightly so, from his Government. He expects protection at home and abroad, good roads and bridges, waterways, aid for the needy and suffering, and relief for those who may have fought the Nation's battles. Thus, there is an irreducible minimum below which expenditures can not be cut.

can not be cut.

About the only way of bringing home to every citizen the need of care in public expenditures is a call from the tax collector. Extravagance can be condoned only in time of great emergency, such as our participation in the World War. Our tax needs to-day are an inheritance from our expenditures of yesterday. We are now reaping the harvest of national extravagance which followed the war and our lack of foresight in failing to realize the inevitable result of profligacy. This harvest is augmented by the effects of the world depression, which became acute in this country in the fall of 1929 the fall of 1929.

What then is the present financial situation? Our expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, reached the enormous sum of $5.006,000,000, and our receipts were only $2,121,000,000. Even under a program of strict economy, expenditures for 1933 will be in the neighborhood of $4,268,000,000. Receipts for 1933, after heavy tax increases, are estimated at only $2,624,000,000. 82,624,000,000.

Twenty years ago our Government was efficiently conducted for $724,000,000, and our Budget was in practical balance. To-day, our expenditures are six times what they were in 1913 and our Budget is entirely out of balance. It will be interesting to combriefly, receipts and expenditures of 1913 with those of 1930 and 1932.

THE WHY OF THE SALES TAX

First, consider the years 1913 and 1930. In both of these years the Budget was in practical balance, there being a small deficit of $400,000 in the former year and a fairly large surplus of $183,000,000 in the latter year. In 1913 44 per cent of our revenues were derived from customs, 42 per cent from tobacco and liquor taxes, 5 per cent from income taxes (excise tax on corporate incomes), and the remaining 9 per cent from miscellaneous sources. In 1930, on the other hand, 15 per cent of our revenues were derived from customs, 12 per cent from tobacco and liquor taxes, 60 per cent from income taxes (on both corporations and individuals), and the remaining 13 per cent from miscellaneous sources. In other words, in 1913, customs and excise taxes on tobacco and liquors constituted our main source of revenue, while in 1930, income taxes were the principal source.

Comparing the expenditures for 1913 with 1930, we are immediately impressed by the enormous increase in "civil and miscellaneous expenditures" amounting to over $1,400,000,000. It is true that some $600,000,000 of this increase may be ascribed to ordinary civil expenditures in operating the Government, but the great bulk of the increase will be found in miscellaneous expenditures which include such items as the Veterans' Administration, the agricultural marketing fund, the adjusted-service certificate fund, good roads appropriations and other similar items. There was an increase of $637,000,000 in interest charges and $553,000,000 for debt retirements. In other words, our war debt has increased our annual Budget by over $1,000,000,000.

Now, consider what has happened during the period since 1930 by a comparison of the figures given for the fiscal years 1930 and 1932. Total receipts have declined from $4,177,000,000 to $2,121,-1932. Total receipts have declined from $4,177,000,000 to $2,121,-000,000 or nearly 50 per cent. Every source of revenue has fallen off, not from a decrease in tax rates but as a result of economic events. Customs duties have decreased 44 per cent; income taxes, 56 per cent; tobacco and liquor taxes, 11 per cent; miscellaneous internal revenue, 43 per cent, and other miscellaneous receipts, 58 per cent. On the other hand, expenditures increased from $3,994,000,000 in 1930 to $5,006,000,000 in 1932. This increase of slightly over $1,000,000,000 is accounted for largely by extraordinary relief measures, necessary during the economic crists, such as $500,000,000 for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, $125,-000,000 for Federal land banks and heavy expenditures for public works to create employment.

000,000 for Federal land banks and heavy expenditures for public works to create employment.

In the spring of 1932 the Congress, warned of the impending deficit for that fiscal year (which ended on June 30), made strenuous efforts not only to increase taxes but also to cut expenditures. These efforts were partially successful, as it is now estimated that at the close of the fiscal year 1933 expenditures will be approximately $740,000,000 less than in 1932 and receipts approximately $500,000,000 greater. Unfortunately this is not a sufficient gain, for a deficit of $1,644,000,000 still is probable for 1933 if we take into account the sinking-fund requirements on the public debt.

The measures taken to reduce the expenditures consisted of an economy bill providing for general salary cuts from 8½ per cent to 10 per cent and reductions in the regular appropriation bills. The measures taken to increase the revenues consisted of, first, a general income-tax increase more than doubling existing first, a general income-tax increase the revenues consisted of, first, a general income-tax increase more than doubling existing rates; second, an increase in the estate tax more than doubling existing rates; third, a new gift tax designed to return revenue directly and also to prevent avoidance of the estate duty; fourth, an increase in postal rates; and, fifth, special sales taxes on numerous items, such as automobiles, tires and tubes, jewelry, toilet preparations, furs, electrical energy, malt sirup and like products, gasoline, lubricating oil, matches, theater admissions, firearms, candy, etc. The stock-transfer tax was also increased, and a new levy on checks and drafts was added.

The problem now facing the Congress is the task of balancing the Budget for the fiscal year 1934. The fiscal year 1933 is too far spent to hope for a balanced budget in that year. According to the estimates of the Secretary of the Treasury, the expenditures for 1934 are placed at $3,790,000,000 and the receipts at $2,949,000,000, leaving a deficit of $841,000,000. In making these estimates economies have been taken into account which will result in a reduction in the expenditures for 1934 over 1933 of about $478,000,000. What must be done to meet this deficit of $841,-000,000, in view of the fact that it will exist even after the most drastic economies? We must either increase present taxes or turn to some new source for revenue.

Can we increase existing levies? The income tax has already been increased nearly to the war-time level. The receipts from this source depend on economic conditions. When business is this source depend on economic conditions. When business is prosperous and employment is plentiful the tax is a good revenue producer. However, in times of economic stress, such as we have been through in the past few years, it has proved to be unstable and unreliable. It is in such times that the demands upon the Government are greatest. What about estate taxes? These are already much higher than ever before imposed. Do any luxuries remain untaxed? No; we not only tax all luxuries of any importance but also many necessities. In fact, if all our taxes are surveyed individually, it will be found that the rates imposed in nearly all cases are so high as to approach the point of diminishing returns; that is, further increases in rates will depress business and result in less instead of greater revenue.

ing returns; that is, further increases in rates will depress business and result in less instead of greater revenue.

There is one and only one sound conclusion. We must seek a new form of taxation with a broad base which will be productive of substantial revenue regardless of economic conditions. We do not go to the point of advocating that such a levy should be substituted for our income and estate taxes. These are equitable and proper taxes when levied at reasonable rates, but they must be supplemented, at least in times of emergency, by something more stable in character and more certain in its productivity.

In the final analysis we find ourselves in this predicament: It is very evident that existing methods of taxation will not meet governmental needs during this emergency. Neither will the most sweeping economies meet the situation. It can also be readily demonstrated that the present tax laws in many instances are extremely burdensome as well as inequitable. Common sense, good judgment, and fairness to the people demand a new form of taxation.

taxation.

If we look outside our own borders we will find in nearly all countries of advanced civilization except England a very productive tax, popularly called the sales tax. France has had such a levy since 1920, Germany since 1919, Canada since 1920. Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Cuba, Ecuador, Hungary, Italy, Poland, the Philippines, Rumania, Mexico, and a number of other countries have such taxes in varying forms.

The sales levies in different countries vary widely, but it is significant to note that they have been excellent producers of revenue, have been continued in operation following the experimental stages, and the longer they are in force the more satisfactory appear to be their results.

The sales tax is not of modern origin, as many suppose, but

The sales tax is not of modern origin, as many suppose, but on the contrary we hear of it in ancient Egypt. History records that such a levy was used in Greece 500 years before Christ, and was imposed in Rome under Emperor Augustus. It was found in Europe during the Middle Ages, and has continued in one form or another to the present time. Of the modern levies of this character those of Mexico and the Philippines date from the beginning of the present century.

of the present century.

The sales-tax movement in recent years arose out of the urgent revenue needs of the postwar period. Canada's manufacturers' sales tax was adopted at a time when the Government was faced sales tax was adopted at a time when the Government was faced with a situation quite similar to that in this country at the present time. The French turnoever tax was inaugurated with the financial condition of that country in an alarming condition, necessitating an increase in receipts by 70 per cent. In nearly all cases these levies were adopted as the quickest and easiest way to raise the desired revenue. Attention should be directed to the fact that in all these countries they were not used to replace the income tay but to augment it. income tax but to augment it.

Within our own borders there are at the present time nine States which impose what may be termed "general sales taxes," although some hardly deserve the name. Those levied in the States of Pennsylvania, Mississippi, and West Virginia are the broadest in scope and the most productive of revenue. Other broadest in scope and the most productive of revenue. Other States are considering its adoption.

General sales taxes have been discussed in this country on three different occasions. During the Civil War period such levies were proposed, but they were rejected in favor of sales taxes on selected commodities. Half a century later, in the period from 1918 to 1921, discussion again arose in respect to this form of taxation. At that time, the tax was proposed as a substitute for the irksome excess-profits tax and for some of the nuisance taxes. It was opposed on the ground that, as it was to be cumulative on each successive sale of an article, it would discriminate against single-process enterprises in competition with multiprocess or self-contained concerns. In 1932 the existing financial emergency once more brought the sales tax before Congress. This time, however, discussion was not with reference to the general sales tax proposed discussion was not with reference to the general sales tax proposed in 1921, but to a modified form of the tax which meets most of the objections to the former levy. Moreover, this modified form was not advocated as a substitute for any existing revenue measures, but to supplement them. The bill which provided for this tax will be discussed later.

These are three recognized forms of sales tax, namely, the turn-over tax, the retail sales tax, and the manufacturers' sales tax. These different forms deserve analysis.

These different forms deserve analysis.

The turnover tax applies to all sales generally, although, of course, some limited exemptions may be provided. Broadly speaking, however, the tax attaches to manufacturers', producers', wholesalers', and retailers' sales. It is pyramided, therefore, and an article may not only be taxed several times but there may even be a tax upon a tax. From this fact, these turnover levies are also classified as multiple turnover taxes. One rate may be levied on all sales or different rates may be levied on different classes of sales.

The retail sales tax applies only to retail sales, and usually to prevent evasion also attaches to sales by a manufacturer or wholesaler when he sells direct to the consumer. Here we have a wholesaler when he sells direct to the consumer. Here we have a levy which is a single instead of a multiple turnover tax, inasmuch as it is applied to the commodity but once on its way from the manufacturer or producer to the consumer. It is obvious that, since it is applied at the last point in its transfer, it is based on a greater price than would be the case if it were applied to the manufacturers' or wholesalers' selling prices.

The manufacturers' sales tax applies only to manufacturers' or producers' sales, and, like the retail sales tax, is a single rather than a multiple turnover levy. In this case, as in the case of the retail sales tax, there is no pyramiding, and the levy attaches but once to each commodity. However, the manufacturers' sales tax is applied at the first point in the transfer of the commodity to the consumer and thus attaches to a lower price than the retail sales tax. In other words, at a given rate the manufacturers' sales tax imposes a smaller burden than the retail sales tax.

Outstanding practical examples of these three principal forms

Outstanding practical examples of these three principal forms of sales taxes are worthy of description.

The present French turnover tax is perhaps the best example The present French turnover tax is perhaps the best example of the multiple tax. It is levied at the general rate of 2 per cent, although sales of luxuries are taxed at a higher rate. It is imposed on all money payments made in exchange for commodities or services delivered or rendered in the ordinary course of business. The principal exemptions apply to the receipts of farmers, laborers, and professional men. There are a number of exemptions applying to specific commodities, but the important ones relate to sales of bread, wheat, and rye for use in its making, and to milk for consumption in its raw state. The tax can, of course, be pyramided, the sale of the article itself not only being taxed at every transfer, but also sales of the material of which such article may be manufactured. The receipts from the French turnover tax in 1932 amounted to 7,524,000,000 francs, or about $300,000,000.

West Virginia and Mississippi both levy taxes which come under the same category as the French turnover tax, although they are not quite so general in scope. West Virginia applies different rates to different classes of busi-

West Virginia applies different rates to different classes of business; for instance, 1 per cent on oil production, 0.21 per cent on manufacturing, 0.20 per cent on retailing, 0.05 per cent on wholesaling, 1 per cent on amusements, and a number of other different rates on other classifications.

Mississippi follows a similar system and applies various rates to different classes; for example, 2 per cent on oil, one-quarter per cent on manufacturing, one-eighth per cent on wholesalers, 2 per cent on retailers, 1 per cent on automobile dealers, and other rates for other classifications. The result of these different rates is somewhat to minimize pyramiding, although it still remains as a defect in this system. West Virginia realizes about $4,000,000 annually from the tax, and it is estimated that Mississippi will realize over $2,000,000 in the first year of operation.

Perhaps the best example of the levy on retail sales is the new emergency sales tax recently enacted by Pennsylvania. This levy is a 1 per cent tax applying to the "sales of tangible personal property for any purpose other than for resale." It attaches, therefore, to all retail sales of such property, and also to sales by producers and manufacturers when made direct to the consumer. It is not pyramided, and, since it is based on the retail price, it will return more revenue than a tax at the same rate placed only It is not pyramided, and, since it is based on the retail price, it will return more revenue than a tax at the same rate placed only on the manufacturers' price. The Pennsylvania tax, however, has not been in effect long enough to judge of its productivity or as to the difficulties of its administration.

A good example of the manufacturers' sales tax is found in Canada. The present rate is 6 per cent and applies to the manufacturers' prices of all goods produced or manufactured in Canada or imported into Canada. Pyramiding of the tax is effectively prevented by a license system which exempts from the levy sales to a licensed manufacturer or to a licensed wholesaler. Practically speaking, Canada collects its tax solely from licensed manufacturer. speaking, Canada collects its tax solely from licensed manufacturers, wholesalers, or importers, and articles sold to such licensees are exempt and collections are made from the manufacturer who sells the finished product. Canada allows a very large number of specific exemptions covering many articles of food and clothing, farm machinery, ores of all kinds, and many other items, the enumeration of which, in fact, covers some eight pages of the law. The receipts from this source in 1930 were about $44,000,000.

The best example of a sales tax on the manufacturers' selling price undoubtedly would have been the manufacturers' excise tax

The best example of a sales tax on the manufacturers' seiling price undoubtedly would have been the manufacturers' excise tax as proposed by the Committee on Ways and Means to the House of Representatives of the United States early in the year 1932. A description of this bill is important, although it failed of passage. As reported to the House and as perfected by later committee amendments, the bill provided for a manufacturers' excise tax of 2½ per cent on the sale price of every article sold in the United States by manufacturers or producers required to be licensed thereunder, and upon the duty-paid value of importations. Manufacturers and producers whose gross business with respect to ufacturers and producers whose gross business with respect to taxable articles for the preceding year was less than $20,000 were not required to be licensed and were not taxed. In order not to place a burden on necessary articles of consumption, sales of food, wearing apparel, and medicines were exempted. Other exemptions included agricultural implements, ice, coal and wood for use as fuel in the home pawspapers and particles and cartein home, newspapers and periodicals, and certain fuel in the articles for use in churches.

As the levy was to be imposed on articles at the point of manufacture or production, sales by wholesalers, jobbers, and retailers were not separately taxed. In order to prevent pyramiding or accumulation of the tax on articles used in the fabrication of other products, the bill provided that sales by one licensed manufacturer to another licensee should be exempt. Thus the tax applied when the completed article was sold for consumption, but if an article was sold to another manufacturer for further assembly or fabrication, it would not be taxed except as a constituent part of the finished product.

Let us consider for a moment how the manufacturers' excise tax would have operated had it been enacted. We may take, for purposes of illustration, a lead pencil, which commonly retails for 5 cents. A pencil is composed of a number of component parts, such as the wood, lead, eraser, etc. Under a general sales or turnover tax the sale of each of these constituent parts to the manufacturer of the pencil would be taxed, and then the completed pencil would be taxed when sold by the manufacturer, the wholesaler, and the retailer. Under the manufacturers' excise tax only one levy would be imposed, which would be on the sale of the finished pencil by the manufacturer.

finished pencil by the manufacturer.

Under the system of licensing set up under this plan, the producers of the various items going into the manufacture of the ducers of the various items going into the manufacture of the pencil would be permitted to sell their own finished products to the pencil manufacturer tax free. When the pencil was assembled and sold to a wholesaler or jobber the tax would then apply. The manufacturer would be responsible for the amount due and would make monthly returns to the Government. In selling the pencil to the wholesaler the manufacturer could pass the tax on, in whole or in part, if he saw fit or was able to do so. It may be that competitive conditions in the pencil market would require him to absorb some of the amount. To the wholesaler the tax, if it were passed on, would be just an item in the cost, and he in turn might pass it on to the retailer. The retailer would have the same opportunity, depending upon a number of circumstances. A 2½ per cent levy on the manufacturers' selling price of a pencil retailing for 5 cents would be such an infinitesimal amount that we have no money to represent it. Under such circumstances it is hardly probable that the consumer would ever feel the effect of the 21/4 per cent tax on the manufacturer. In the case of articles selling for larger amounts the tax can more easily be passed on. Even in such cases, however, there is usually a sufficient margin of profit for 2½ cents on each dollar of the wholesale price to be absorbed. In many cases the retailer's mark-up is as high as 100 per cent. Where this is the case the sales tax would be but 1½ cents on each dollar of the retail selling price. Even if it be assumed that every cent levied on the manufacturer will be passed on through the wholesaler and retailer to the consumer, there would be no tax paid on food, wearing apparel, or medicines, and the public would find that there would be few essential articles which would be subject to taxation.

The proposed levy was called a manufacturers' excise tax, being so denominated in order to remove some of the prejudices which exist against sales taxes. Actually, the term accurately described the subject. It was not a true general sales tax, since it was not a true general sales tax, since it was not to be imposed on the gross receipts of all business. It was nothing more than the extension to a large group of commodities of the many special excise taxes which have been known to us since the beginning of our Government.

A Federal manufacturers' excise tax of this character A Federal manufacturers' excise tax of this character would operate uniformly throughout the United States without disturbing competitive conditions. State sales taxes, however, give rise to two important difficulties of administration. One is the opportunity to escape taxation by securing commodities from neighboring States which do not impose such a tax, and the other is the constitutional restriction against burdening interstate commerce. These objections, however, would not apply under Federal statute. The fact that States are from time to time adopting the principle of a sales tax is an additional argument for prompt action.

ciple of a sales tax is an additional argument for prompt action on the part of the Federal Government in order that States may ciple of a sales tax is an additional argument for prompt action on the part of the Federal Government in order that States may know that the Government considers such a levy to a certain extent a Federal prerogative rather than a State right. We already have too many interlocking forms of taxation, as illustrated by the present gasoline tax, collected both by the Federal Government and by many of the States.

Consumption of certain products is necessary, whatever economic conditions exist. A levy on the consumption of goods would apply, in a small way, at least, to every man, woman, and child in this country. It would be productive of revenue because buying power, though it may be greatly diminished, is always present. The manufacturers' excise tax is such a levy.

The natural tendency in taxation is to place the burden where it can best be borne. For instance, the income-tax brackets increase in proportion to the size of incomes. During the war patriotic motives permitted excessive levies. In the postwar period, these levies were from time to time decreased, but in the last revenue act it was necessary to increase them again nearly to their war level. There would be no substantial support for the enactment of a law in this country, even of a temporary nature, that would tax foods and such other items as can be designated as absolute necessities. We, therefore, come to the point where to a certain extent a sales tax is a voluntary tax upon the part of the people. For instance, a family may want a piano, but if it can not afford to buy one, it pays no tax on the plano purchased by its neighbor. On the other hand, the family which can afford the highest-priced piano will pay the heaviest tax on this product. A manufacturers' excise tax such as proposed at the last session.

its neighbor. On the other hand, the family which can afford the highest-priced piano will pay the heaviest tax on this product. A manufacturers' excise tax such as proposed at the last session of Congress is unlike those used in the States and in most of the foreign countries. By eliminating most of the objectionable features of the general sales tax this manufacturers' tax is of such a nature that it should command the support of every loyal American citizen who is anxious to place the financial structure of his Government on a sound basis. While it is a tax on consumption, necessary articles of consumption have practically been eliminated from its scope. The principle of ability to pay is not wholly violated because the graduated income tax would still be retained, and the total tax burden would continue to be much heavier as the total income of the taxpayer increases. The levy would be no more harmful to business than any other tax not based upon net income, and by providing an artificial stimulus to prices it might even be helpful.

More revenue must be raised, and it must be raised in large

More revenue must be raised, and it must be raised in large measure from people who are not now subject to Federal tax. A manufacturers' sales tax would provide the necessary revenue by allowing all our citizens to contribute to the support of the by allowing all our citizens to contribute to the support of the Government, even though the contribution of each person would be relatively small. It would not be oppressive as it would be collected indirectly and in small amounts from day to day. As a tax on buying power, which is always present to a certain degree, it would constitute a dependable source of revenue at all times. The tax would be paid only by those having money to spend, and as the rich buy more than the poor, and pay more for what they buy, they would contribute proportionately more. Since the levy is imposed at the point of production, it is quite possible that some of it will be absorbed as the articles taxed pass from the manufacturer through the hands of the wholesaler and retailer, especially in times like the present when competition for business especially in times like the present when competition for business is keen.

Even if the whole amount were passed on to the consumer, and the profit of the wholesaler and retailer included a percentage on the tax, it still would be a negligible amount. Take the case of a family of five, living on a $1,000 income. Social agencies estimate that with such an income, 40 per cent should go for food, 15 per cent for clothing, and 25 per cent for shelter. This leaves a balance of 20 per cent for operating and miscellaneous expenses. Assuming that the whole $200 spent for such expenses went for taxable goods, the manufacturers' price for which might be in the neighborhood of $140, the total tax would be $3.15 for the year at a rate of 21/4 per cent. This amount would be three-tenths of 1 per cent of the income. Of course, where the income is greater a smaller percentage of the whole will be spent for necessaries, leavsmaller percentage of the whole will be spent for necessaries, leaving a larger amount to be spent for taxable goods.

The administration of a manufacturers' excise tax would be a fairly simple matter, and would not involve certain difficulties encountered in the administration of our income tax law. In the first place, a comparatively small number of returns would be filed, since only manufacturers (and other licensees) of taxable articles would be required to make returns, and then only when their gross business was over $20,000 per year. Since it is imposed on gross receipts it would be easy to compute. Under the income tax it is necessary to determine the net income after making certain deductions and credits, which often involves complex ques-tions of law and fact. It is true that the manufacturers' excise tions of law and fact. It is true that the manufacturers' excise tax is somewhat complicated by the methods adopted to prevent pyramiding but no difficult problems of administration are presented. In making collections, existing machinery could largely be used, as was done in Canada when a sales tax was adopted there. Manufacturers and producers would file monthly returns, which could easily be audited by any one familiar with simple arithmetic. Periodic examination of the books of manufacturers would be made to check any irregularities in reporting gross sales. The percentage of cost of collection to the amount collected would be comparatively small.

In summarizing the subject which has been been been as

In summarizing the subject which has been briefly set forth, it is believed that the following conclusions are fully justified:

First, sound financing demands the balancing of the national

Second, it is impracticable to balance the Budget without Second, it is impracticable to balance the Budget without additional revenue.

Third, the present sources of revenue appear to have been tapped to their maximum yield.

Fourth, new sources of revenue are needed.

Fifth, the experience of foreign countries shows that the sales tax is not excessively burdensome and is productive of large revenue. The experience of Canada with its manufacturers' sales tax is eminently successful and shows the tax easy of administration istration.

Sixth, a manufacturers' excise tax, such as proposed in the last session of Congress, avoids the principal objections to existing levies of this character.

Seventh, such a manufacturers' excise tax is not a substitute for our income tax, but supplements it by providing a certain and stable revenue when the income tax fails.

Eighth, the manufacturers' excise tax has a broad base, is too small to be seriously felt, is paid only when the taxpayer has money to spend, is paid in proportion to spending, and will not interfere with business since it bears equally on all competitive articles.

This subject and the conclusions drawn could be elaborated in This subject and the conclusions drawn could be elaborated in much greater detail. Many other facts could be stated in support of the views presented. Objections of some weight may be made to the form of tax recommended, but it is easier to criticize than to construct. Certainly no more practical suggestion has yet been presented for balancing the Budget than a general manufacturers' excise tax. Let those who attack this plan first present a levy of equal productivity to balance the Budget and then let the merits and demerits of their scheme be compared with the manufacturers' excise tax. Every alternate scheme thus far presented has failed to meet this comparison.

The manufacturers' excise tax appears to offer the best simplest.

The manufacturers' excise tax appears to offer the best, simplest, and most equitable way out of our financial difficulty.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, that great Democratic President, Grover Cleveland, stated the justification of legislation to proctect American farmers and workers from cut-throat depreciated foreign currency competition when he declared, of another crisis, "We face a condition, not a theory."

The condition faced in my district, in my State of Oregon, and in the Nation at large is unemployment largely due to this destructive competition. More than 100,000 persons are out of work in the Pacific Northwest. Many thousands of these are idle because of the flood of imports from countries which have debased their currencies. In the whole Nation it is estimated that more than 1,000,000 have lost jobs as a result of these imports.

So important is this invasion of our markets considered by the Legislature of the State of Oregon that a petition has been sent to Congress asking immediate legislative action at this session to rectify the situation. Other States have petitioned likewise. It is a national demand.

I do not ask, nor do they ask, any increase in tariffs. The remedy proposed is to give our farmers and workers a fair chance in our own markets by equalizing these depreciated foreign currencies with the dollar. Therefore this is employment, not tariff, legislation. Not a single tariff or customs duty would be raised above the rates or duties in existing laws. All that is asked, when competing merchandise and products of the soil arrive at our ports from countries with debased currencies, is that these products be valued according to the dollar and according to conditions before they debased their currencies, some of which are 60 per cent below the dollar value.

We have bread lines and relief agencies caring for thousands in my section of the country, while other thousands are using up their last meager resources to avoid public charity. Our farmers and fruit growers are struggling with this foreign competition as well as our industries in the cities. These men and women face a condition, not a theory. They are resentful of the failure of Congress to act to stem this unfair foreign competition. I favor legislation along this line as the quickest, most effective way to reduce unemployment. It is not a cure-all, but it will be a tremendous help.

Our great salmon industry, for instance, is faced with ruin by Japanese competition. The currency of Japan is 60 per cent below that of the dollar. This amounts to a 60 per cent cut in Japanese wages, and when this is added to their already low scale it gives their fishermen an advantage over our fishermen that can not be met and still allow our workers a decent livelihood. Japanese salmon in some varieties is offered in our market at approximately half the American price. Although our fishing industry has cut wages and made every other possible economy to meet this competition the depreciated Japanese and other foreign currencies give the alien producers an insurmountable advantage. The entire Pacific coast fishing industry represents $90,000,000 annually and it is facing destruction.

That is only one industry affected. Our forest-products industry also is being destroyed by depreciated currency competition. Latest figures issued by the Canadian Bureau of Statistics show that logging operations in January of this year in Canada employed about 2,000 more men than in January of last year; whereas in the Pacific Northwest the opposite is true, as shown in increasing unemployment. Canadian and Scandinavian wood pulp are also underselling mills in the United States. This has resulted in more thousands being thrown out of work.

The same distress is reported in our cement and other basic industries. Our fruit growers are seeing their sales abroad curtailed as England and other nations buy apples and other fruit from Canada and Australia at prices made lower than our prices by depreciated currencies and perferential agreements. Our dairy and other farm industries are losing as foreign butter and other products undersell them.

With our great basic industries so demoralized all other business shows a slump. The purchasing power of the workers thrown out of jobs by foreign cutthroat competition is so reduced that retail stores are suffering losses. Railroad workers lose jobs because there is less freight to haul. All concerns selling machinery and supplies to the basic industries are losing business. Thus the vicious circle of unemployment spreads in all directions increasing unemployment. I could cite dozens of industries damaged by the flood of depreciated currency imports, covering almost everything needed in the household and in trade and industry.

The United States Department of Commerce has just received word from its representative in Japan that Japan now can make pig iron more cheaply in Manchuria than it can be made anywhere in the world and is planning to ship pig iron to the Pacific Coast States and to Africa and Europe. Foreign cement is underselling American cement. Many buildings are going up in the United States made of foreign structural iron and steel and foreign cement, lumber, and other materials, all of which imports mean that Americans in such industries have been thrown out of work.

They are able to undersell us because of depreciated currencies. What are we going to do about it? The advantage they have enables them to pay ocean transportation, Ameri-

ment, not tariff, legislation. Not a single tariff or customs | can tariff, and any other charges and still land their goods duty would be raised above the rates or duties in existing | in this country at prices that mean starvation to our farmers laws. All that is asked, when competing merchandise and | and workers.

In this situation to talk about legislation proposed to protect our workers by tariff raising is absurd. These foreign imports can and do come in despite any tariffs we have. They will continue to come in despite any tariffs we might raise unless we use the remedy that will automatically eliminate their great advantage, namely, a law to equalize their debased currencies with the dollar. This proposed legislation would restore jobs to Americans because it would restore competition to where it was before more than 40 countries went off the gold standard.

It is bad enough to suffer from our domestic depression, but to have added to this a ruinous foreign competition with workers living on starvation levels is inexcusable so long as we have the remedy at hand. We should, as the proposed legislation specifies, place a tax on imports from depreciated-currency countries which will offset the advantage depreciation has given them. If we do not, we either will go into a national collapse worse than anything we yet have known or we will sink to oriental and other wage levels so distressing that we will have a revolt in this country.

The Democratic Party will hold the esteem of the people by constructive measures. An ounce of employment is worth far more than a pound of charity or governmental relief. Let us do that which will put Americans to work rather than seek ways of feeding and clothing them out of the Treasury in the weak hope that the depression will cure itself. Let us pass this employment legislation. It deals with a situation wholly outside the tariff question as such. Later we can go into a world economic conference or bargain for trade advantages as we elect, but the present crisis must be dealt with now. With this legislation we will have that which will give us a bargaining issue. Thus it will relieve the present and fortify us for the future. [Applause.]

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Lankford].

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Horr], and, although he belongs to the same party that I do, I regret that he has raised the question of sectionalism. There is no place for it here. We are now one country. I agree that these chairmen of the committees through years of experience are valuable men, but this is true by reason of the fact that they are men of experience and ability and not because they come from the North, the South, the East, or the West. I, as a Member from the South and a Republican, regret his bringing that question up.

Mr. RAGON. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. RAGON. I would like to say to the gentleman that the new President has announced his Cabinet.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. I heard that a moment ago, and I am very glad that one of them is the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Swanson]. The next President could not find a better man to fill that position.

Mr. RAGON. And I want to say that of the 10 men selected by the Democratic President, 7 come from the North and only 3 from the South.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. As I say, I regret that the question of sectionalism was raised, for I think this is no place for it.

Now, this discussion has gone far afield, and I want to come back to the naval bill. I listened to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. French] in his statement, and he was very complimentary to the subcommittee, of which I heartily approve.

I have had some experience with that committee, for as a member of the Naval Committee I have appeared before it many times. I have always received every courtesy, and they were helpful and thoroughly informed. I am sure the House has the same impression that there is no more valuable group in the House than the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Ayres] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Oliver] and the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. French].

I want to say a word this morning in regard to the gentleman from Idaho. I listened with almost sorrow to his magnificent address on the Navy, because when the gavel falls at the end of the session the gentleman from Idaho ceases to be a Member. He has been the victim of a political upheaval which it is hard to understand in his case. I hope soon he may come back and give the country the benefit of his valuable services. If his constituents knew what an able, conscientious, well-informed, and industrious Member he is they will soon send him back.

I can not always agree with all the conclusions of the gentleman from Idaho, but I have long since learned to respect men who differ with me when I know that they are sincere and honest in their convictions, and I know he is. I agree with him of course that the road to international peace, the way to final disarmament, is by international agreement, and I think we are approaching that, probably, in the right way. But after the London Conference it will be recalled that one of our friendly nations began to elevate its guns, that it took advantage in that way, and that in the Far East another friendly nation now is practically getting ready to get out of the League of Nations because its treaty obligations do not suit her. It will be recalled that when the World War started, Germany regarded treaties as a scrap of paper. So, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that we have yet reached that high plane of international cooperation, where we can afford to let down and reduce. I believe in the Theodore Roosevelt policy of a strong arm for peace and protection. For instance, if I were alone, with a good deal of money in my pocket, going through a forest infested by bandits, I would want the strongest and most powerful guns that I could take with me. That it seems to me is our condition to-day in the present state of international affairs.

So far as this committee is concerned, I think they have done wonderfully well, with a reduced Budget and the necessity for economy, in bringing out the bill that they have. I think it is the best that could be done and is very satisfactory.

Take the question of modernization. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. French] mentioned that our ships, ship for ship, were as good as those of any nation on earth. I hope that is true, but it would not have been true with the last three battleships, if they had not been modernized. They would have been as useless in combat with a modern ship as a painted ship on a painted ocean. When they were built, submarines had not yet reached the stage of effectiveness that they have now, and it was necessary to put blisters on them to protect them from submarine attacks. Airplanes had not reached the efficiency they have now, and it involved putting on additional steel decks to protect them from airplane attacks. Elevating the guns gives them a longer range, and now those ships, when completed, will be the equal of any ships on earth.

The destroyers built years ago are more or less obsolete. Advances have been made in speed operations, and handling in many ways. Our newest cruisers are, I believe, the equal of any on earth, but I believe we should go a long way toward increasing our national defense until the time comes when we can, by international agreement, safely protect ourselves.

I represent a naval district, but I can say frankly that while I see the importance of work there, I do not believe that I have ever tried to get work for that yard if I did not believe that the prime object was for the best interest of the country. Of course, I believe in national defense. I was raised around it, was a part of it in the World War, and I know its importance. My mind works in that direction, but I have never attempted to get money from the Treasury of the United States for local benefit if the country would not profit by it.

In conclusion, as a step in the right direction toward this international peace, I think the most important step since the Monroe doctrine is the Hoover agreement now accepted by the League of Nations, which provides that an aggressor nation will not be recognized in the conquest of the territory of another, in controvention of the terms of the Kellogg Pact. That is happening in the world to-day, and if the nations stick to that policy I believe it will be a long step in the direction of final international peace, and at that time disarmament or limitation of armament can come.

I have known many hundreds of naval officers in my lifetime, and I have never heard a naval officer who would not agree that when the time comes when other nations shall limit their armament they would be willing to cut down ours. They do not want a navy that is larger than every other navy, but they do want an equal chance, man for man, and ship for ship. They want all of the others to come down at the same time, so that we will at least be equal. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Garber].

Mr. GARBER. Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, this being the anniversary of the birth of George Washington, I preface my remarks with a poem by George E. Phair:

" WHY? "

"Why quit our own to stand on foreign ground?"
This warning rang in Washington's farewell,
For even then he felt the deadly spell
That sought to bind the land he had unbound.
Simple his words, but studied and profound,
The last paternal counsel ere he died.
They are forgotten now and cast aside
For alien creeds that bear a lofty sound.
Snared in the tangled web across the sea,
We find the world without a friendly hand.
We seek the favor of a foreign land
As one who begs a dole on bended knee.

Now and forever let those words resound: "Why quit our own to stand on foreign ground?"

I submit the above without comment, with the suggestion only that our Democratic friends heed the sound advice and adhere to the wise, enduring, and proven policies of the Father of our Country.

Mr. Chairman, the consideration of the pending bill naturally calls attention to the committee membership having it in charge, and without disparagement to any other member, I know of no Members of this distinguished body who in their quiet, modest, conservative, courageous, and conscientious way have contributed more valuable service to the Nation than have the distinguished gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Ayres], who is the chairman of that committee, and the senior ranking member, the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. French]. [Applause.] I believe those two gentleman voice the conscience of a peace-loving Nation in expressing the policy for this country to pursue and limiting its aggressiveness and its action to thorough preparedness in its defense.

At this time I want to say a word in defense of the incoming President, to protect him from the keen disappointment that will inevitably result because of the exaggerations and misrepresentations made in reference to the accomplishments which may be effected by reason of the abolishment of bureaus, boards, and commissions. The public now believes that they are so numerous that they are eating out the substance of the people, and that by their discontinuance millions, nay, hundreds of millions of dollars annually can be saved. The delegation of power made yesterday was accompanied by such misrepresentation. I want to quote a distinguished member of the Democratic Party upon this very question. About a year ago the one-time Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Josephus Daniels, while in Washington naturally visited and consulted with the Democratic House leaders, and inquired into the policies they were about to adopt. At that time, in an Associated Press interview, he said:

It looks like the Democratic House is determined to abolish all the boards and commissions which crowd on each other's heels in Washington. I am not exactly thoroughly familiar with the House program, but if I had a voice I would say wipe out every independent board and bureau and commission heretofore authorized.

Here is Josephus Daniels, one-time Secretary of the Navy under President Wilson, from 1913 to 1921, now a member of the National Democratic Executive Committee, publisher of daily newspapers with wide circulation, representing to the people that if he were placed in power he would wipe out every independent board, bureau, and commission in existence. In addition to that he said:

Speaker Garner and his associates are on the right track, getting rid of the boards and commissions and securing economy and uniting departments. If well done, it will save millions and hundreds of millions of dollars to the country and promote efficiency. The chief thing that stands in the way, however, up to date is that Congress has done nothing to reduce its own expenses or compensation. Reforms must begin with themselves.

Here is where the former secretary hits the bull's-eye the first step for Congress to take to effect real, substantial reductions, is to reduce its own compensation and expenses.

After more than a year of control it would be interesting to learn how the situation now "looks" to the former secretary. Does he still think the Democratic House is "determined to abolish all the boards and commissions which crowd on each other's heels in Washington?" Does he still think that "Speaker Garner and his associates are on the right track in getting rid of boards and commissions?" This is not said in criticism of Daniels. Not at all. There is not any question but what a year ago it "looked" as though the Democratic Party was determined to abolish all such agencies, but then "looks," especially Democratic "looks," are sometimes deceptive. They rarely materialize in promises fulfilled.

A year ago it looked as though the Democratic House was going to reduce the iniquitous rates in the Smoot-Hawley bill, but they did not. As a substitute for repeal they enacted a rateless tariff bill, and the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky, with his cathedral-bell solemnity, justified his action in support of it by solemnly declaring it was necessary to "bring the Government back home to the Constitution." [Laughter.] A year ago it "looked" as though the House majority was going to repeal the tariff law which places "a billion dollars tax annually upon the consumers of the country," but it did not!

At one time it "looked" as though they would enact a sales tax and balance the Budget, but they have not!

When this session convened it looked as though important major measures would be enacted, restoring the purchasing power to farm products and giving jobs to the unemployed, but they have not. Mr. Daniels was fully justified in saying a year ago that it "looked that way," for it did. It not only looked that way but it sounded that way. It sounded that way at every crossroads in the country, where people were told by distinguished gentlemen, speaking for the party, that innumerable boards, bureaus, and commissions existed in Washington, and that if entrusted with power, they would abolish them all!

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARBER. For a question only.

Mr. SCHAFER. Only yesterday the Democratic leader admitted that the Democrats did not know what boards could be abolished, and they had to retain the Bureau of Efficiency under the supervision of Mr. Swager Shirley, whoever he may be, to go out and investigate and see what could be abolished.

Mr. GARBER. There is no question but what they do not know what boards can be abolished; they have already passed seven appropriation bills, and of the bureaus, boards, and commissions in existence they have succeeded in abolishing how many? Let some Democratic authority answer. How many boards and bureaus and commissions have you abolished? No reply. They have abolished one, and only one! And at a saving of what? Not hundreds of millions of dollars to the taxpayers, but at a saving of only $9,188! Such is the distinction between the representations of Democratic leaders at the crossroads and their performance here in the Capital of the Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARBER. I regret that my time is so limited that I am not permitted to do so.

Now, how many independent boards, bureaus, and commissions are there, which the Democratic leaders represented to the people were "crowding upon each other's heels in Washington?" Let some Democratic leader answer. I pause for a reply. No answer. I will tell you how many there are. There are only 73 independent commissions in existence. Seventy-three! At what cost? At a total cost for their maintenance not of hundreds of millions of dollars but at a total cost of $45,722,179. My friends, 12 of those independent commissions cost $40,000,000 plus, and the remaining 61 commissions and boards cost the remaining $5,722,179.

Now, my Democratic friends, speak up and tell us how many of those 12 major commissions you have abolished or would abolish. This Chamber remains as silent as the grave.

Mr. HASTINGS. If my colleague will yield, I will ask him to put in the Record in connection with his speech those specific ones that he would abolish.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman did not yield.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield and, if so, to whom?

Mr. GARBER. I only yield for the request of my distinguished colleague. The request of my colleague but emphasizes the exaggerations of Democratic leaders. They do not know. When interrogated they remain silent in sharp contrast to their volubility at the crossroads. The Republican Party has taken the position that such agencies are necessary in the economic administration of the Government, and should be discontinued as soon as they become unnecessary.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. GARBER. My time is limited, and I regret that I am unable to do so.

The 12 agencies are the Civil Service Commission, the Employees' Compensation Commission, the Federal Board for Vocational Education (which includes $10,000,000 to be matched with the funds of the several States), the Federal Trade Commission, the General Accounting Office (which includes the office of the Comptroller General), the Federal Reserve Board, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, the Office of Public Buildings and Public Parks, the Smithsonian Institution, the Supreme Court Building Commission, and the United States Tariff Commission. The remaining $5,722,188 provides for the 61 remaining commissions that are short lived but temporarily necessary in administration, the larger number of which will soon expire by their own limitations.

The number of commissions set up under recent administrations are:

ı	President	Roosevelt	107
ı	President	Taft	63
١	President	Wilson	150
i	President	Harding	44
	President	Coolidge	118
	President	Hoover	44

The commissions, committees, or conferences are of three classes.

First. Temporary bodies created by the President's order for the purpose of coordination of Government activities, or for the determination of facts and advice as to policies on special subjects. These commissions cost the Government nothing.

Second. Commissions or committees created by Congress upon recommendation of the President. The expenses of such committees are paid by appropriation.

Third. Commissions created by Congress on its own motion. These expenses are always paid by appropriation.

During President Wilson's administration, approximately one-half of the total of 150 commissions were created by Congress upon its own motion. Of those created by or upon recommendation of the President, 10 are still in existence.

During the Coolidge administration 74 commissions out of a total of 118 were created by Congress. Of the 44 created by the President or upon his recommendation, 39 have completed their tasks and have been released.

During President Hoover's administration 24 out of the 44 commissions were created by Congress. Of the 20 created directly by the President or upon his recommendation, 12 have completed their tasks and have been released, and only 2 are other than temporary. Of the purely presidential commissions, the expenses of four have been paid by the Federal Government, while 17 either cost nothing or rely upon public support.

Abolish all the independent boards and commissions, and how much would you reduce the cost of government? Forty-five million seven hundred twenty-two thousand one hundred and eighty-eight dollars! It goes without saying that all unnecessary boards, bureaus, and commissions should be abolished, but let us not continue to deceive the people as to their number and the amount of savings to be effected by their abolishment. The Budget can not be balanced by any such means. Although large savings can be effected by the merger and consolidation of bureaus in the departments, cutting out all duplications, reduction must go deeper than the costs of administration. It must go to the reduction of the appropriations made by Congress. Congress must just stop spending the people's money.

Because of this depression our revenues have fallen off more than 50 per cent. In 1929 our national income was $85,000,000,000; in 1932 the national income was $37,500,000,000. Our deficit for the fiscal year 1931 exceeded $902,000,000. For the fiscal year 1932 it was $2,472,732,549. The estimated deficit for the fiscal year 1933 is $1,146,478,307. Reductions by reorganization must be supplemented by reductions of appropriations and even such reductions are limited somewhat by the so-called fixed obligations of the Government as shown by the following table:

So-called fixed charges of the Government

	1933 (esti- mated)	1934 (esti- mated)
Reduction in principal of public debt Interest on public debt. Veterans' Administration Navy Army (military and Panama Canal) Postal deficit.	$498, 153, 400 695, 000, 000 1, 073, 381, 000 356, 360, 500 319, 831, 000 134, 075, 000	$534, 070, 300 725, 000, 000 1, 105, 008, 000 330, 126, 000 300, 979, 400 97, 075, 000
Total, fixed charges, as above	3, 076, 800, 900 4, 268, 888, 400	3, 092, 258, 700 3, 974, 794, 200
Total appropriations from which reductions may be made based on above figures	1, 192, 087, 500	882, 535, 500

Our annual Budget requirements under the existing socalled fixed charges of the Government, estimated for 1933, total approximately $3,076,800,900, leaving an estimated deficit for the fiscal year 1933, $1,146,478,307.

The national platform of the Democratic Party and its President elect have pledged a reduction in the costs of Government of 25 per cent. Can they effect a reduction of such an amount without going into the so-called fixed charges?

Having defeated all the efforts of the present administration to reduce the costs of Government by consolidation and reorganization, and having been unable to effect such reductions, the House majority yesterday delegated power to the incoming President for such purposes. In other words, after being in power for more than a year the House majority now announces:

We have been unable to abolish or consolidate these bureaus and commissions. We thought we could, but we can not, so we have turned the matter over to the incoming President.

Such action of unloading its responsibility upon the incoming President, although a humiliating confession, was in fact the only thing that could be done under the circumstances. "What is a President for anyhow, if he can not take the ball once in a while?"

The President elect, however, did not come from Mars, from the land of supermen where they have no bureaus and commissions. He comes from the State of New York as the former chief executive of that State where bureaus and commissions are still used as convenient agencies in the administration of government, and he undoubtedly will retain such as may be found necessary. The House majority should begin to soft-pedal on the evils of such agencies, upon their number, and the enormous amount of savings to be effected by their discontinuance, for such continued exaggerations will only accentuate the disappointment of the people when the President elect will be unable to meet their expectations.

The House majority leaders have been kept continually on the run, from one announcement to another, from one exaggeration to another, from one misrepresentation to another, from one failure to another, until it has been one continuous runaway policy.

If the incoming President could effect all the reorganization work outlined in the delegation of power, the reductions thus effected would not balance the Budget. The House majority can not escape its responsibility. It can not delegate its power to grant appropriations. It is not the Chief Executive who can be empowered to effect the big reductions in the cost of Government. Congress alone is vested with that power. It can refuse appropriations. It can save millions where the Chief Executive can save but thousands of dollars.

There is no lack of power in Congress to reduce appropriations, and there should be no lack of power in the Chief Executive to clean out the departments and abolish all unnecessary boards, bureaus, and commissions. There will be no alibi for the $2,000,000,000 pledges made to the people. The Democratic Party pledged a reduction of $1,000,000,000 annually by repealing the Smoot-Hawley bill. It has pledged a reduction of $1,000,000,000 in the costs of Government. Let the roll of its accomplishments be called a year hence, and then listen to the alibis.

For more than a year the Democratic House majority has piddled and loafed along without reducing or even attempting to reduce a single tariff rate and has abolished but one commission, at a saving of $9,179, a difference in performance and pledges of $1,999,990,821. How long will the people continue to tolerate such deception and such flagrant violation of pledges made?

In this crisis, demanding drastic reductions, the people are demanding that immediate action be taken, that actual reductions be made, and as stated by Mr. Daniels, former Secretary of the Navy and member of the national Democratic executive committee, it is the duty of Congress to set the example by reducing its own expenses and its own compensation! It should not only do this but cooperate with the incoming President. The people have expressed their confidence in his sincerity of purpose to secure the enactment of remedial legislation and reduce the costs of Government. No greater responsibility ever faced an incoming President. If he can survive the "Greeks bearing gifts," the importunities of his partisan friends, the pleadings of selfish politicians, and stand up squarely, facing the issues involved with an unfaltering will and determination to discontinue the employment of all unnecessary employees of the Government, abolish all unneccesary boards, bureaus and commissions, and reduce the National expenditures 25 per cent, he will have kept faith with the people and justly earned their undivided support and gratitude!

For, say what you will and speculate as you may as to the remedies, a balanced Budget is the corner stone of the credit structure of the Nation and essential to its preservation. A balanced Budget will be the first major recommendation of the President elect to the incoming Congress. Mark the prediction! A balanced Budget is necessary for the economic refinancing of the Government's obligations at a low rate of interest. With a balanced Budget, such refinancing can be accomplished with a saving of approximately $300,000,000 annually in our interest charges. A balanced Budget is necessary to create a market for bonds to furnish finances to operate the industries of the country. It is necessary to enable the banks to furnish the credit necessary to carry on the business activities of the country at the crossroads. It is the first step necessary to remove the existing uncertainty and to restore confidence essential to investment and recovery! Until our Budget is balanced, until such uncertainty is removed, and such confidence restored, capital will not invest, industries will not revive, idle labor will not be reemployed, and conditions will continue to sag through to complete liquidation and indefinitely postpone recovery. [Applause.]

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COYLE].

Mr. COYLE. Mr. Chairman, my appearance on the afternoon of this historic occasion, when farewell addresses from people in the history of the country, far more entitled to make them than I, is, in some measure, to make for the second time a farewell address and something of a testament to the Congress.

I bring to this service in the Congress now drawing to a close no great ideas of reform that were going to be accomplished by COYLE; but as a second time we come to the close of COYLE's term I do have certain things in mind which, having been drawn from my own experience in the past, it seems to me might perhaps be left with the Congress as something of a testament.

From the people at home I have had the utmost consideration. I go out, I know, with their good will, even though there was a substantial majority against me. After all, Coyle has had from his thirtieth district of Pennsylvania three-quarters of all the Republican time in the Congress and, as a consequence, he has nothing but appreciation for them. Had the rest of the country been as true to political affiliations as was the Democratic thirtieth district of Pennsylvania, the history of the national election of last November would, indeed, have been very different.

Coming to a question that continually recurs in Congress, there are certain things the next Congress should perhaps bear in mind. I have in mind to mention particularly the question of contests for congressional seats, and in this connection I want to refer the Members of Congress who will sit in the next Congress to a bill introduced by the former Member from Massachusetts, Mr. Dallinger, and to the remarks that he made at that time concerning contests. I wish to say to the incoming Congress that they should scrutinize carefully some of the contests that have been started. Indeed, they should scrutinize all of them. It is apparent that in some cases idle, frivolous contests have been started apparently with the purpose, perhaps the prime purpose, of getting the substantial allowance which the Congress generally makes to both contestant and contestee. The rules of Congress, however, require that the election committee scrutinize carefully not only the form of the vouchers submitted, but the good faith with which the contest is underlaid; and it is perfectly within the power of the committee hearing contests to determine that a contestant has started a frivolous contest and perhaps to refuse to that contestant the full fee to which otherwise he might

There may be developing a certain amount of solicitation on the part of some lawyers for business in conducting contests before Congress, and I raise this voice of warning that the incoming Congress look closely to the underlying facts of each contest.

And now, as I am approaching the end of my time and the end of my term, may I leave another bequest to the Congress? It has particularly to do with the District of Columbia. For a long time Presidents have said to Congress, one after the other from the time of the first Adams to the present day, that matters affecting the District of Columbia crowding onto the shoulders of Congress, the work of which has multiplied at least tenfold in my time, frequently fell on crowded ground, frequently fell in years in which there was hardly time to attend to the detailed affairs of the District of Columbia.

To the Congress itself I seriously suggest that some sort of a joint and continuing committee be appointed from among the residents of the District of Columbia and the Members of Congress to consider and report to the Congress some method of taking off the shoulders of Congress these manifold matters of detailed legislation regarding the local affairs of this city.

In tune with the great farewell address we heard earlier in the day, one other word may I leave with you, and that is in reference to my first love, the Naval Service. Two times have I had the privilege of serving in my country's Navy in the Marines, and one time, through the National Guard, have I served in the Army of the United States. Some 33 years ago I had the privilege of graduating from the Naval War College at Newport, and as a result, I believe you will agree, I have brought to my more mature judgment some experience gained in the military service. To-day, as on the day it was written, the statement of Washington in his Farewell Address regarding national preparedness is just as true and just as sound. It rings down through the ages a challenge to America to trust in God, but in national defense to keep her powder dry. I thank you. [Applause.]

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks, and to incorporate some excerpts, including a statement from the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations showing the amount of reductions made in the appropriation bills.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, there are 10 dailies, and, counting little and big, there are altogether 64 newspapers published in my district. The editors of many of them, and their readers, have at last become convinced that many articles sent them from Washington are specially written unfairly, unjustly, and designedly to injure me. Several editors in my district have lately mailed me articles of this character, calling my attention to the many inaccuracies and unfair references they contained.

Editors in my district have begun checking these unfair reports with the Congressional Record. Many of my constituents who take the Congressional Record have begun to check these unjust references to me with what really happened, and they are losing confidence in many reporting agencies with seats in our press gallery.

Because I assisted Chairman Cannon in preventing numerous amendments carrying millions of dollars from being added to the appropriation bill then before the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Schafer], as the wet leader here, with no intentions other than to take his usual wet swipe at me simply because I am a dry, took the floor to berate me for fighting such amendments. Certain wet reporting agencies in the gallery, who never overlook a chance to sideswipe and try to hamstring any dry, seized upon the incident to send some misleading reports of this trivial and unimportant incident to Texas papers.

And they were published in my district by some papers. Here is what was published last Sunday in the great Star-Telegram of Fort Worth that goes all over my district. The big headlines are, "Schafer Upbraids Blanton for Many Speeches," and is dated Washington, last Saturday, February 18, and states:

When Representative Schafer, Republican, Wisconsin, gained the floor to-day on a motion to strike out "the last word," he began to upbraid Representative Blanton, a Democrat, Texas, for making so many speeches.

Now, had the paper gone on and told what kind of speeches they were and what they were for and what they accomplished, it would have been all right; but they just left it up in the air like that.

The article then states that SCHAFER said:

If the gentleman from Texas continues to interrupt proceedings in the House, it will cost the taxpayers much more than the $328,816 in the last word—

Indicating that my speeches here were costing the people money, when just the opposite was true, as they helped to defeat many amendments and saved large sums of money for the Public Treasury.

Now these newspaper reporting agencies can not get away with that. Why, that same misleading report was sent to my own newspaper, the splendid Abilene Reporter News, than which there is not a better paper in the State of Texas or the South; and on its front page last Sunday it carried this same article about SCHAFER upbraiding me. The idea of Schafer upbraiding me! The people at home do not understand the situation here. [Laughter.] As if he could upbraid me and get away with it!

I hope there are sitting in the press gallery the reporters of one agency that I still have confidence in, the great Associated Press. Its dispatches go into my State and district and every part of the country. I want it to be fair enough to send to the editor of my home paper, and to the editor of the Star-Telegram, at Fort Worth, just what those numerous speeches I have been making were about. This is what they were about: I was asked by Chairman Cannon, as a member of his committee, to stay on this floor and help him keep these money-spending amendments out of that appropriation bill. I helped him, and you who stayed on this floor know how I helped him defeat all of those amendments carrying large sums.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment, I shall be glad to

I hope the Associated Press is fair, and I believe it is going to send down to these newspapers in Texas these amounts that we kept out of this bill by speaking against all of those amendments that would have added millions to be appro-

Here are some of these amendments: One of the amendments proposed to give free schooling in Washington, from kindergarten through high school, to 2,587 school children living in Maryland and Virginia. That was one of the amendments I was fighting and which I helped to defeat.

Here is an amendment by DE PRIEST to spend $67,000. That was defeated. Here is one by Holaday to appropriate $185,000. That was defeated. Here is one by McLeon to spend $40,000, and it went out of that bill on my point of order made against it that it was not authorized by law.

Here is an amendment by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardia] for $625,000. At first we defeated it. We kept it out of the bill on a point of order, and later the new occupant of the chair held it in order and he got it in and it was passed, and that is the only amendment that was passed and added to that measure during the entire consideration of that bill.

Here is the amendment by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOLADAY] for $35,550. That we defeated. Here is one by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Keller] for $11,000 that we defeated.

Here is another by Mr. Keller for $12,000 that we defeated. Here is still another by Mr. Keller for $20,000 that we defeated.

Here is another by Mr. McLEOD for $40,000 that he tried to place in this bill and that went out on my point of order that it was not authorized by law.

Here is one by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardial, the first time he offered it, for $26,000, that went out on a point of order.

Here is an amendment of my own to strike out $3,500,000 from that bill. If the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] had supported it, and if he had gotten the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] to help in trying to save, we could have stricken this $3,500,000 out of the bill.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield? If the gentleman had supported the position of the gentleman from Wisconsin he would have saved about $40,000,000 a year on prohibition enforcement.

Mr. BLANTON. It was not to the credit of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Schafer] that he was not in favor of enforcing the prohibition laws and sought to cripple enforcement by not appropriating the necessary money needed to enforce such laws. When the eighteenth amendment prohibited the manufactured and sale of intoxicating liquors, and I am under oath to support the Constitution, I naturally did all I could to make my oath good.

Here is an amendment by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] for $5,451 that we defeated.

Here is one by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] for $48,585 we defeated. Here is one by Mr. HOLADAY for $9,490 that we defeated. Here is another by Mr. HOLADAY for $100,000 that we defeated, and another by Mr. HOLADAY for $35,000 we defeated. Here is still another by Mr. HOLADAY for $20,000 that we defeated. Here is one by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cochran], on page 4267 of the RECORD, which sought to fix the minimum wage per hour that could be paid in Washington for personal services either by direct employment or under contract.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. For what?

Mr. BLANTON. That was the amendment that you offered which we defeated the other day. If the gentleman will look on page 4267, he will find it in the Congressional RECORD covering proceedings the other day when I was helping Chairman Cannon keep expensive amendments out of the appropriation bill. I quote the following from what then occurred:

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. Blanton. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. Cochran of Missouri. I yield.
Mr. Blanton. Does the gentleman approve of the decision of the Treasury Department requiring this Government, out of the people's Treasury, to pay carpenters $11 a day and to pay plasterers $14 a day and to pay bricklayers $14 a day, when back in Missouri they are glad to get three or four or five dollars a day? Mr. Cochran of Missouri. The gentleman does not know what he is talking about. Laboring men in Missouri get as high wages as they do any place in the country, and before the depression carpenters got $15 a day; plasterers got $16 a day; plumbers got $16 a day; painters got $12 a day.
Mr. Blanton. They tell me thousands of artisans in St. Louis and Kansas City are without jobs to-day.
Mr. Cochran of Missouri. I know they are without jobs, and I will vote for any legislation to provide jobs for them.
Mr. Blanton. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is legislation on an appropriation bill. I am thinking of the people in the 48 States and not merely in the District of Columbia.
Mr. Cochran of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of Mr. Cochran of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. PRALL). The gentleman from Missouri concedes the point of order. The Chair sustains the point of order.

I called the gentleman's attention to the fact that here in Washington carpenters refused to accept less than $11 a day and went out on strike when they were asked to accept less; painters refused to accept less than $11 a day, and plasterers and bricklayers refused to accept less than $14 a day, when they have all had the good fortune to be employed on the $100,000,000 that has been spent here on public buildings and construction here in the last three years paid out of the people's Treasury. Many good artisans in the 48 States can not get half that. The Washington artisans have been holding up the people, and I had to oppose my friend's amendment.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. BLANTON. If I had the time I would gladly yield. Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Right at that point I would like to say to the gentleman that if my amendment had carried, we would have saved the District thousands of dollars that we would not have to vote for relief purposes.

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry. I can not agree with the gentleman. On some things I would take the gentleman's judgment quicker than I would that of anybody else in the world, but on the question of saving money for the people I will not do it.

All of the above-mentioned amendments were offered on one appropriation bill. If we had not fought and defeated them, they would have cost several million dollars. I am going to put into my remarks a statement from the clerk of our committee to show you just how much the various supply bills have been cut by our Committee on Appropriations below the amounts that the President has asked this Congress to appropriate.

It takes somebody on this floor to stand up here and fight against the amendments. It takes somebody on this floor to stand up here now and help our good friend in charge of this bill, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Ayres], in trying to effect some economy and keep out of this bill all increases. He has worked hard, his committee has worked hard, and we should back him up 100 per cent here in trying to keep his bill in line.

Here is a correct statement made by our very efficient clerk of the Committee on Appropriations, Mr. Sheild, showing that to this date we reduced the supply bills thus far reported $77,310,346.02 below the amounts President Hoever asked us to appropriate, and deducting the amounts the House added to the bills through amendments Members effered from the floor and passed, we have made a net reduction so far of $74,114,143.02 below the amounts President Hoover asked us to appropriate.

Mr. Chairman, it took months of hard work and holding tedious hearings for the past 10 weeks and fighting bureau chiefs and heads of departments across the table to make the above reductions. And you will note that we allowed for the Navy Department every cent that the Budget asked for, when, in my judgment, several big reductions in that bill should have been made. And I intend to try to reduce this bill when it is up for amendment.

But I want to get back to my subject, and that is "unfair newspaper reports."

Let me call your attention to something else. The Washington Times of yesterday carried an article, concerning which there is not one single scintilla of basis or foundation for it. There is not a member of the Committee on Appropriations who will say that he ever dreamed of such a thing. There is not a Member of this Congress who will say that he ever dreamed of such a thing. Here is what the Times said yesterday afternoon to try to hamstring me and to try to hamstring Clarence Cannon because he made a man's fight here for the people. The article starts out with big headlines, "Texan slated as D. of C. fund dictator." Then the following subhead:

Reports persist that Blanton is to fall heir to Cannon's rôle on appropriations.

I now quote from the article:

In the face of denials by both principals, rumors persisted about the halls of Congress to-day that Representative Thomas L. Blanton, Democrat, of Texas, would succeed Representative Clarence Cannon, Democrat, of Missouri, as chairman of the House Appropriations Subcommittee for the District.

The change according to the rumor, will be effective with the

The change, according to the rumor, will be effective with the next Congress and, if so, Blanton will wield the whip in writing the 1935 District supply bill.

BACKED BY BLANTON

Cannon wrote the 1934 District supply bill, just passed by the House, but Blanton backed him whole-heartedly, and in most cases during the bill's stay on the floor led the fight which resulted in the death of most of the amendments offered by friends of the District in an effort to bring the bill to an approximation of Budget Bureau figures.

There is not a word of truth in this whole statement. There was not any basis or foundation whatever for such a statement as this. Why does a paper want to broadcast a thing like this? It was an effort to injure me and an effort to injure that splendid, hard-working, honest Representative of the people, Clarence Cannon, of Missouri, than whom there is not a more valuable man in this Congress.

Do you think they are going to get away with a thing like this? Do you think in this day and time press representatives in the Press Gallery can send out reports of this kind to people all over the United States and get away with it? They can not do it.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLANTON. May I have two minutes more? The gentleman from Wisconsin is dying to ask me a question and I am dying to answer him.

Mr. AYRES. I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. SCHAFER. Does the gentleman intend to criticize the Washington Times for recognizing his sterling worth as a financial guardian of the People's Treasury by suggesting it is rumored he is going to be the financial dictator of the District, so that he can 100 per cent carry on the great work which he boasted about to-day?

Mr. BLANTON. No newspaper has the right to fabricate statements. Now, let me tell you some more about the press. They play John Schafer and myself up as if we just hated one another. We fight each other like hell across this aisle, but we are the best kind of friends personally.

When he runs for the Senate I do not want any wet Wisconsin people to vote against John Schafer next year, because I am his friend. I want the wets out there to support him, because he is a past master wet, and he did not deserve to be beaten by the wets this year. The wets ought to have taken care of him. He has not let a day pass in this Congress or in the last Congress or in any Congress since he has been here without making a speech for the wets, and yet they let him go by when election time came. They ought to take care of you, John, and it is ridiculous to play you and me up as enemies just because you are a wet and I am a dry and just because you get up here and make foolish proposals once in a while. [Laughter.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Parsons].

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I have not taken up much time of the House at this session, and but very few lines in the Congressional Record, but I have asked for this time to call attention to H. R. 14664, a bill introduced by me last week, designed to apply drastic laws and regulations in order to restore farm commodity price levels and incidentally rehabilitate labor and our financial structure which has all but crumbled during the depression.

This economic collapse is now beginning its fourth year. In the meantime hundreds of schemes are proposed for its treatment and cure. The catalogue of opiates, stimulants, and remedies includes vast loans of money for every known activity; currency expansion, with little regard for our basic monetary system; coinage of silver, harking back to the days of the Populist and Bryanism; revaluation of gold with its attendant grave consequences; various schemes for agricultural relief include the equalization fee, debenture, and bounties, down to the present allotment plan which was recently passed by the House; farm mortgage loans of various sizes and denominations are proposed; and proposals for amending the bankruptcy law which borders on the line of debt repudiation. Throughout three years of this constantly increasing catastrophe we seem to be getting further and further away from the real issue.

Without going into detail, let us briefly for a moment review the deep-seated causes of the depression. The germ was first sown in the summer of 1920, when the Federal Reserve Board issued its call for deflation. Between July and December 31 of that year, agricultural commodity prices to the farmer broke almost 50 per cent. A panic for business generally was averted at that time by an expansion of industry and manufacturing in an era of building and construction. This activity kept at a level war prices, for everything except farm products. It was indeed a golden era of prosperity for everybody except the 35,000,000 people on the farm. Gradually but surely their buying power diminished. Industry, temporarily crazed by the machine age through mass production and selfish ambitions for huge fortunes, substituted in the place of man labor, inventions of labor-displacing machines by the score, thus placing more than 2,000,000 men in idleness. Their buying power, together with that of agriculture, became almost nil. The expansion of corporate interests must need find a market for stocks and bonds, that gave rise to a securities market, the like of which had never been known in any nation in the world before, and in the wild scramble for gold which followed, these paper securities were inflated to two, three, and in many instances five times their intrinsic values. The bubble burst with its attendant evils and the gravity which pulled the prices down was in direct ratio to the inflated levels they had reached prior to the collapse. To sum up, the causes of depression are: First, deflation of farm prices; second, the era of invention and machines; third, plant expansion and stock securities issue; fourth, reaction and deflation of security values.

Now, what has been done since October, 1929? The first measure proposed was the reduction in income taxes passed in December of that year, which made the reduction retroactive to apply to the year of greatest speculation and profits in the history of the country, with an accompanying loss in revenue to the Federal Treasury. Second, a moderate expansion of construction and public building, advocated by the Federal Government, all of which was a drain upon the gradually diminishing revenues of the Federal Treasury. Third, the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act, which brought about retaliatory tariffs and destroyed our foreign trade. Fourth, declaration of the moratorium on foreign debts, which closed the door of the Treasury to more than $250,000,000 revenue annually. Fifth, passage of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, with the power to prop up the credit of the railroads, insurance companies, and banks, which entailed further drains upon our diminishing revenues. Sixth, extension of $125,000,000 loan to Federal land banks, four-fifths of which was to stimulate the price of their bonds and keep solvent these institutions. Seventh, expansion of the currency through the Borah amendment to the home-loan bank bill, which only accumulated currency in the vaults of the banks. Eighth, to ease the credit of the banks, through the Glass-Steagall bill, which permitted open-market operations in the purchase of Government bonds by the Federal reserve, with no result of opening up credit extensions to the public generally. Ninth, passage of the Goldsborough bill to raise the commodity price level, but without machinery and teeth in the law to bring results. Tenth, passage of amendment to bankruptcy laws, although well intentioned, that must inevitably destroy, not only the creditor class, but the debtor class as well by wiping out credit extensions in the future. Eleventh, consideration and passage of the allotment plan for agriculture, which I supported as the only measure seriously proposed, but which can accomplish no beneficial results for any farm commodity, except those of which we produce a surplus; that is, wheat and cotton. I am willing to try it, but it covers such a small portion of the total wealth produced by agriculture that we can not hope for flattering

In all of these proposed measures, some of which have become law, we have ignored the burning question at issue, and have sought through some miraculous way, unknown to the ingenuity of man, to someway, somehow, bring about a reaction and upturn in commodity prices. The purpose of the Farm Board was to aid and assist our basic industry. Great claims were made in advance for its immediate restoration of agriculture. In the light of subsequent events, the only purpose it accomplished was to hold out an incentive for greater production, with successive accumulation of stocks of cotton and wheat, that drove the price to the lowest level, almost, in history.

For the first 10 years following its fall in 1920, leaders were constantly speaking of restoring agriculture to a parity with industry. For the moment, at least temporarily, the talk to-day is to restore agriculture to its pre-war level. Let us not deceive ourselves that the pre-war price for agriculcultural commodities will carry us out of our present difficulties. Why do I say that? Taxes on farm lands since 1913 have increased 300 per cent. The best economy in the world can not reduce the tax burden more than one-third without destroying established functions of government, whether it be Federal, State, county, or city. In the same period governmental debts, corporate and individual, have increased on an average of more than 1,000 per cent and in the way of our national debt more than 2,000 per cent. The cost of the standard of living in the same period has increased at least 400 per cent. Does anyone for a moment believe that 1913-14 prices for agriculture will improve and permanently relieve the present situation? It will help, of course, but it is impossible to expect such prices to pay the increased taxes, interest, and debt in this country or in any other country that was engaged in the World War.

The World War cost approximately $260,000,000,000 in money and treasure, the largest portion of which was financed by bonds, and of which at least $150,000,000,000 remain unpaid. Interest alone on these loans approximate $5,000,000,000 annually, which is far more than the total wealth of agricultural production in the United States annually. The total indebtedness of the world, including national, internal, corporate, and individual debts, approximate $500,000,000,000. To amortize the repayment of these debts over a period of 33 years at a rate of 5 per cent interest gives the enormous total of one thousand billion dollars, or about an equal amount of the value of all property, both tangible and intangible, in the world in 1929. It is not my purpose to discuss the debt situation. I only mention these figures to show how futile it is, to think for a moment, that pre-war prices for farm commodities can pay this debt.

The following table shows the price level of all classes of commodities for the years 1931-32, compared with the year 1913, based on the 1926 index price level, and indicates clearly not only the poverty of agriculture but the futility of 1913 prices to meet the demands of increased buying power to-day.

In the year 1931 farm products showed a price level of 64.8 compared with an average of all other commodities of 76.9, or 12.1 below the general commodity price level. In 1932 the farm products price level stood at 48.2 compared with the average of all other commodities of 69.3, or 43.77 per cent below other commodities in purchasing power. Therefore the purchasing power of the agricultural dollar is only 56.23 cents.

commodities.

To give a better idea of the present plight of agriculture, let us see what the record shows with reference to price of basic products compared with the price of the processed, manufactured, or finished product as of the month of November, 1932. Bear in mind that all prices are based on the 1926 index.

Index numbers of wholesale prices of farm products compared with index wholesale prices of processed or manufactured commodities for November, 1932

Quotation of a few items will suffice. Wheat shows an index price of 29, while bread for a like period is 87; cotton is 35.5, while cotton goods are 56.6; hides are 35.6, while boots and shoes are 84.2; all grains average 34.3, while all farm machinery is 94.2; all meats average 34.4, while motor vehicles average 92.7 for the same period. A sad story, indeed, is told by these facts. The world is fed, clothed, housed, and transported at the expense of the farmer or consumer, or both. Some say that the consumers' price must come down to the farm products' price; others say these prices should strike a happy medium. I claim that any price level substantially below the 1926 price index can not suffice for a permanent recovery for agriculture.

The goal I purpose to reach in H. R. 14664 is the 1926 price level, which is gaged in the following table, and shows the price per unit of major farm products compared with the present ruinous prices based on the market quotations of February 6, 1933.

Thus it will be seen the standard of price to be attained is three-fold over the present price and in the case of a few products an increase of 400 per cent. Unlike other farmaid measures it attacks the root of economic distress—"overproduction"—whereas other measures designed to aid agriculture only resulted in accumulated surpluses to hang over the market as a constant threat and beat down prices.

So far to date we have pursued only one course in this economic disaster, and that is the route of bankruptcy, receivership, and liquidation. It is true we have tried to prop up, temporarily, the credit of railroads, insurance companies, and banks, and this action was warranted and justified. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has served a useful purpose, but unless price levels are reestablished no corporation or concern whatsoever will be able to make returns on its loans. Already many banks which sought and received temporary aid, have, in the last few months, closed their doors. Reconstruction Finance Corporation loans stand as priority claims against the banks, and leave little or no hope for depositors to receive anything after liquidation. The recent failure of the largest bank at Knoxville, in eastern Tennessee, is an example of the vicious system of undertaking to break the depression through further extension of credit. Are we so blind to conditions to believe that credit poured out by the millions on banks and corporate institutions will retrieve our losses and reverse the wheels of economic machinery and check falling prices? No economist believes such doctrine for a moment. No amount of credit, however great, or however widespread, can scotch falling prices so long as agriculture overproduces and consumers underconsume.

Much of the time of the last session of Congress, and no little talk in the present session, has been taken up with balancing the Federal Budget. There is a thought prevalent among big business men to-day that the Federal Budget must be balanced. That is, that sufficient revenues be raised to meet the expenses of government. I too, believe in that philosophy, were it possible to muster the revenues without further destroying business activity at this time. But I declare to you that before the Federal, State, or county budgets can be balanced with any degree of permanency, that the budgets of the more than six million farmers of this country must first be balanced. From whom flows the revenues to balance our Government budgets? Those revenues depend wholly and entirely upon the surplus budgets of the farmer, the laborers, and the business and corporate institutions of this country. You must first balance the individual's budget by assuring to him an earning power that will enable him to meet the requirements of taxation. I submit to the United States Chamber of Commerce, whose committee has spent so much time in propagandizing the balancing of the Federal Budget, that had they spent as much time devising ways and means to balance the individual's budget, there would be no cause to worry about balancing the Government's Budget.

I desire to call your attention to what the national agricultural commodities act proposes to do. It declares what ought to be declared—a great national emergency existing as threatening to our national existence and domestic tranquillity as a state of war, and seeks to do directly what we have been trying to do indirectly, limit production and raise agricultural commodity price levels. For a period of two years, or until such time as the 1926 price level is reached, the President of the United States is authorized to act through a board of five members appointed for the express purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act. First, to limit acreage and production by the assignment of fixed quotas of acreage and facilities of production, not to exceed 20 per cent in any one year, to be applied and exacted in the discretion of the board and the President. The President also has power to assign quotas that may be marketed in any one period so as to make the marketing conditions orderly and as natural as the law of supply and demand. The board may, at its discretion, fix and publish successive minimum prices, at which the following products may be sold by the producer: Corn, oats, wheat, rice, peanuts, tobacco, sugar, cotton, wool, cattle, hogs, sheep, fish, poultry, and dairy products and such other agricultural products as the President may deem it necessary to bring within the scope of the act in order to effectively carry out its purposes. The check-up is accomplished through requiring reports under oath from each farmer who produces more than a given amount of any commodity, and through the licensing of dealers in such commodities in interstate commerce. It repeals the Federal Farm Board act, except that provision supplying loans to cooperatives, and transfers the powers to the emergency board. It provides for tariff adjustments so as to protect the American market from importations of foreign goods at a less price than the established minimum price, and protects manufactured goods as well as agricultural products. It provides an appropriation of a sum not to exceed $100,000,000, of which $10,000,000 may be used by the board for fostering and developing public patriotic cooperation by means of advertising in newspapers, magazines, periodicals, and radio broadcasting. It also provides for further unemployment relief by authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to extend loans to States, counties, and municipalities in a sum not to exceed $500,000,000. It places teeth in the law to enforce the provisions of limitation of production and against seditious propaganda to defeat the purposes of the act.

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARSONS. I yield.

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. Does your bill provide for loans to farmers while their products are being held for the

Mr. PARSONS. Not at all. It proposes to raise the price so that he will have increased revenue and consequently will not need to borrow.

Mr. GARBER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARSONS. I yield. Mr. GARBER. I am much interested in the gentleman's suggestion and the importance of his pending bill, but I would like to know if in case such delegation of power was given to a board to curtail production it would be sustained by the courts as constitutional?

Mr. PARSONS. Does the gentleman believe that conditions to-day are as serious as conditions during the war?

Mr. GARBER. Economically, I think they are.

Mr. PARSONS. And the gentleman believes that general unrest and disturbance incident to our economic life is as dangerous to our institutions and the safety of our Republic as in a state of war?

Mr. GARBER. Probably so.

Mr. PARSONS. Then we are justified in declaring such

Mr. GARBER. Except in war physical conditions of the country may result in an emergency, but it will not warrant the radical violation of the Constitution.

Mr. PARSONS. The gentleman is correct—in fact, the Constitution does not give any right, even in time of war, except in relation to suspension of habeas corpus and the quartering of soldiers.

Mr. GARBER. Suppose you enact your bill delegating this power, and the farmer, who has 10,000 acres of wheat, says he does not want to curtail, that this is his property and his private right. Does the gentleman think we would have any constitutional right to invade that man's right?

Mr. PARSONS. I will answer that by saying that this bill, placed into operation by proper, patriotic cooperation, will create a psychology in scarcity of agricultural products, which will raise the price at once, and, in my judgment, will attain results. However, I will get to the constitutional phases of the bill in a moment.

DOES NOT INTERFERE WITH BUSINESS

The bill does not interfere with the normal current of business transactions. It does not interfere with manufacturing, processing, distribution, or sale of either agricultural commodities or other products except by giving protection to the American market.

It does not interfere with normal agricultural activity except to restrict production so as to make the law of supply conform to the demands of consumption. It does not pay a bounty or subsidy to any class or group. It does not provide for any tax or cost to the Federal Government except for its administration. It does not operate for a period longer than two years unless extended by Congress or unless the 1926 commodity price level is reached, in which event all operations under the board cease.

I know full well that the first argument to be made against the bill is its unconstitutionality, and I admit that under a strict construction the argument has import, but under every emergency in war Congress and the people have found some way of avoiding strict constitutional provisions. The purpose of the Constitution, as recited in its preamble, was to provide for the common defense, insure domestic tranquillity, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to the founders and their posterity. That was a prescription, as it were, to be filled for the restoration of orderly government and control of the thirteen original Colonies or States, then disrupted and frought with dangers at the close of the Revolutionary War, and from the sad experiences of government under the Articles of Confederation. Many compromises had to be made. After months of deliberation the various chemical elements of political sagacity and statutory law were assembled into what we know to-day as the Constitution of the United States. Fortunately for us, their posterity, it was drawn so loosely as the many conflicting opinions of the time made necessary that it should be. It was made strict enough to force orderly procedure out of chaos, and liberal enough to throw its mantle over every emergency we have had to face in the 150 years of its history. More than once in time of war some of its provisions have been suspended. No time to wail or quake then, when the destiny of the Republic was at stake. There is not one in this Chamber who does not believe that conditions are as serious to-day and as threatening to our domestic tranquillity and individual liberties as any day of any war in our history. If there is one so optimistic as to believe otherwise, I pause for him to rise from his seat to make it known. If there was as much unrest and domestic strife in time of war as there is in America to-day, this Congress would not hesitate for a moment to pass any and every drastic act to counteract such poison in the national system.

If in time of war any individual citizen who willfully permitted waste and extravagance or repressed labor and those under his control and permitted citizens to starve and freeze by failing to provide the necessities of life, the law would take him into its clutches and deal with him accordingly. When the Nation is at war patriotic fervor is awakened and the mystic chords of memory bind and cement us into one common purpose of self-preservation. We are at war to-day, not with a foreign foe from without but at war with a domestic foe from within. We are at war with depression that is laying its palsied hand upon business and commerce. Strange, but it is true, that the very system of mass production created to care for our people is driving thousands to desperation, near starvation, and destitution. In times of war with a foreign enemy our people feel themselves justified in making personal and physical sacrifices for the common preservation of our country. We must be taught in this crucial hour to make the same financial, personal, and physical sacrifice that we have been wont to make in the past. If we can temporarily suspend the Constitution in time of armed conflict to promote the general welfare of our people, I submit that in times of unarmed conflict we are warranted and justified in adopting drastic law and regulations to obtain the same result.

I was about to say we were cowards-afraid to do it-but we are not cowards. We simply do not fully realize the serious condition we are in and the urgent necessity of restoring commodity price levels and with them former values to property. The buying power of the world, no matter what country or under what flag, depends on agriculture. Everything that was, everything we have, and everything we hope to create has and must come from the soil. The billions of wealth invested in lands and properties and things material were once a natural resource more or less hidden in the soil of mother earth. The farmers of this country and of every other country are "the hewers of wood and the drawers of water." From the toil of him who plows in the field and labors in the mine and the quarry comes the foundation of our national wealth to-day and in the future. The safety of any country, and especially of republics, lies in giving to him that labors a larger portion of the consumers' price for the raw material which he produces. I believe in the capitalistic system, but I frankly say that if the capitalistic system is to endure it must admit the premises of labor and assure to him a just wage for his toil.

Mr. Chairman, these are perilous times. The patient is critically ill with lingering sickness. We have tried one kind of opiate and stimulant after another without permanent improvement or recovery. We know the desired end we hope to attain. That is, higher prices for farm products. Why waste further times in unknown cures and panaceas? To continue the present policy means further bankruptcy and lower price levels. Bloodshed and revolution can and may follow in its wake with some form of dictatorship in the end. I plead for the alternative to revolution—higher price levels.

I realize that nothing can be done in the few remaining days of this session, but I submit this relief plan, for your consideration in the special session which will soon be called. President Hoover, in his message yesterday, said it is essential temporarily to reduce farm production so as to remove the back-breaking surpluses of agricultural products and thus raise agricultural income.

I agree with the President in this belated announcement. Limit production, wipe out the surpluses, create at least a psychological scarcity of food materials, and prices will rise overnight. A rising market exerts activity; activity begets employment and employment means wages and prosperity. Let us mobilize the energy of the Nation; every agency of Federal, State, county, and city governments; all the forces of finance, industry, and agriculture, and unite them into one common patriotic impulse of "destroying depression and winning prosperity." The press of the Nation is anxiously waiting to help carry out such a program. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Culkin].

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, every economist of note in America assents to the proposition that the return to normal times is dependent very largely upon reestablishing the buying power of the farmer. I am advised that this view is shared by Mr. William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor.

The allotment bill recently passed by the House had for its objective the raising of commodity prices and the restoration of the buying power of the farmer. In the House bill it was provided that the agricultural groups who were to be the beneficiaries of this legislation were to reduce their acreage of production by 20 per cent.

PROBLEM OF SURPLUS

The House recognized the effect of a ruinous surplus in each line of production covered by that bill. The Senate, as I understand, has stricken out this provision. In my judgment, the absence of that limitation on production will create an even greater surplus because of the increased prices obtained for the particular product. It is axiomatic to say that the farm problem to-day is a problem of surplus and the problem of surplus will be the determining factor in causing commodity prices to rise or fall.

THE RECLAMATION FOLLY

During my service here I have given some study to reclamation as a factor in creating surplus crops from which agriculture suffers. The matter was forcibly brought to my attention by the vegetable farmers in my locality who claimed that they were being destroyed by crops grown on Government reclaimed lands. For the purpose of curing this situation I introduced a bill, H. R. 13917, by which it is declared to be the policy of the United States that no public moneys shall be expended, either directly or indirectly, for irrigation or reclamation purposes, except for projects now in work by any department, officer, employee, or representative of the Government. I marked the bill for reference to the Agricultural Committee, but the parliamentarian, or whoever is in charge of reference of new legislation, sent it to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation. The gentlemen composing this committee are all ardent advocates of reclamation, and the bill, of course, is sleeping its last sleep in the files of the committee. I am not optimistic enough to believe that the committee will report this bill or any other bill that qualifies in any way this fatal procedure which is destroying the American farmer. To my mind, the greatest economic crime in the history of civilization has been the policy of reclamation blindly and stupidly followed by the Bureau of Reclamation during the past 30 years.

PUBLIC ENEMIES

In the city of Chicago, during the pending civic crisis, the vice commission charged with bringing the criminal element of that city to book designated certain underworld leaders as public enemy No. 1, public enemy No. 2, and so forth. I here and now indict and charge the Reclamation Bureau of the Department of the Interior as being public enemy No. 1 of these United States. This outfit has brought the farmers of the country to their knees and has well-nigh destroyed them. The unhappy condition in which the farmer, East and West, now finds himself is largely due to this reclamation folly which has been fostered and propagandized by public officers with public moneys.

Not one of these reclamation projects has been economically sound. All of them, whether public or private, have been subsidized either from the Public Treasury or by investors who have lost heavily. There are many of these projects, running into millions of dollars, which the Government has written off the books. The remaining and existing governmental projects show a period of repayment extending as high as 96 years with an annual payment per acre as low as 98 cents. It should be remembered that these are deferred payments not actually beginning until the project has been for many years under going conditions.

METHOD OF PAYMENT

To give you an illustration of the period of repayment I cite you a partial list of these projects with the period of repayment.

Project	State	Period of repayment
Boise Belle Fourche Strawberry Garland Kittitas Baker Vale Owyhee	Idaho South Dakota Utah Wyoming Washington Oregon do Oregon-Idaho	Years 46 41 32 40 96 85 67 75

From these figures it will be seen that the grandchildren of the present workers on these projects will still be paying for this land. No further evidence is needed of their absolute futility.

PRESENT ACREAGE SUFFICIENT

The House should take into consideration in deciding the continuation of this policy the fact that there are out under the suns in these United States, lands suitable for producing crops without irrigation and reclamation amounting to 973,000,000 acres. The acreage report of the Census Bureau of crops harvested in 1929 shows something less than 300,000,000 acres in use. This is less than one-third of the potential crop acreage of the United States. So that, during the period when $300,000,000 was poured into this mad reclamation scheme by the Government and more than $800,000,000 by private enterprise, there was available 600,000,000 acres of land suitable to cropping.

My friends from the reclamation States will say that the Government has no control over private enterprise that has entered this field. This is true from a legislative standpoint, but the fact is that the Bureau of Reclamation has had its finger in every one of these projects. It has fostered and encouraged them. In its report of 1929 they take under serious advisement the proposition of taking over certain private projects. Not one of these projects but has had the definite backing of Mr. Elwood Mead and his group of reclamationists. Not one of them but could have been stopped. Not one of them but would have died aborning if the Reclamation Service had declared them uneconomical or impractical. This group, whom I definitely charge with destroying the American farmer, East and West, has been the power on the throne and behind the throne in the promotion of these projects. No governmental group compares with them in power. No government official has dared to raise his voice against their wanton and ruthless procedure.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. For a brief question.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Does not the gentleman know that the amount of money which has been used for these reclamation projects has come out of the lands and the revenues produced from the very State in which the money has been spent, and not out of the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. CULKIN. That, I will state to the gentleman, is one of the conventional fictions and unsound claims made in connection with this matter. These receipts, the so-called revolving fund, come from the sale of public lands owned by the United States, not by these reclamation States. The reclamation States are no more entitled to that sum than is the city of New York—or the State of New York entitled to the customs receipts that are paid at the port of New York.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. CULKIN. Yes.

Mr. GOSS. Does the gentleman know how many million dollars of permanent, either specific or indefinite, appropriations are expended for this purpose and have been for the last hundred years, perhaps?

Mr. CULKIN. The gentleman means directly by the Government?

Mr. GOSS. As the result of permanent law, appropriations that do not come up for consideration of Congress each year in the annual supply bills—permanent appropriations?

Mr. CULKIN. The gentleman has reference to money that has been appropriated by Congress?

Mr. GOSS. Certainly. All these laws that have been passed, and where the appropriations are annual, out of the jurisdiction of the Congress, and never come back to it in the annual supply bills, appropriating for reclamation and irrigation matters.

Mr. CULKIN. Yes, that amounts to millions of dollars a year.

SURPLUS CREATED BY RECLAMATION

I desire to put into the RECORD at this point a table showing the amount of crops grown under irrigation in the United States in 1919.

I ask the membership of the House to examine this table at their leisure. The table shows that in the year 1919 the percentage relation of the value of irrigated crops to the total value of the same crops for the United States was 5.6 per cent. The percentage of cereals, including corn, oats, wheat, and barley, for that year was 11 per cent. The value of beans was 21 per cent; potatoes, 8 per cent; grapes, 38 per cent; peaches, 25 per cent; pears, 17.7 per cent; plums and prunes, 37 per cent; lemons, 87 per cent, and oranges, 53 per cent. It should be remembered in this connection that oranges have largely replaced apples which had an earlier place in agricultural production.

I place in the Record also a table showing the relative importance of crops grown under irrigation and the percentage of the value of the part of each crop grown on irrigated lands to the total value of that crop for the United States for the year 1929.

In that year the total value of all irrigated crops was | $899,942,549. The total value of all crops in that year was $8,077,000,000. In that year irrigation produced 11 per cent of the crops of the United States. Cereals in that year, including corn, oats, rye, and wheat, were 3 per cent of the value of that product. This was production enough to break the market. Vegetables were 13.8 per cent; orchard fruits 37 per cent; and grapes 66 per cent.

For the purpose of keeping the record clear, I am placing therein the actual crops grown on Federal reclamation

Relative importance of crops grown on Federal reclamation projects and the ratio of the value of the part of each crop grown on such lands to the total value of that crop for the United States,

This table shows the conventional percentage of 1.1 as the value of crops produced on reclaimed lands to the total value of the crops of the United States. But the committee should bear in mind in that connection that the Bureau of Reclamation has been the chief influence which brought about these other projects.

Another phase of this matter which is worthy of consideration, is the fact that not only has this mad policy brought ruin to the agricultural group in America but also to the unfortunates who, under the drive of departmental propaganda, located on these lands and farmed them. Not a single one of these projects, public or private, has been self-sustaining. They have been subsidized either by the Government or private investors who have, as a rule, lost a large percentage of the money invested in these irrigation schemes. The greatest sufferers, I repeat, were the men and women who went on these lands. They found no local market except for a small portion of their production and by reason of existing overproduction in these fields they found little market outside. Despite their heroic toil and labor they faced financial ruin from the beginning as did the investors who financed the copartnership or corporate groups. I repeat, not one of these projects was sound. It simply added to the surplus with little local market for the product of their labor.

DUMPING

Let me read from a clipping which appeared in the New York Times of June 20, 1930, and was found in my file when preparing these remarks. The article states in part:

In the 10 days ending June 19 the Pennsylvania Railroad dumped 49 cars of perishables from the South and Southwest States and California. The total included 31 cars of beans, 1 car of squash, 7 cars of cucumbers, 1 car of cabbage, 1 car of beets, and 8 cars of California lettuce.

Dumping has been continued through the years 1931-32. It is the direct result of the crime of reclamation. Normally these markets would not have been glutted by these products and the local vegetable grower to whom the market naturally belongs, would have received a fair price for his product. As it is the grower, east and west, is at the mercy of the nimble middleman. Both the eastern and western growers are, in fact, ruined and have been in a state of chronic bankruptcy since this overproduction under Government auspices or propagandized by Government officers began. This group in the Bureau of Reclamation are the most expert propagandists in the history of our Government. Nor do they hesitate to invade other fields if occasion requires. They even regulate the public morals.

On page 4 of the Report of the Commissioner of Reclamation for 1930 the distinguished commissioner states in regard to Boulder City:

When the reservoir is filled the water will come up the valley when the reservoir is filled the water will come up the valley almost to the town and the great lake will stretch away more than a hundred miles through a region of rare scenic beauty. The region is healthful and it is anticipated that a popular resort may grow up here when the reservoir has been developed. The town is located on public land, and the Government plans to retain ownership of the land and lease it to those who live on it or use it for commercial purposes. it or use it for commercial purposes. Leases will continue only during the period of good behavior on the part of the tenant. Every effort will be made to prevent the bootlegger or other law violator from interfering with the well-being of the workmen. Instead of a boisterous frontier town, it is planned to bring into being here a wholesome American community with simple homes, gardens with fruits and flowers, schools, and playgrounds.

All of this is to be done at the expense of the American farmer and is preliminary to a reclamation scheme which will put into production some 1,500,000 acres.

This reclamation outfit prints a magazine called The Reclamation Era. It comes to your desk and mine, printed on finely calendered paper and copiously illustrated by the alleged achievements of reclamation. May I suggest to the Economy Committee that here is a place where they might exercise a definite economy with no harm to anyone by discontinuing this useless and misleading publication.

COLUMBIA RIVER PROJECT

The latest scheme of these alleged empire builders is the Columbia Basin irrigation project. This project will bring into production 1,200,000 acres of land. The Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors estimate the cost of this development, including interest at 4 per cent, at $711,000,000. The engineers recommended a navigational project between Vancouver and the mouth of the Snake River at an estimated cost of $16,100,000. This report was made to the Rivers and Harbors Committee on March 30, 1932. The battle against the reclamation phase of it was led by Secretary Hyde of the Department of Agriculture who, in a letter to the engineers pertinently called attention to the overproduction from which the farmer was suffering. He stated:

As it is, American agriculture is cruelly out of balance. It will require a good many years to shift the balance, even if no acreage by homesteading or reclamation is added.

But Doctor Mead is hopeful. In a letter to Gen. Lytle Brown, Chief of Engineers, dated March 19, 1932, copy of which is embodied in the general report, Doctor Mead gives his unqualified endorsement of the Columbia River project which has been condemned by the National Grange, the Farm Bureau Federation and other agricultural bodies. In this letter to the Chief of Engineers he contemptuously brushes aside the views of these authoritative groups when he states:

To your views of conditions as they exist at this time, I should To your views of conditions as they exist at this time, I should like to add my belief that no development of the land and water resources of the arid region equals this in importance and in the beneficial results which would come. It will enable the largest single water supply of the arid region to be utilized to give cheap power to industries, and to make feasible the irrigation of the largest and finest body of unreclaimed land left in the arid region.

Mr. GARBER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. Yes. Mr. GARBER. Is it not evidence of the greatest maladministration to permit a man in the Interior Department to encourage reclamation and increase the acreage and production, in flat violation of the policy announced by the Secretary of Agriculture, and who has been constantly urging the adoption of that policy since his incumbency in office?

Mr. CULKIN. The gentleman speaks feelingly and correctly with reference to that situation.

TENNESSEE RIVER DEVELOPMENT

The development of the Tennessee River and its tributaries in North Carolina, Tennessee, Alabama, and Kentucky is another gigantic proposal that is now confronting the Nation. The Reclamation Bureau has taken this under its wing. This proposition covers navigation, flood control, power development, and irrigation. The estimated disbursement for the plan when completed is $1,200,000,000. This includes the construction of a 9-foot channel for navigation and various other power and land propositions. It is set forth in House Document No. 328, Seventy-first Congress, Second session. The reclamation involved in this plan is not considerable. The plan involves the reforestation of the inferior land and the recovery and cultivation of the marsh-lands which are highly productive.

It also involves the Muscle Shoals proposition. The distinguished President elect, for whose well-being, official and otherwise, I have only kind wishes, recently visited Muscle Shoals in company with Senator Norris and certain other Members of the House and Senate. So effectually did these gentlemen impress the distinguished President elect with their views and desires that on January 21, in the present year, he came out unqualifiedly and wholeheartedly for the development of the Tennessee River watershed. He characterized it to the newspaper men, according to the New York Times of that date, as probably the "widest experiment" ever undertaken by a Government. It includes reforestation of the hillsides of the watershed; flood control in that watershed; water-power development, including the utilization of Muscle Shoals; reclamation for farm use of the bottom lands of the river in which farming is now prevented by frequent floods; improvement of navigation; stimulation of decentralized industry in the region by a supply of cheap power; and elimination of unprofitable agricultural lands by reforestation.

I do not know how many of you have seen the details of this project. It will give you some idea of the stupendous character of it when you know it cost the Government $1,000,000 to make the survey and prepare the plans. I am wondering if the President elect ever saw them? I am also wondering where the money is coming from in these times of depression-$1,200,000,000 for the purpose set forth in the Tennessee project. I have a copy of the report in my office and will be glad to show it to the Members of the House who are interested. Nor does the distinguished President elect stop there. While the ship of state is passing through a storm, the fury of which is as yet unabated, his proposition of spending $1,200,000,000 is not comforting or reassuring to the country when the Budget is now unbalanced in the sum of nearly $2,000,000,000. The mere suggestion, coming from this powerful and influential source, is of itself almost sufficient to seriously affect the credit of the Government. After stating there is no doubt that bonds could be issued for the Tennessee undertaking, he continues:

If the project is successful, and I am confident it will be, I think the development will be the forerunner of similar projects in other parts of the country, such as the watersheds of the Ohio, Missouri, and Arkansas Rivers, and the Columbia River in the Northwest.

 Tennessee River and its tributaries
 $1,200,000,000

 Columbia River
 711,310,269

 Missouri River (estimated)
 300,000,000

 Arkansas River (estimated)
 300,000,000

Total_____ 2, 511, 310, 269

These figures more or less stagger the imagination. How the money is to be raised for these projects under existing circumstances it is difficult to tell. It is suggested that a bond issue be floated. It is obvious these bonds would be unsalable unless the Government guarantees them.

The program as suggested by the distinguished President elect will bring into production through irrigation and reclamation, as estimated, an acreage of 3,700,000. These ambitious schemes have revived the hopes of the Reclamation Bureau, which is now casting its eyes toward this new field.

It is the definite purpose of the reclamation group to put the country into the hydroelectric power business. They are seeking new worlds to conquer. Dame Rumor states that the zealous gentlemen in the Reclamation Bureau sold the idea of a national hydroelectric development to the President elect and Mr. Morgenthau, at present conservation commissioner of the State of New York, who is said to be slated for a high post in the new administration. I hold no brief for public utilities and I am definitely opposed to the Government in business. By this I do not mean that the Federal Government should surrender its natural resources to any group. These resources should be marketed on proper terms through the ordinary channels of transmission. The private investment in utilities in the United States runs into many billions. The destruction of these utilities would fall the heaviest upon the widows and orphans and the small investors, who hold most of the bonds of the companies. We find it difficult to legislate efficiently on matters which are within the present scope of the Constitution, but when the Federal Government goes into commercial business 531 Senators and Representatives become the actual board of directors of that business. Such procedure would be less efficient than the Russian experiment. It is contrary to American doctrine.

THE SHANNON REPORT

The Members of the House have recently received the advance copy of the report of the Shannon committee. This committee has made an investigation of the problem presented by the Federal Government when it comes into competition with private business. The committee states at page 19 of its preliminary report as follows:

The Government as it now exists was conceived and organized for political and social control and activity. It was not vested with any economic functions beyond those essential to the proper exercise of its own functions in coining money, collecting and disbursing revenue, emitting credit, operating post offices and carrying mails, and in developing and maintaining military establishments for the protection of the lives and property of its citizens.

The report goes on to state that the entry of the Government into business is, therefore, in general repugnant to our fundamental democratic institutions and aspirations.

The report continues:

Our people, if they so elect, might decide to own and operate their own utilities, or might declare any branch of industry or business to be affected with a public interest, and through proper legal measures might acquire and operate such economic institutions. Even such extreme action, however, under our Constitution, would have to be carried out without any confiscation or impairment of private property or property rights. * * *

The carefully considered and sound doctrine put forth by this report simply means that in the event of the Government entering the public utilities business in Tennessee or elsewhere would have as a preliminary and necessary step to reimburse the existing investment in that field. If it fails to do that it destroys not the great power magnate but the widow and orphan and the thrifty citizen who has invested his little all in the bonds of these utility companies.

My main purpose in getting this time to-day was to call the attention of the House to the situation of agriculture and how reclamation has contributed to its ruin. The reclamation phases of these projects that I have enumerated will bring into production approximately 3,700,000 acres of land. This insane policy can only be stopped by the House. I trust the membership will give this matter careful consideration and that they will "hold the line," to borrow an expression from the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton], against these mad reclamationists who would continue to use the public moneys to destroy the American farmer. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. And that is going to be the slogan of the fathers and mothers of America—"Hold the line."

Mr. CULKIN. I am with the gentleman on that.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. Yes.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. The gentleman has made such a study of statistics that I wonder if he can not properly include a statement of the source of the funds and the amount of money that have been received and expended by the Reclamation Bureau. It is in one little block in the report.

Mr. CULKIN. If the gentleman will let me have it I will be very glad to put it in. I wish to be fair about it.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Then I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to extend my remarks in the Record and to include that in my remarks if I can not get them to the gentleman to-night.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Did I understand the gentleman to say that there was danger by Government interference in connection with public utilities that it might prove ruinous to widows and orphans who have invested in publicutility securities?

Mr. CULKIN. Yes; unless there is reimbursement of them. The gentleman knows, and there is no use in getting away from the fact, that billions of dollars of utility security bonds and junior financing have been sold under the auspices of the various States to a lot of people in moderate circumstances, not only widows and orphans, but to the thrifty citizen of small means, who is trying to protect his future.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Was the Government of the United States in any way responsible for the robbing of widows and orphans by the Insull interests?

Mr. CULKIN. The Government of the United States was not, but the States where those manipulations were carried on are to blame. I say to the gentleman that the sooner we put that type of utility magnate in jail, the better it will be for all of us.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I agree with the gentleman that the jail is the place for them, and we should get that man back from Europe and put him in jail.

Mr. CULKIN. I agree with the gentleman, but we should not destroy the small investor by Government competition.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. But he is the man who destroyed the small investor.

Mr. CULKIN. Yes; he did destroy some of them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. Gibson].

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I wish to call the attention of the House to certain significant recommendations made by the National Transportation Committee in the report released for publication February 15, 1933. The outstanding recommendation of this committee is the one which, if carried out, would create regional consolidation, "looking eventually to a single national system."

This idea of substituting a single noncompetitive rail system for the present ideal—a limited number of competing systems—raises questions of such far-reaching import that an early evaluation of the idea is paramount.

The distinguished character of the personnel of the National Transportation Committee, the wide publicity given to its report, and the keen interest of every section of the country in the present plight of the railways demands careful scrutiny of this recommendation which would divide, as I understand it, the continental United States into several great regions, and within the confines of these regions there would be set up a single noncompetitive railway system. This would be a primary step to create a single national system with all railway competition eliminated.

THE NEW ENGLAND SITUATION

As a representative of one of the six New England States, I have given special study to this particular question, because my State is peculiarly dependent on adequate railway transportation, as is in fact all of New England. This peculiar dependence of New England on our railways arises from the fact that we are large consumers of raw materials, foodstuffs, and other necessaries of life produced in every section of the Nation, and at the same time we manufacture goods whose market is nation-wide. It has been well said that no other large and important industrial region in the world is so fully dependent on through transportation as is New England, for no other similar district is so little self-contained. England, Japan, and Belgium all produce far greater proportions of their food. All of them have coal, and all produce considerable amounts of the raw materials used in their industries. New England alone among the great industrial producers has to buy all her fuel, practically all her raw materials, and nearly all her food from outside, and in the main from her closest industrial com-

Keenly aware of our dependence on transportation by rail and water, I venture to assert that no section of this country has given greater thought or more intensive study to this question of transportation than have we in the six New England States.

Twice within the past 10 years an all-New England railway committee was appointed by the duly elected governors of the six New England States. Comprehensive studies were made on the very question involved in this major recommendation of the national transportation committee with respect to creating a single noncompeting regional system. In New England there have been two schools of thought. One school advocated an all-regional New England system—a single system with competition eliminated. The other school of thought has been in accord with the policy of Congress laid down in the national transportation act of 1920. The policy of that act was to divide the United States into several large territorial or regional areas and consolidate all railways in these territorial or regional areas into a few competing systems.

NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION COMMITTEE OVERLOOKS CONGRESSIONAL INVESTIGATION OF 1919

The consolidation of the railways of the country into a limited number of systems was settled as a national policy by the transportation act of 1920, and the wisdom of that policy has never since been questioned, either within Congress or among students of the question outside of this body. I would remind you, however, that prior to the passage of the transportation act the Congress of the United States made one of the most intensive studies of this question of railway consolidation which has ever been made. It would be a serious mistake to underestimate the thoroughgoing consideration given by the late Senator Cummins and his associates to these very questions.

I consider that it is extremely important to go back to the year 1919 and ascertain the views of Senator Cummins and others, which views were later written into the transportation act of 1920 as a basic plan for railway consolidation. It was a plan that might have been compared to the work of an architect in drawing plans for a monumental building. By the adoption of Congress it became a national policy of the most far-reaching import.

A review of the record discloses that prior to the passage of the transportation act it was then proposed that the United States be divided into regions, and single noncompeting systems be created within the confines of those regions. After hearing leading experts the Senate committee made a report in which it laid down as fundamental the preservation of railway competition. On this subject the committee said:

REPORT OF SENATE COMMITTEE

The superior efficiency of several systems need not be enumerated at length, but there is one consideration to which attention should be called. Competition, not in rates or charges but in service, will do more to strengthen and make public regulation successful than any other element which can be introduced into the business of transportation. Honorable rivalry among men is the most powerful stimulus known to human effort. For this reason, largely, the committee, recognizing the necessity for consolidation, determined in favor of the gradual unification of the railways into not less than 20 nor more than 35 systems; not regional or zone systems but systems that will preserve substantially existing channels of commerce and full competition in service.

Senator Cummins, speaking of the report of this committee of which he was chairman, having demonstrated that the only solution of the railway problem was through consolidation of the railways into a limited number of systems, then discussed the plan of consolidation into one system, as now proposed by the national transportation committee; but went on record in favor of the plan of the Senate committee for consolidation into several systems because this would promote competition in service. Senator Cummins on this point said—

Rivalry and competition in service begin with a desire to please people who ride on trains or ship property; mean attention, courtesy, concern for the public mind, prompt furnishing of cars, speedy movements of cars, effort made in every quarter to do the work at hand in a most efficient manner.

Numerous railway presidents and experts on railroad transportation appeared before the Senate committee in 1919, and almost without exception they advocated that while railway consolidation was necessary and imperative there should be retained competition between a few great consolidated systems. The following remarks of Mr. Howard Elliot, president of the Northern Pacific Railway Co., are typical of the expert opinion presented to the Senate committee in 1919 on this subject:

Regulated competition, especially as to service, should be continued between the great systems. Without reasonable competition, development, and the introduction of the most improved and advanced methods for giving service to the public will be checked. Without attempting to say at this time how many great systems will serve the country best, a few examples may be given.

To those who desire to refer more at length to the reasons which led the Congress of the United States to reject, as a national policy, the creation of noncompeting regional systems and to adopt as a national policy the consolidation of railways into a limited number of systems competing within the confines of certain large territorial districts, I refer to the preliminary report of study of railroad consolidations and unifications submitted to Committee on Interstate Commerce by William C. Green, special counsel, Part I (S. Res. 290, 71st Cong.). In this report two great principles emerge. First, consolidation of our railways into a limited number of systems is essential. Second, these consolidations should be brought about so as to create an even-handed, well-balanced competition between a few great systems.

SECTIONALISM TO BE AVOIDED

There is, to my mind, a further and most conclusive reason why we should adhere to the present national policy as laid down in the transportation act of 1920. Nothing would be more detrimental to the future development of the United States than to create in this country economic regions which regarded themselves as set apart, as it were, from other economic regions. Suppose, for example, we created a New England economic region: a northeastern economic region west of the Hudson, composed of the Middle Atlantic States; a southeastern economic region, composed of the Southern States bordering the Atlantic seaboard; a southeastern economic region, composed of States surrounding the Gulf of Mexico; a middle west region; a southern Pacific coast region; a northern Pacific coast region. Imagine establishing a single railway system in each of these regions. It is a wellknown fact that the railway systems have been, and they will continue to be, the chief agency in developing the national wealth and resources of the country. Would not regional railway systems, such as proposed by the national transportation committee, inevitably result in creating in the United States separate economic countries, as it were, reestablishing here the geographic and economic rivalries which have been the bane and the downfall of western Europe? The goal, on the other hand, should be to create a few great competing territorial railway systems, national and continental in their scope, with sufficient competition between these large systems to keep alive the enterprise and progress which is the essential character of competition throughout all industry.

I assert with all confidence that the 4-system plan approved July 21, 1932, by the Interstate Commerce Commission for eastern territory under the policy of the transportation act, is a wiser and a more constructive plan than this idea of regional noncompeting systems.

The eastern territory that is involved in the 4-party plan approved last July by the Interstate Commerce Commission includes the portion of the country east of the Mississippi and north of the Potomac and Ohio Rivers. In it live nearly half of the people of this country. It produces about two-thirds of our industrial goods and seven-eighths of our coal.

The railroads of that eastern territory include about one-fourth of the mileage of the entire country. Under the plan approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission, four great competing systems—the New York Central, the Pennsylvania, the Baltimore & Ohio, the Chesapeake & Ohio-Nickel Plate—are so established that each of these giant systems will reach and serve all, or nearly all, the principal producing and consuming centers in this eastern territory. These systems will also serve the principal North Atlantic ports.

NEW ENGLAND'S OPPORTUNITY

I am particularly interested in this 4-system plan for eastern territory because New England is an integral part of that territory. I look back to that period of 1921-1923 when the two leading New England railways—the New York, New Haven & Hartford and the Boston & Maine-were actually threatened with bankruptcy and it appeared that a complete breakdown in our railway transportation was imminent. It was then that many of us in New England came to the realization that comparatively small sectional railways, such as the New England roads, were too weak to stand alone; for such sectional roads rest upon too narrow a transportation base to exist and prosper as independent systems. If all of the railways within New England were consolidated into a single noncompeting system, it is exceedingly doubtful if such a New England system would in itself be strong enough to stand upon its own feet and make that progress in the development of transportation which would be essential to preserve this most important industrial and commercial section, located in the northeastern part of the United States.

I am confident the plan approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission for four great competing systems in eastern territory is a constructive movement in the right direction. To substitute for that plan regional noncompeting railways in eastern territory, as suggested in the report of the national transportation committee, would be not a step forward but a step backwards.

This subject is of the utmost importance to my own State of Vermont and to the other five New England States because New England is a part of eastern territory and eventually the solution of the New England railway problem should, and in my opinion must be, the extension of the four party system into New England. This would place the six New England States on the same transportation footing as the great industrial States west of the Hudson. We must bear in mind that the most direct industrial competition that New England has to meet is that furnished by the States in the same eastern territory. It is essential, therefore, that New England railways be shortly integrated and made a part of the great systems now set up to serve the balance of eastern territory. What we need in New England is to get away from railways of a purely sectional character. What we need to avoid in New England is transportation isolation. The goal in New England and the goal of every other part of the United States should be to bind closer together each of the great industrial sections. In the past, this has been the important function of the great railway net of this country. In making a national transportation plan, this should be the guiding principle, a plan which would make our United States more closely united, more intimately bound together, utilizing all agencies of transport—our railways, our highways, the newly developing airway lines, and our great natural inland waterways. Any plan which would tend to divide the United States into isolated transportation regions, creating economic rivalry and conflicting interests should, by all means, be frowned upon.

In saying this I realize that the national transportation committee expressed the hope that sometime there might be created a single national railway system. Whatever may be said of a single national system as an ideal, it has been the general opinion in the past that such a single national system could only be brought about under Government ownership and operation. The price of Government ownership and operation is, in my opinion, too much to pay even for a single national railway system, however much might be said for such a single system. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 12 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM].

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Chairman, on April 28 last the Geneva correspondent of the New York Times, Clarence K. Streit, sent to that newspaper a dispatch from Geneva in which appeared the following paragraph:

It is noteworthy that A. Sweetser, the American official in the League Secretariat, on whom Mr. Stimson depends for information about these secret meetings, was again excluded to-day. Efforts to obtain an explanation of this proved fruitless, but informed circles tend to link it to Sir John Simon, who has several times said or implied he was authorized or able to give the commission the views of the United States Government.

On May 3 a letter was addressed to the Department of State asking what authority Sir John Simon or any other British agent had to represent the United States.

On May 10 the Acting Secretary of State replied as fol-

Referring to your letter of May 3, 1932, quoting a dispatch from Clarence K. Streit at Geneva which appeared in the New York Times of April 29, 1932, to the effect that Mr. Arthur Sweetser had been excluded from secret meetings of the committee of nineteen of the League of Nations and that Sir John Simon had said or implied that he was authorized or able to give the committee the views of the American Government, I have pleasure in replying to the two questions listed in your letter as follows:

teen of the League of Nations and that Sir John Simon had said or implied that he was authorized or able to give the committee the views of the American Government, I have pleasure in replying to the two questions listed in your letter as follows:

According to the department's information, Mr. Sweetser is an American citizen employed by the League of Nations. His service with the league is of course in his capacity as a private individual and he has no official connection with this Government. Consequently, the question of his exclusion from meetings of the committee of nineteen of the league would appear to be a matter for determination by the league. This department has no information with regard to his reported exclusion from the meetings mentioned.

mentioned.

Neither Sir John Simon nor any other official of the British Government is authorized to represent the American Government. As you know, the American Government has, since the beginning of the present trouble between China and Japan, cooperated with other governments and agencies in attempting to bring about by pacific means a solution of the difficulties existing between the two disputants. At the same time, this Government has, of course, reserved its full independence of judgment with regard to any action by it. In pursuing this cooperative course, there have naturally resulted conversations and discussions between representatives of this Government and of various foreign governments, including Sir John Simon, and the representatives of foreign governments have therefore, at times, been in position to know and to express to others the attitude of this Government on certain questions. Representatives of this Government have also, from time to time, received information from officials of the league and of the governments members thereof.

In an Associated Press dispatch dated at London, July 26, 1932, it was reported that Sir John Simon, British foreign secretary, had made a speech in which he had stated:

After being in Lausanne and Geneva and very closely in touch with responsible representatives in the United States, I believe that if wisdom prevails on both sides of the Atlantic we might find growing into fruition a firmly rooted plant of Anglo-American cooperation upon which, as much as anything in the world, depends the peaceful progress of mankind.

At the time of which Sir John Simon speaks, Secretary of State Stimson was in Lausanne, if not in Geneva.

Much secret diplomacy has characterized the present administration, not only in relation to what it has done and how far it has committed the country in European political affairs, but also in relation to what has been arranged or promised to Great Britain under the euphemistic cloak of "Anglo-American cooperation."

Has a secret political commitment been made by this administration, offensive or defensive in character, or of any other character, with Great Britain?

Some representations out of the ordinary must have been made to Sir John Simon for him to have used the language he did.

Has Great Britain been promised that she shall have further control of the seas and that the American Navy and American naval defense shall be further curtailed?

That would have been in accordance with the policy of the present administration during the last four years. It would have been in accordance with the London treaty negotiated by the present administration. This treaty made the size of the American Navy dependent upon the exigency of the maintenance by Great Britain of the so-called two-power standard in the Mediterraneon, thereby supporting British navalism, it would have been in accordance with the subsequent policy of the present administration of not building any naval vessels and of preventing any attempt by the United States Congress even to approximate the agreed treaty ratio.

Has Great Britain been promised that the United States will continue to avoid the issue of the "freedom of the seas"?

This issue of the "freedom of the seas," a vital one as American history shows, was eliminated by the present administration on the occasion of the last visit to Washington of Premier MacDonald, when an accord might have been reached. This issue involved us in the World War and was one of President Wilson's "fourteen points." It was almost immediately eliminated upon the demand of Great Britain at the conference which preceded the adoption of the Versailles treaty.

Has Great Britain been promised that the United States shall enter the Permanent Court of International Justice of the League of Nations, and support British policies there?

The present administration dictated the plank in the Republican platform of 1932, urging entry of the United States in this political court, the political subsidiary of the League of Nations.

Has Great Britain been advised that having entered the Permanent Court of International Justice of the League of Nations, the United States will then naturally, by force of circumstances and by force of logic, and with the help of the present administration, enter the League of Nations and support British policies there?

Has Great Britain been promised that arrangements will be made to insure that the United States will not be neutral in the next war?

Neutrality in the next war seems to have been made impossible by the present administration by the proposal of an affirmative commitment under the Kellogg-Briand pact.

The present administration in the last election was crushingly defeated. This was not due alone to the economic depression. It was due, in part, to the opinion of the American people that this administration had been an alien administration, devoted to the interest of Europe and not to the interest of America; that it had abandoned American traditions and had impaired American security and safety. Its defeat was due, in part, to its abandonment of the great American traditional policy of no interference or participation in the political affairs of Europe, and its utter defiance of the repeatedly expressed will of the American people to avoid foreign political entanglements, to remain independent and neutral in the next war, and to be at all times a friend of all nations, a partner of none. It was defeated because of its demonstrated constant purpose to denationalize the United States.

Even a casual observer can arrive at no other conclusion in reference to the foreign policy of this administration than that in its policy of vain and emotional unrealities it has been willing to commit American neutrality and American safety to foreign political events over which the United States has no control.

No American traveling in Europe to-day can be unaware that not only has the United States lost much of its prestige abroad, but also that in many quarters the United States is regarded with contempt or ridicule for its emotional and maladroit interference in the political affairs of Europe, of which its officials during the past four years have had little or no understanding.

It is unthinkable that the Republican Party can ever again obtain control of the Government under such leadership as it has had during the past four years under Mr. Hoover, Mr. Stimson, and Mr. Mills.

The Republican Party must purge itself of their influence and their philosophy, which have never been sympathetic to American traditions, American public interests, and American independence.

The Republican Party can never achieve success under a leadership so incompetent and so lacking in foresight that on the eve of the greatest economic disaster the United States has ever known it talked of the abolition of poverty and inaugurated a policy of the most extravagant public expenditures ever attempted; a leadership which when the signs of the present economic catastrophe were plain, had no conception of its character, and for many months postponed vital decisions again and again until circumstances forced action: a leadership which leaves public office talking of peace and international good will when its policies have brought the United States to the brink of war in the east.

The administration to be inducted into office on March 4 will suffer the same character of defeat as did the present administration if it, too, fails to adhere to the sound American policy of not interfering or participating in the political affairs of Europe and of maintaining at all times American neutrality; if it, too, fails to adopt and to adhere to an American policy, not a European policy. [Applause.] Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Johnson] such time as he may desire.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include a paragraph from the New York Times on wooden

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas.

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The darkness of economic distress continues unabated. Efforts thus far apparently have availed nothing. Why? Because some of the major remedies applied have, instead of improving, aggravated the disease from which the Nation is suffering.

Inflation of credit, too much debt, State, National, municipal, and individual, have caused our downfall, and now we are trying to rise by a still further expansion of credit. You can not sober a drunken man by giving him more liquor; you can not liquidate indebtedness by creating more debt.

For 10 years we have had an orgy of speculation, creating fictitious values based upon worthless stocks and bonds, inspired and promoted by Wall Street bankers and brokers, and now when pay day has arrived and obligations can not be discharged, these so-called better minds who had steered us into this economic abyss, advised that what was needed was more credit and that we could borrow ourselves out of debt: that by making credit cheap enough, the troubles of the debtors would be remedied, and they launched the Reconstruction Finance Corporation (for which I did not vote) by which there has already been loaned on January 31, the huge sum of $1,788,666,009. Contrary to their predictions, low money rates cured none of our economic maladies. The major portion of the money loaned went to the larger banks, railroads, insurance companies, and these corporations used the sums so borrowed to pay their debts to other corporations, and very little of it found its way into the channels of commerce, or into the pockets of the laborer, the artisan, the farmer, the merchant, or the toiling masses who produce our wealth. If a substantial portion of this could have gone to individuals who would have spent it for necessities, it would in a measure have been helpful, but except for the sum of $65,000,000 that was especially allocated by Congress for crop-production loans, and $54,000,000 that has been allocated to agricultural-credit corporations, the rest has gone into the reservoirs of corporations and has become frozen assets, at least frozen so far as the public is concerned since it has not gone into circulation.

Individuals can not now borrow from the banks, unless they have Government bonds as security. As a recent issue of a financial publication puts it, "The banking business is at present conspicuously functioning for and by the Government, with the result that no bank can afford to pay interest on public deposits." Deposits of county and municipal funds which previously brought from 2 to 4 per cent on daily balances now go begging and a county or municipality is fortunate if it can secure a fraction of 1 per cent as interest thereon.

The banks in the agricultural regions can not make loans because the farmers can not secure for the commodities that they produce a price equal to the cost of production. A farmer's crops, his horses, mules, and farm implements, constitute his only security, and these have become practically worthless. The people have no money with which to buy, and the buying power of the Nation is paralyzed.

The debts in the United States, public and private, are now equal to the national wealth, based upon present values. It is evident that we can not cure this malady by increasing those debts. We must either deflate the debts or inflate the money with which the debts are to be paid. The farm mortgages alone in this country aggregate $9,500,000,000, upon which the farmers are required to pay an annual interest charge of $600,000,000 per annum.

It is not an inflation of credit but an inflation of our currency that is needed. Debts can not be canceled or reduced by legislative action, as that would impair the obligation of contract and also destroy the confidence upon which our financial structure is based.

Economists tell us that inflation of money means the cheapening of the dollar, and so it is, but that means a reduction of the debts in the same proportion. What is needed is to make it easier to pay debts. Because of the increase in the value of the American dollar it is now impossible for the debtor to pay the creditor, for if, in 1927, he contracted to pay $10,000, due to the inflated value of the gold dollar measured in the value of other commodities, his debt has increased to $16,500. Measured in the present value of agricultural commodities, the increase in the value of the American dollar is far greater. To-day it requires five bales of cotton to pay a debt of $100 where two bales or less would have done it before.

Those opposing expansion of the currency contend that the volume of money is now sufficiently large. Conceding that to be true, no one can deny that the value of money is now so dear and out of all proportion with the value of other commodities that the people have not the wherewithal to possess it.

The masses of the American people have no money at this time. There is as much real wealth in America to-day as there ever was, but real wealth does not consist of stocks and bonds, or even of money. It does not come out of banks or from brokerage houses, but it does come from human labor, physical and mental. Money in its true sphere is not wealth; it is simply a medium by which to measure values, but we have exalted the value of our money until it is beyond the reach of all save the few. Prior to 1929 an economist claimed that the American dollar was a dishonest dollar because its purchasing power was only slightly above 60 cents in the United States, although it was supposed to be worth a hundred cents. To-day that same gold dollar has a purchasing power equivalent to 160 cents. If some commodities had advanced and some declined, then it might be contended that the value of money had remained stable, but when every other commodity declines, then it is evident that the value of our money has been enhanced.

The real hope that recovery will be had is based upon the impregnable ground that America has as much real wealth as it ever had. But money, the medium by which commodities are bought and sold, is not to be had. Why? Because the value of our money has increased out of all proportion to the value of goods and services. Incomes have shrunk, prices of all commodities, agricultural and otherwise, have drastically declined, and all of the time money, not the real wealth of the Nation but the mere medium of exchange, has gone higher and higher, until the masses of the American people do not possess it and can not secure it.

The New York Times in a recent issue contains the startling news that 500,000 citizens of the United States, having no money of the coin of the realm, are using so-called wooden money. They are buying goods and services with an improvised money which has no legal backing, no authorization from the Government, but which serves in this emergency as a medium of exchange.

Quoting from the article, which is written by Stuart Chase, one of the staff writers of the Times, we read:

Falling abrupt recovery, of which no signs are now visible, it is probable that before the year is out millions will be doing business without legal tender. Scores of communities in 29 States are using this new and, incidentally, very old method for increasing purchasing power. In Seattle, where the movement seems to have started more than a year ago, 50,000 members, organized into 20 locals, have not only markedly improved their economic position, but have formed a political party strong enough to influence the city government.

Another organization, the Natural Development Association of Salt Lake City, has 30,000 members and branches in four States. State-wide clearing houses are forming, and in New York a national organization is being developed. Altogether there are 144 organizations throughout the country.

The States where this movement is under way in some form are Arizona, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Montana, Nebraska, New Jersey, New York, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Washington, Wisconsin, and Wyoming.

The associations of individuals thus organized mutually agree to exchange services for goods and goods for services, and so forth, and in payment thereof use a form of printed scrip, in pads, like petty cash tickets, in denominations of 5 cents, 10 cents, up to $10, which scrip is called "wooden money." The members of the group pay one another for goods and services in this scrip. As Mr. Chase very truly states:

Back of the scrip stands not gold or signed paper, but real wealth, the labor, and the products of the group. Purchasing power is expanded by the scrip, real wealth is expanded by the goods and services which otherwise would be idle or nonexistent.

The use of this so-called wooden money instead of real American money by the people in 28 States speaks more eloquently than words of the scarcity of money in the United States as a circulating medium.

It is an indictment of our present monetary system which we can not longer ignore. It proves what some of us in Congress have contended since the beginning of this depression—that it is cheaper money and not more credit that is needed as a cure for our economic ills.

Those who insist that the volume of money is greater than before the crash in 1929 can not seriously contend that it is in the hands of the masses.

Whatever the cause or causes of this awful depression, all competent observers now agree that lack of effective purchasing power of the people is prolonging it, and that no recovery is possible until this purchasing power is available.

Expansion of the currency, it is believed, will, in a measure at least, accomplish this purpose. It will increase the value of agricultural commodities and thereby restore the buying power of 40,000,000 of our people who are directly dependent upon agriculture for a living, and when these begin to buy the clothing and other necessities of life which they have had to deny themselves for the past three years then factories, the railroads, and other industries will begin to feel the magical effect, orders will pour in, and artisans, mechanics, salesmen, clerks, and the vast army who earn their living will find employment, and the darkness of our economic night will vanish.

MORE SILVER AS MONEY DESIRABLE

Various forms of monetary expansion have been proposed, but the plan which I favor—and which I think would be most desirable—is that of a greater use of silver as money. Four reasons concur in causing me to reach this conclusion:

First. Expansion of the currency, when based upon a metallic base, can be more easily controlled and regulated, and expansion should, of course, be restricted within reasonable bounds. Wild and unrestricted expansion would bring disaster just as surely as a too restrictive currency has done. The volume of silver, like that of gold, is limited, and silver would be an ideal auxiliary with gold as a metallic base for our currency.

Second. Silver, the universal money of the world for a thousand years, is now used in a vast majority of the countries of the world as money, and its use by the United States would enhance its value and would therefore not only increase the purchasing power in our own country but in the other silver-producing countries, and would therefore materially increase our international trade with these countries, a thing devoutly to be wished for.

Third. The value of silver and commodity prices have always increased and decreased in the same ratio. When the value of silver was high, so were commodity values, and when silver declined, other commodities declined in the same proportion. A chart prepared by the Federal reserve shows that the relation between silver prices and commodity prices from 1913 to 1931 clearly demonstrates the close relationship between these values. Silver to-day is worth 26 cents an ounce, whereas only a few years ago it was worth 60 cents an ounce, and its decline in value has been practically in the same proportion as the value of agricultural and other stable commodities, as well as the wholesale commodity prices.

Fourth. The United States, Mexico, and Canada produce practically 70 per cent of all the silver used in the world. and a remonetization of silver would naturally enhance the value of silver, and this of itself would bring a large direct benefit to the silver-producing States. While Texas produces scarcely any silver, producing in 1931 only 1,500 ounces out of the total of 24,425,000 ounces produced in the United States, and this reason for the remonetization of silver is not therefore based upon any sectional or selfish desire for my State, yet I realize full well that a commodity produced in such large proportions throughout the United States will, when its value is enhanced, benefit not only the States where the same is mined but, indirectly, all of the people of the entire Nation. Just as an increase in the value of cotton would more directly benefit those in the cotton-producing States, yet the entire Nation would reap indirectly material benefits therefrom.

In my judgment the use of silver as money in the United States would, therefore, expedite the payment of debts, increase commodity values, expand international trade, and speed the return of prosperity.

The House Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures to-day reported out H. R. 14729, a bill to authorize and direct the acceptance by the Treasury of silver bullion and the issuance therefor of certificates for the purpose of correcting the dislocation of exchanges, elevating the price level, and so forth.

While this bill is not exactly in the terms that I would have desired, yet it is a step in the right direction, and I believe that its passage would tend to accomplish that for which those of us who have been advocating an expansion of the currency are striving. With a few amendments it could be made an ideal bill. The Constitution of the United States confers upon Congress power to coin money and regulate the value thereof. Let us no longer shirk this duty and this responsibility.

There is very high authority for the statement that "money is the root of all evil," and in my judgment it is also the root of this economic crisis through which we are passing.

Let us no longer defer for the future the consideration of this most vital subject; the welfare of the Nation is at stake, conditions are grave, and delays are dangerous. I implore the Rules Committee to permit immediate consideration of this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The remarks of my colleague are so valuable and form such a splendid speech that I am wondering whether or not the gentleman is going to have it printed in pamphlet form. If so, I would like to get a few copies.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I thank my colleague, and if it should be deemed worthy of printing and the state of my finances permits it to be done, I shall gladly comply with his request.

Mr. GARBER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I will.

Mr. GARBER. I assume the gentleman is recommending the purchase of silver at the market price instead of at any fixed ratio?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Yes. The bill restricts the price to a maximum of 40 cents per ounce for the first three months, 50 cents for the next three, and so on until the price reaches 75 cents an ounce.

Mr. GARBER. And the issuance of silver certificates against the bullion?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The Secretary of the Treasury shall coin the bullion into silver dollars and hold them in reserve against silver certificates issued thereon. These silver certificates are made legal tender for all debts, public and private. I do not have time to discuss the bill in detail at this time.

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield.

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. I quite agree that the great need of the country to-day is additional currency and additional circulation. Is it the idea of the gentleman that the bill which has been reported will not only increase our currency, but will increase the circulation both in velocity and amount, so as to give the required relief?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Undoubtedly it will increase the volume of the currency and will bring a measure of relief. The bill is what I would call a conservative measure; it does not jeopardize the gold standard. My chief objection to the bill is that it is rather too conservative, but it can be amended; but even if passed in its present form it will, in my judgment, do much to help the intolerable conditions now prevailing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KVALE].

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein a few editorial excerpts.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, we all receive petitions. I have received one that is out of the line of the ordinary, circulated by volunteers and signed by more than 1,200 representative business and professional men, farmers, and laboring men, and I am going to vary the usual procedure, read the petition and the accompanying letter, and then present the petition at the Speaker's desk for reference to the proper committee.

The petition is as follows:

Petition addressed to the United States House of Representatives through Congressman Paul J. Kvale, of Minnesota

HONORABLE GENTLEMEN ASSEMBLED: We, the undersigned, residents of the State of Minnesota and citizens of the United States of America, heartily indorse the agricultural credit features of the Frazier bill and respectfully and sincerely petition for the enactment of this measure, or any measure containing similar features, into law as a means of consistent agricultural reconstruction.

The accompanying letter is interesting. I want it in the RECORD, and of the little handful of loyal Members who sit here so late in the afternoon, I ask indulgence while I read this letter.

HANSKA, MINN., February 1, 1933.

Hon. PAUL J. KVALE, Congressman, United States House of Representatives,

Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Kvale: We are sending to you under separate cover a package containing petitions bearing the signatures of 1,231 residents of Brown County, Minn.

These petitions have been circulated in every township of the county, cities and villages included. We find an urgent demand for consistent agricultural refinancing and a hearty support for the new pending Fragies bill the now-pending Frazier bill.

These petitions are not dated and may be used, at your discretion, either at the present session or at the special session. We do not wish to dictate, but we would like to impress upon the statesmen, from this State as well as other States, that until agriculture gets direct and effective refinancing, very little national prosperity need be looked for.

Fural bankers merchants and business men favor such recon-

Rural bankers, merchants, and business men favor such reconstruction. The situation is serious, and unless something is done in the very near future, our agricultural structure will crumble and go to the radical extreme.

Please share this information with your fellow statesmen and accept these petitions in the spirit in which they were circulated.

Respectfully yours,

J. O. PETERSON, FRED SCHMIESING, H. M. FREDERICKSON, FERDINAND AMUNDSON, HENRY NORSBY, PAUL THORDSON,

OLIVER C. AMUNDSON, Chairman (A voluntary committee, with helpers).

Now, Mr. Chairman, instead of adding observations of my own in support of the sentiments expressed in that letter and accompanying petition, I wish the RECORD to contain the observations of two representative editors, one of a country weekly (the Truman Tribune), and one of a country daily (the Fairmont Sentinel), published in the State of Minnesota, and I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may read them in my time. They are the convictions of thinking citizens at home.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

[From the Truman Tribune, Thursday, February 2, 1933]

AN OMINOUS RING

By A. L. Almen

"Three Thousand Farmers Prevent Foreclosure Sale." So runs a headline in a recent Associated Press dispatch.

No, the scene was not in Soviet Russia, but in Minnesota—

Madison, Minn., to be exact.

The same day we read of similar scenes in two other Minnesota

The same day we read of similar scenes in two other Minnesota sas in about your sature to the transfer and the provided and leave and order has been going on throughout the Northwest.

Some years ago while in Massachusetts we went out to Concord and Lexington to see the scene of the first battle in the Revolutionary War. There on a bronze tablet were inscribed the famous and immortal words, "Here the embattled farmer stood and fired the shot heard round the world."

For years the farmer of that age had offered passive resistance to onerous conditions forced upon him. Suddenly in '75 came the spark that transformed that resistance from passive to active and militant. Leaving the plow he grasped his musket and began and militant. Leaving the plow he grasped his musket and began the bloody war that finally lifted the yoke from his neck and enabled him to live free and untrammeled to work out his individual destiny.

From that day on the farmer has lived an individualistic life. He is by nature a peaceable, law-abiding, patient, and optimistic person. He has asked no favors from nature or fellow man. He has performed his tasks in calm and philosophical mood through good times and poor; he has grimly weathered the lean years and calmly enjoyed the rich with deliberate moderation.

When other classes seethed with indignation he plodded serenely on in hopes of better times to come. When others spent their substance in riotous living his indiscretions culminated in the huwing of a family car a radio in the improvement of his their substance in riotous living his indiscretions culminated in the buying of a family car, a radio, in the improvement of his home, and in the education of his children. The only indictment that can be brought upon him is that he did his work (raising food, that the world might be fed) too well.

For this mistake how has our economic system punished him? By taking his home from him. By ruthlessly driving him and his family off the acres where he has grubbed and toiled a lifetime that he might have security as the sunset of life approaches.

What boots it that his life blood is in that place? What matters it that he has planted and nursed every tree and shrub that grows around that home? What difference does it make that he and his wife have raised their children in the environs of that home? What matters it if they have loved ones buried in the neighborhood cemetery? * * the maws of a soulless capineighborhood cemetery? the maws of a soulless talistic system must be filled even to the extent of human flesh and blood.

So when we read of a fast-spreading passive resistance on the part of our agrarian population to this shortsighted policy on the part of those in power we wonder if we may not soon hear other shots, fired by embattled farmers, that will be heard around the world—or at least in Washington where Congressmen fiddle with "beer bills" while American homes are being destroyed. Surely Nero had nothing on the modern American politician.

[From the Fairmont Daily Sentinel] YOU IN WASHINGTON, HEAR By Arthur M. Nelson

By Arthur M. Nelson

The patience of American toilers will not continue forever.
You can not longer with safety defer performance of your plain duties, the exercise on behalf of all the people, of the powers with which the people themselves have vested you.

That was but a little discharge of arms, only a small rattle of musketry, when embattled farmers at Lexington "fired the shot heard around the world."

There was nothing of magnificence in the desultory bombardment of Fort Sumter, but it ushered in four years of civil war.

There was not much of violence in the outbreak at Fairmont or at the other places in the farm States where the like has occurred. But beware!

The rumblings thus begun threaten to grow speedily into the mighty roar of revolution, unless restrained either by the further patience of a suffering people themselves, and this is too much to expect, or by the speedy acts your wisdom may evolve for immediate relief.

THE REMEDY

America is in danger!

This is not a mere Shibboleth. It is statement of a fact which only those wilfully blind can fail to see.

We in the agricultural States ask no doles, no special acts of

All that we want is a decent return for our work in feeding America and we ask no odds.

It has been within the power of you men in high places to wrongfully withhold this from us. For that we will stand no longer.

It is likewise within your power to give us that which we now demand.

Act!

Further delay multiplies the danger.

The Clerk read the first paragraph of the bill.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Doxey, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 14724, the Navy Department appropriation bill, fiscal year 1934, had come to no resolution thereon.

PROCEDURE IN CRIMINAL CASES AFTER VERDICT

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following message from the Senate.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 43

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, in the enrollment of the bill (S. 4020) to give the Supreme Court of the United States authority to prescribe rules of practice and procedure with respect to proceedings in criminal cases after verdict, to strike out, on page 1, lines 8 and 9, respectively, of the engrossed bill the words "Porto Rico" and insert in lieu thereof "Puerto Rico."

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a brief editorial from the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I must object to editorials being included in extensions of remarks.

Mr. BLANTON. It is just a short editorial. The quoted matter does not extend over half an inch.

Mr. STAFFORD. If it is that short, I shall not object. How long is the editorial?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. It would be half a column. Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CRIME OF OVERTHROW OF GOVERNMENT OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. COX, from the Committee on Rules, presented the following privileged report, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed:

House Resolution 386

House Resolution 386

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 8378, a bill to make it a crime to advocate or promote the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force and violence; that after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed two hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the member reporting the bill and the ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to passage without intervening motion except one motion recommit.

WATER USERS ON IRRIGATION PROJECTS

Mr. DRIVER, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed:

House Resolution 393

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 5417, a bill to extend the operation of the act entitled "An act for the temporary relief of water users on irrigation projects constructed and operated under the reclamation law," approved April 1, 1932. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 30 minutes, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to

NAVY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, FISCAL YEAR 1934

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow, when we go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Navy Department supply bill that general debate be continued for one hour, the time to be equally divided and controlled between the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. French] and myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to Mr. Lewis, for 3 days, on account of illness.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H.R. 7522. An act to provide a new civil code for the Canal Zone and to repeal the existing civil code.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, February 23, 1933, at 12 o'clock noon.

Carey Reynolds Clark Hatfield Watson Robinson, Ark. Robinson, Ind. White Copeland Hebert

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. Wheeler] and the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. Connally] are detained from the Senate by illness.

I also wish to announce that the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh] and the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis] are necessarily out of the city.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. Howell] is detained from the Senate by reason of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

THE JOURNAL

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the approval of the Journal for the calendar days of Tuesday and Wednesday, February 21 and 22, 1933.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14458) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, the pending item being the appropriations for the Federal Trade Commission.

"THE SPIDER WEB OF WALL STREET"

[Mr. NORRIS continued and concluded the speech begun by him yesterday, which follows entire:]

Wednesday, February 22, 1933

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, every year, I believe, since the creation of the Federal Trade Commission, or at least every year for quite a number of years back, we have had a test in the Senate on the question of making appropriations for the activities of that commission. At the very beginning the establishment of the Federal Trade Commission was fought viciously by the great combinations, corporations, and monopolies of the country. In my judgment, we have never had any commission, committee, or organization of a governmental character that, for the money expended, has done as much good for the people of the United States as has the Federal Trade Commission.

It is true, I believe, that there are men connected with the Federal Trade Commission, one of whom, indeed, is a member of the Federal Trade Commission, who do not have any sympathy with the very objects for which that commission was created. That accounts, perhaps, for the fact that nearly every year the appropriation for that body has been cut down and that as the bill providing for it comes to the Senate the Federal Trade Commission is practically wiped off the map. The Senate has been in the habit of increasing the appropriation and getting something out of its amendment in conference with which that commission has been staggering along.

A few years ago the Senate adopted a resolution imposing upon the Federal Trade Commission a task that was greater than any that had ever been previously placed upon it. I refer to the investigation of the so-called Power Trust. It has been proceeding to perform that task for several years past. I repeat, Mr. President, that I believe no money has ever been appropriated by Congress for which more value has come to the people of the country than that which has been appropriated for the activities of the Federal Trade Commission. The resolution to which I refer placed upon the Federal Trade Commission the burden of making an investigation of the public-utility question. Developments coming from that investigation have shown that perhaps never in the history of the country-indeed, never in the history of civilization-have combinations and corporations been more active in trying to build up a trust, a monopoly, for a particular business than have the power interests of the United States.

The trade organization of the power industry is known as the National Electric Light Association. The commission's investigation showed that the tentacles of this trust had reached out into every community in the United States. Nothing was too small for them to go into or to look after; nothing was too great for them to aspire to control. They looked after the nominations and elections of men who were candidates for President of the United States. They went down the line and were active in the election of members of school boards in some of the small villages and towns of the United States. They had their secret agents scattered all over the United States under various disguises. They had as agents women who addressed meetings of women's clubs; they had their agents entering secret societies. Professors in colleges were employed under the secret pay of this trust. Newspapers were bought; millions of dollars were invested for that purpose; newspapers were controlled by advertising matter. Churches and pulpits were invaded, and an army of men and women in the secret pay of this great trust were trying to control the sentiment of the people of the United States. They invaded the public schools—secretly always—for the purpose of poisoning the minds of the children in those schools, trying to influence their youthful minds and shape them along lines that would lead them to acquire the viewpoint of the Power Trust.

The investigation of the Federal Trade Commission into the activities of this trust has been underway for two or three years, and the National Electric Light Association has been put in disrepute before honest people everywhere because of the activities in which the investigation showed they had engaged.

Mr. President, recently the National Electric Light Association has dissolved; the members of that old organization have reformed and have created a new organization called the Edison Electric Institute. It has been named after a great man whose name is venerated wherever there is a progressive people anywhere in the world. The members of the new organization are going to take advantage of that name. I have here an Associated Press dispatch sent from Yew York on February 14, which says, in part:

The National Electric Light Association will be formally disbanded to-morrow, just three years short of rounding out a half century of existence.

They had been in existence and doing the kind of business to which I have referred for 47 years before they were discovered. The article goes on to say:

In the later years of its existence the association of "NELA," as it became known in the industry, came under scorching fire from several sources for its propaganda and lobbying activities, and several prominent public-utility executives have expressed the hope that the industry will gain in favor through the demise of "NELA."

Mr. President, if they have really reformed, if the great National Electric Light Association, exposed by the investigation conducted by the Federal Trade Commission have really gotten religion, if they have really been converted, no one will be more delighted than I.

This new organization in its constitution gives its executive committee almost absolute power over the control of its membership. It can call upon any member for any information as to its method of keeping books or any other thing connected with its organization, and the information must be supplied or the member is liable to expulsion. Therefore it becomes important to consider who are the trustees and officers of this great power organization.

At the time of the adoption of its constitution 22 trustees were selected to handle the affairs of the institute, and they proceeded to elect officers. The first peculiar thing we find about it is that the president of the old National Electric Light Association becomes the president of the new christianized association.

The next important thing we notice is that the vice president of the old association that had been caught and its methods of dealing for the last 47 years with the people of the United States had been exposed—the vice president of that old association becomes vice president of the new purified association.

The next thing we notice is that the executive secretary of the old association, who was very active in its management and under whose administration these sins, wrongs, and crimes against humanity and against the people of the country had been exposed, becomes the new executive secretary. The treasurer of the old organization, the man who handled the funds of the old organization, was likewise retained. That organization handled pretty large funds, for, as Senators will remember, one of the things that the investigation by the Federal Trade Commission disclosed was that they set aside $400,000 just to handle the United States Senate at one session. I think in the depression probably they would not need so much to handle the same number of men, but they thought we were pretty high-priced fellows, although there were only three things in | which they were interested. First they wanted to defeat the Boulder Dam bill which was then pending; second, they wanted to defeat Muscle Shoals legislation which was then pending; and, third, they wanted to defeat the resolution which provided that they should be investigated. The treasurer of the old organization becomes the treasurer of the purified organization; so that they start out with the same officers: they start out without any change in officers: they are, from top to bottom, just the same as they were under the old organization that had been caught redhanded.

Mr. President, I think it would be interesting if we took up these trustees now. Let us see who they are, and what their connections are, and whether they were connected with any of these organizations that have been investigated and exposed.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Did they change the residence of the association when they changed its name?

Mr. NORRIS. No. Mr. BLACK. It still lives in the same State, the same locality?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Senators will recollect that through interlocking directorships between banks dominated by Morgan and through the control of the Morgan-founded, Morgan-operated United Corporation, this banking house, within the past few years, has come into a position of absolute dominance in the power business. Take its United Corporation: It was founded early in 1929. United Corporation has substantial control of Columbia Gas & Electric Co., a far-flung holding corporation: the Niagara Hudson Power Corporation, which dominates the up-State utility picture in New York; and the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation, another huge power group. I shall have more to say in regard to that in the

I had assistants working on a chart that charted the United Corporation, which I have just mentioned. Some of the statistics and some of the information we were not able to get. I expected to have it, so that I could put it up beside these other charts on the wall and show to the Senate just how this United Corporation, controlled by Morgan in the public-utility field, spreads all over the United States; but we were unable to assemble all the information, and I shall have to wait until some future date for the information that that would convey.

United Corporation also is buying into Electric Bond & Share, which in the past has been headed by Sidney Z. Mitchell, who, with Insull, dominated the old-time National Electric Light Association.

At the present rate of progress, Morgan will soon control the industry. That famous banking house is already well on the road in that direction. The record of the functioning of these various Morgan-controlled corporations in this new Edison Electric Institute will bear watching.

Is it because Morgan wishes to complete the picture of his control of the power industry that his power executives dominate 18 of the 22 trustees of this new organization?

An examination of the connections of the trustees of the Edison Electric Institute and the showing as to the interlocking directorships between bankers and the companies and the interlocking directorates between banking houses which also have interlocking directorates with the companies headed by the trustees of the Edison Electric Institute shows that of the 22 trustees of the new organization, 18 are so closely linked to the Morgan-Carlisle-United Corporation interests that it would be impossible to have the slightest independence of action.

Now let us consider some of these trustees. Who is Mr. Carlisle, for instance?

Carlisle is an upstate New York banker who launched into the power industry several years ago. His greatest rise, however, has been since he, acting for Morgan, moved into control of the upstate Niagara Hudson Power Co. and the Consolidated Gas Co., which controls the electric and gas picture in the city of New York, and is one of the real powers in the Morgan-owned United Corporation. United Corporation in December, 1931, controlled about 22 per cent of the voting strength of Niagara Hudson. Carlisle and other Morgan operators have enough stock to make this working control absolute.

Mr. Carlisle's investment company, known as F. L. Carlisle & Co., had about a 33 per cent control of the New England Power Association, a public-utility group, when that organization was founded, and when it wrote up its assets by $17,000,000, according to the records of the Federal Trade Commission's investigation of utilities.

That is found on page 362, volumes 31 and 32. So Mr. Carlisle, one of the trustees of this holy institute, was the head of an institution that the Federal Trade Commission shows put $17,000,000 of water into the capitalization.

It is interesting to note that since the organization of the Niagara-Hudson Power Co., J. P. Morgan & Co. are always the head of the banking syndicate that handles the public offerings of the securities of the Niagara Power Co.'s subsidiary corporations.

Here are some of the samples:

In 1931 one of the subsidiaries, the Buffalo General Electric Co., floated general and refunding mortgage 41/2 per cent gold bonds due February 1, 1981, to the amount of $20,000,000. It is interesting to note who handled the bonds. Here are the bankers who did it:

J. P. Morgan & Co.; Bonbright & Co.; First National Bank; National City Co.; Guaranty Co. of New York; Bankers Trust Co. of New York; Chase Securities Corporation; Lee, Higginson & Co.; Bancamerica-Blair Corporation; and Schoellkopf, Hutton & Pomeroy, Buffalo, N. Y.

Note these names. I am going to repeat them a good many times before I get through with these charts that are on the wall. You will become familiar with them. These are the banking institutions that handled the bonds of this Morgan-controlled subsidiary of the new Edison Electric Institute.

In 1932 the Niagara Falls Power Co., another one of the subsidiaries, floated first and consolidated mortgage 5 per cent gold bonds, due in 1959, to the amount of $2,000,000. Who handled that? J. P. Morgan & Co.; Bonbright & Co.; Schoellkopf, Hutton & Pomeroy.

Then in the same year, 1932, the Utica Gas & Electric Co., another one of the subsidiaries, floated $2,000,000 in 20-year general mortgage 5 per cent gold bonds. Who handled them? J. P. Morgan & Co.; Bonbright & Co.; Schoellkopf, Hutton & Pomeroy.

So that gives the Senate an idea of Mr. Carlisle's connections. Incidentally, do not forget that we always find him in the Morgan group.

George H. Howard is another trustee of this converted, Christianized Edison Electric Institute. Who is he? Why, he is president of the United Corporation. That, remember, is the corporation I have been talking about. That is the corporation that controls the electric-light companies of the subsidiaries in the public-utility business from New York to San Francisco and from the Canadian line to the Gulf. That is the corporation as to which I wanted to have a chart here, showing how they were connected, but was not able to get it ready.

Mr. Howard has associated with him as directors in various enterprises Harold Stanley, a Morgan partner; Landon K. Thorne, another Morgan associate; George Whitney, a Morgan partner; and Alfred L. Loomis, a codirector in the Morgan-controlled Bankers Trust Co.

Now let us take up Mr. B. C. Cobb, another one of the trustees. He is another of the Morgan triumvirate. He has been chairman of the finance committee of the National Electric Light Association. That is the one they got ashamed of and disbanded, you know. He was the head of the finance committee; so they not only have the same officers but the same fellows are going to run their finances. He is chairman of Commonwealth & Southern, a company that holds a large number of electric-light corporations, in which the Morgan-owned United Corporation has an important, if not a controlling, interest.

Mr. Cobb was serving on the boards of the companies he operates.

Mr. Thorne, the president of Bonbright Co., a Morgan associate, who, in addition to being a director in Commonwealth & Southern, is also director of Niagara Hudson, Public Service Corporation of New Jersey, the United Gas Improvement Co., Mohawk Hudson Power Co., American Superpower Corporation, the United Utilities, and the Morgan bank, the Bankers Trust Co.

Another associate of Mr. Cobb as a director of the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation is Alfred L. Loomis, who also is a director of United Corporation, Public Service Corporation of New Jersey, American Superpower, United Utilities, and the Bankers Trust Co. Back to Morgan again!

Another associate of Cobb is the far-famed Sidney Z. Mitchell. He is head of the Electric Bond & Share group, in which Morgan, through his United Corporation, seems to be acquiring a substantial interest. Mr. Mitchell's directorships are interlocking with other Morgan-controlled corporations.

Then here is Mr. Frank D. Comerford. He is another one of the trustees. He happens to be president of the New England Power Association. He is a director of International Paper & Power and Edison Electric Illuminating Co., of Mr. Comerford will be recalled for his testimony before the Federal Trade Commission concerning the practice of "writing up" the value of properties. In the course of his testimony it was brought out that when the New England Power Association was formed and took over the assets of the New England Power Co. it wrote up these assets by more than $17,000,000. (Federal Trade Commission Reports, vols. 31 and 32, p. 360.) Mr. Comerford claimed that these writeups did not affect the consumer in any way, since they were not used as a basis for rate making. That is always the claim made. Nevertheless, when any public-utility corporation is asking for new rates it always cites its capitalization, and how much it ought to be allowed to make, and that goes into figuring the value of its property, upon which, under the law, the rates must be graded. But lay that question aside. Lay the rate question aside for a moment. Forget it. This man, who is one of the trustees of this new, sanctified organization, claims in his testimony that it did not make any difference how much water they put into the capitalization, because when they figured the rate they figured it on the value of the property. But he said nothing about the poor investor; he said nothing about the poor man or woman putting savings into these corporations made up of water. By the millions they were putting water in, and the Insull fiasco is an illustration of what happened. So, if Senators will forget the man who pays the rate, and think of the men and women who are induced to part with their hard-earned cash to buy the bonds and the shares of these companies which are overinflated and oversupplied with water, they will get another viewpoint of it.

His testimony will be found in the Federal Trade Commission report, volumes 30 and 31, page 362.

Then I come to Alex Dow, another one of these trustees. He is of the Detroit Edison Co., and has associated with him as director of that company Mr. Bulkley, of Spencer Trask & Co., of New York, who is also a director of the North American Co., the Cleveland Electric Illuminating Co., the Milwaukee Electric Railway & Light Co., the Milwaukee Electric Light, Heat & Traction Co., and the Bankers Trust Co., of New York, getting back to Morgan.

He has also associated with him as a director in the Detroit Edison Co. Mr. B. A. Tompkins, vice president of the Bankers Trust Co., a Morgan bank.

Mr. William Chamberlain is another member of the board of trustees. He is president of the United Light & Power Corporation. He is a director of the International Paper Co., which is a subsidiary of the International Paper & Power Co. Mr. Chamberlain is tied in with the following Morgan associates: Mr. George Roberts and Mr. Marshal Field. | trustees. He is also president of the New England Power

Roberts is director of the Niagara-Hudson Power Co., which is controlled by the Morgan-owned United Corporation, and Morgan's chief power dictator, Floyd L. Carlisle. Mr. Field is a director of the Columbia Gas & Electric, owned by Morgan, president of Field, Glore & Co., director of two of the Morgan New York City banks, the Guaranty Trust Co., and the Bank of Manhattan Trust Co.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I heard the Senator a moment ago mention the name of Mr. Mitchell.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. REYNOLDS. He is one of the directors of that splendid institute the Senator has described so vividly. I should like to know if he is related to the Mr. Mitchell who is president of the National City Co. I make that inquiry because it is said that he testified before our Committee on Banking and Currency that in one single year that man himself earned in salaries and in bonuses the enormous, immense sum of $2,200,000, and in the next breath admitted that those innocent people who had trusted themselves to the salesmen for the big companies the Senator has so vividly described lost millions upon millions of dollars.

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator for his interruption. The Mitchell about whom I am speaking is Sidney Z. Mitchell. I can not say whether he is the same man who testified before the Senator's committee or not. There are two Mitchells. I think this was a different Mitchell.

I now come to Mr. Tidd, one of these trustees. He is president of the American Gas & Electric Co. He has associated with him in the American Gas & Electric Co. as a director Mr. Sidney Z. Mitchell, whose connections I have already noted in connection with B. C. Cobb. Also associated with Mr. Tidd as director of the American Gas & Electric Co. is Mr. C. E. Groesbeck, who is also trustee of the institute, president of the Electric Bond & Share, and a director of the Bankers Trust Co., a Morgan-controlled

Mr. John Z. Zimmerman is another trustee. He is president of the United Gas Improvement, of Philadelphia. He has associated with him as director Mr. Harold Stanley, a partner of J. P. Morgan & Co., and already referred to in connection with Messrs. Chamberlain and Carlisle.

Mr. Zimmerman has also associated with him Mr. Edward Hopkinson, who is a director in the Public Service Corporation of New Jersey, also of the United Gas Improvement. He is also a partner in J. P. Morgan & Co., and in Drexel & Co., of Philadelphia.

Associated with him also is Mr. Landon K. Thorne, already referred to in connection with Cobb and Carlisle. He is another director of the United Gas Co.

Then there is Mr. Gossler, another one of these trustees. He is president of the Columbia Gas & Electric Co., and has associated with him as a director in the Columbia Gas & Electric Co. Mr. Harold Stanley, partner in J. P. Morgan.

He has also associated with him Mr. Marshall Field, referred to above in connection with Mr. Chamberlain.

Associated with him also is William C. Potter, who is also a director of the Electric Bond & Share Co., and president, and director of the Guaranty Trust Co.

Associated also with him is Joseph Harriman, president of the Harriman National Bank, of New York City.

Then there is Mr. C. E. Groesbeck, another one of the trustees, who is president of the Electric Bond & Share and is a director of the Bankers Trust Co. and of the Amercian Gas & Electric Co. He has associated with him as directors Mr. Sidney Z. Mitchell; Mr. William C. Potter, president of the American Trust Co.; Mr. L. E. Pierson, chairman of the Irving Trust Co.; Mr. Frederick Strauss, of J. W. Seligman & Co.; Mr. E. G. Merrill, chairman Bank of New York & Trust Co.; and S. S. Colt, president of the Bankers Trust Co.

Another one of these trustees is Mr. Baylies, who is president of the Edison Electric Illuminating Co., of Boston. He has associated with him as director Frank D. Comerford. who is a trustee of the institute. He is another one of the Association, a subsidiary of the International Paper & Power | Co., of which Mr. Comerford is also a director.

Another one of the trustees is Samuel Ferguson, who is president of the Hartford Electric Light Co., of Hartford, Conn., and who is a director of the New England Power Association.

Then there comes Mr. Harry J. Bauer, president of the board of the Southern California Edison. As far as I know, he is not connected with any Morgan institution.

George B. Cortelyou is president of this great institute. as well as one of the trustees. Senators will remember him, certainly, in connection with the activities of the National Electric Light Association, in trying to control the action of the United States Senate. Senators will remember that this great association employed two ex-Senators to appear before the committee to which had been referred the resolution of investigation. The evidence showed the fees they were paid, and, as far as any evidence I have ever seen is concerned, that was the only service they rendered.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. La Follette in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Was any accounting ever made of the expenditure of the $400,000 referred to by the Senator from Nehraska?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. The Federal Trade Commission, in its investigation, showed just how the money was spent. They itemized it somewhat in their report, and the fees paid to the attorneys were a part of the report. That is all in the record. I think I had it put in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at another time, but I do not remember the details of it now.

Mr. Cortelyou is president and also a member of the board of trustees of this Edison Electric Institute. He was also president of the National Electric Light Association, which has just gone out of business, and which was displaced by the Edison Electric Institute.

Associated with Mr. Cortelyou as a director of the Consolidated Gas Co. is Mr. Charles E. Mitchell. I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that I think that is the Mitchell who testified before his committee yesterday. He is associated with Mr. Cortelyou as a director of the Consolidated Gas Co. Mr. Mitchell is chairman and director of the National City Bank of New York, and he is also director of the American Foreign Power Co.

Associated with Mr. Cortelyou also is Mr. George Whitney, one of Mr. Morgan's partners. He has also been referred to in connection with Mr. Howard and with Mr. Cortelyou as a director of the Consolidated Gas Co. of New York.

Mr. Muhlfeld is another one of these trustees. He is a director of Stone & Webster, and has associated with him as a director Mr. Charles A. Stone, who is also a director of the Chase Securities & North American Co.

Senators, particularly from the West, will recognize the firm of Stone & Webster. They go clear to the Pacific coast from the Middle West, and are interested in the generation and distribution of electricity in many places. They operate in Washington; they operate in Los Angeles; they operate up and down the coast and a great distance east of the

Mr. Edwin Gruhl is another trustee. He is president of the North American Co., and associated with him is Mr. Bulkley, noted above in connection with Mr. Dow, and also Mr. Charles A. Stone, chairman of Stone & Webster, who is also director of the Chase Securities Co., and is mentioned above in connection with Mr. George O. Muhlfeld.

Mr. Hockenbeamer is another trustee. He is president of the Pacific Gas & Electric Co., the North American Co., whose chief financial influence is the Morgan-controlled Bankers' Trust Co., and is the most important stockholder in Pacific Gas & Electric Co.

Mr. McCarter is another trustee. He is president of the Public Service Electric & Gas Co., of Newark. Associated with Mr. McCarter as director is Mr. Landon K. Thorne, noted above, and Mr. Alfred L. Loomis, noted above, and Mr. Hopkinson, also noted in connection with Mr. John E. Zimmerman

Mr. John J. O'Brien is another trustee. He is president of Byllesby & Co., and director of the Pacific Gas & Electric Co.

Mr. H. Hobart Porter is president of the American Waterworks Electric Co.

Mr. Herbert A. Wagner is president of the Consolidated Gas, Electric Light and Power Co., of Baltimore.

Mr. James Simpson is the chairman of the board of the Commonwealth Edison Co.

There is no record that Mr. Porter, Mr. Wagner or Mr. Simpson are in any way controlled by the Morgan-Carlisle-Cobb-Howard group. The same is apparently true of Mr. Harry J. Bauer, chairman of the board of the Southern California Edison Co., another director of the institute.

A careful review of the record will show that all of the gentlemen, except the four I just mentioned, are tied through interlocking directorships of banks and utility corporations as being associated with and either dominated or partially controlled through association with the new Morgan utility empire. So here we have this new Edison Electric Institute controlled as was the National Electric Light Association in its final year, by this Morgan-Carlisle group. Are they merely pulling the wool over our eyes by their new purification efforts and at the same time getting into a position to still further dominate the industry in which they now have practical working control?

Mr. President, I believe that an examination will show that the old National Electric Light Association still lives in spirit; that these men have had no change of heart. If they had, why have they not individually and personally announced that they were going to quit the holding company business, that they were going to stop the methods by which they control generation and distribution of electricity all over the United States? They themselves claim that they have 87 per cent control of all the electric-light facilities in the United States. I believe it, and I think I shall continue to believe it until we have some concession from these men, some of whom were caught red-handed pouring water into the capitalization, and others of whom were interested in the propaganda spread all over the country to deceive the American people. It is my opinion that the National Electric Light Association have only changed their shirt and the shirt they are putting on now is just as dirty as the one they have taken off.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. LONG. I have been out of the Chamber momentarily. What is the change to which the Senator refers?

Mr. NORRIS. The National Electric Light Association has changed to the Edison Electric Institute. They have given a new name to an old institution.

Mr. President, I have referred several times to the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation. Incidentally the Commonwealth & Southern, one of these holding companies, is one of the corporations which the Federal Trade Commission has not yet investigated. We have appropriated money to-day that will enable them to carry their investigation into this group. I want to outline briefly just what the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation is.

The Commonwealth & Southern Corporation is one of the utility combines upon which the Federal Trade Commission has not started work as yet, and most certainly will not before June 30. It is one of the 22 companies listed by the commission for investigation in the next fiscal year and will be investigated at that time, I hope.

Commonwealth & Southern controls, through direct ownership of practically 100 per cent of common stock, the following companies, among others: Alabama Power Co., Tennessee Electric Power Co., Gulf Power Co., Mississippi Power Co., South Carolina Power Co., Georgia Power Co. It controls others similarly in Pennsylvania, Illinois, Indiana, and Ohio.

& Southern control through the Southeastern Power & Light Co., which formerly headed up this group of companies in the Southeast. In May, 1929, Commonwealth & Southern Corporation was formed and acquired more than 90 per cent of the common stock of this Southeastern Power & Light Co. Subsequently, Southeastern Power & Light Co. was merged into Commonwealth & Southern, along with three other holding companies much like Southeastern, but operating in other regions.

Just imagine what that means. If we take the language of the last two or three sentences to which I have given utterance, and analyze it, we will find out how the ordinary person may be deceived, unless he selects an expert to help him, and if he be an expert he will require considerable time to trace out the holdings, the swallowings, the buying out and selling out of these various corporations one to the other, one holding company getting control of another holding company, and so on down the line.

The other three holding companies which I have just mentioned as taken over were the Commonwealth Power Corporation, the Penn-Ohio Edison Co., and the Allied Power & Light Corporation.

The Commonwealth & Southern system, in the South. serves Pensacola, Fla.; Chattanooga and Nashville, Tenn.; Anniston, Birmingham, Montgomery, Gadsden, and Mobile, Ala.; Charleston and Aiken, S. C.; Atlanta, Augusta, Columbus, Macon, and Rome, Ga.; and Biloxi, Hattiesburg, and Meridian, Miss.

The vast extent of the system in the Middle West, as well as in the South, is tersely expressed in Moody's Manual of Public Utilities for 1932, which says:

The operating companies serve over 2,600 cities, towns, and communities, in a territory having a population estimated to be in excess of 9,000,000, located in 11 industrial and agricultural States—Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Tennessee, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, and Florida, furnishing electricity to 1,046,971 customers' meters and gas to 218,-002 customers' meters.

The system had consolidated assets at the end of 1931 of $1,155,760,000. Its consolidated gross earnings in 1931 were $130,000,000, and in 1932 were $114,000,000. Its net income, after expenses, taxes, retirement reserve, and fixed charges, but before preferred dividends, was, in 1931, $22,369,000; and in 1932 was $13,243,000.

Commonwealth & Southern Corporation had outstanding at the end of 1932, 33,673,328 shares of common stock without par value. As of the end of 1931 there were nearly 160,-000 common-stock holders and about 181,000 stockholders of

All of this information is contained in Moody's Manual and Moody's Cumulative Manual Service.

From Holding Company Control of Licensees of the Federal Power Commission, a report of a survey made under the direction of the Power Commission last year, it is clear that the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation, huge as it is, is only one of the units in the great Morgan power combine that has been put together in the last 10 years. The Power Commission's report shows this, without comment, through the record of stockholdings. According to this report, the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation had outstanding in June, 1931, 34,011,010 shares of common stock, or several hundred thousand more than remained outstanding at the end of 1932. Of the thirty-four million-odd shares outstanding in the middle of 1931, the American Super-Power Corporation held 4,571,663, or 13.4 per cent; United Corporation held 1,798,270, or 5.3 per cent; and United Gas Improvement Co. held 975,446, or 2.9 per cent. The holdings of these three made a total of 7,345,379, or 21.6 per cent.

The foregoing figures are contained in the "holding company control" report on page 8. The United Corporation is the giant investment trust, or investment company, of the Morgan interests in the utility field. The United Gas Improvement Co. has 26.1 per cent of its common stock held by the United Corporation. The American Super Power Corporation is closely related to these others. Moreover,

The southern companies listed came into Commonwealth | besides the 21.6 per cent of Commonwealth & Southern common stock held by American Super Power, United Corporation, and United Gas Improvement, an additional 6 per cent of Commonwealth & Southern common stock is held by the Electric Bond & Share Co. There are also certain stock interrelationships between Electric Bond & Share and the other corporations named.

Since the Power Commission's report was prepared there has been some building up of holdings in Commonwealth & Southern, by the American Super Power Corporation at least. Moody's Manual Service lists the holdings of the American Super Power Corporation in Commonwealth & Southern Corporation, as of December 31, 1932, as 5,000,000 shares of common stock and 2,721,447 option warrants.

[At this point Mr. Norris yielded the floor for the day.]

Thursday, February 23, 1933

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, when the Senate took a recess last night I had about reached the point where I was going to give some illustrations of corporate control. The particular subject about which I was talking was the investigation of the Power Trust by the Federal Trade Commission. But every student of the subject will learn before he investigates it very far that it is only one of the incidents of corporate control that needs investigation. The Federal Trade Commission has stated that on its own motion it intended to take up an investigation of corporations generally and their general control of the business of the country.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator? The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. I want to ask the Senator if he has seen a book just published by Upton Sinclair on Wall Street, entitled "Upton Sinclair Presents William Fox "?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I have the book.
Mr. BORAH. I think it is one of the most remarkable stories in regard to such matters that I have ever read.

Mr. NORRIS. I have not yet read all of it, but the part which I have read indicates that it is a very remarkable story.

Mr. President, I wish now rather to broaden the scope of my discussion of the question by taking in corporations in general. The control of the public-utilities business, the electric-light business, is important, because it reaches into every home in the land, but it is only one of the illustrations of the control, by combinations of money, of practically all of the business of the Nation.

I desire at this point to give a list of eight leading banks in New York City, as follows:

Bank of America National Association, Bank of Manhattan Trust Co., Bankers' Trust Co., Chase National Bank, Chemical Bank & Trust Co., Guaranty Trust Co., National City Bank Co., New York Trust Co.

Almost any list of the large banks of Wall Street could be taken and the result would be about the same, but I have selected this list, because to take all the banks and gather the facts in regard to them would mean a job that would require months of toil.

The eight banks on the list I have given have 287 directorships in insurance companies; they have 301 directorships in other banks. That shows how they are interlocked with other banks. They have 521 directorships in public-utility companies. That shows how they reach out over the country and handle the public-utility business of the country. These eight banks have 585 directorships in railroad. steamship, and airplane transportation companies. So we can not eliminate or reduce an appropriation for airplanes without treading on the toes of the money power of Wall Street.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me for just a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Their corporate control of the Power Trust does not differ materially from their control of anything else, does it?

Mr. NORRIS. No; it is about the same as in the case of any other corporation.

These eight banks—and they are only a part of the great combination of wealth represented by banks in Wall Street, which are operating through interlocking directorships—have directorships in 846 manufacturing companies. So there are 846 corporations engaged in all lines of manufacturing that these banks, either directly or indirectly, control, because the man who controls or the men who control the money of the country also control the country, as the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Thomas] so well said yesterday. Let a combination of men control the finances of the United States, and they control all the activities of all the people of the United States. These 8 banks have 1,201 directorships in other corporations, making a total of 3,741 directorships held by the 8 banks in various corporations.

Now I want to take a little larger list of banks. I am going to include these 8 and add enough more to include 24 banks and trust companies in New York, and, so that any student who may want to examine into the question may have a little more detail, I will give the names of these 24 banks which I use in this illustration. They are the American Exchange Securities Corporation; Anglo-South American Trust Co.; Bancamerica-Blair Corporation; Bank of America, National Association; Bank of Manhattan Trust Co.; Bank for Savings in the City of New York; Bankers' Trust Co.; Bronx County Trust Co.; Brooklyn Trust Co.; Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co.; Chase National Bank; Chemical Bank & Trust Co.; City Bank Farmers' Trust Co.; Corn Exchange Bank & Trust Co.; First National Bank, City of New York; Guaranty Trust Co. of New York; Halsey Stewart & Co.; Irving Trust Co.; Lisman Trust Co.; Manufacturers' Trust Co.; Marine Midland Trust Co.; National City Bank of New York; New York Trust Co.; Title Guaranty & Trust Co.

Mr. President, these banks have 6,250 directorships in various corporations, including other banks.

Let me call attention here to conditions existing right in the shadow of this Capitol. The Chase National Bank, as is known, owns, or at least controls, the gas company which supplies the people of Washington with gas. Between the Chase National Bank and the gas company that operates in the city of Washington there are more than a dozen holding companies. I put the list of those holding companies into the Record in some remarks I made here at the last session of Congress. In addition to those holding companies there are two voting trusts that intervene between the operating company and the corporation in Wall Street that controls it. There is not any reason for this maze of holding companies, Mr. President, except to deceive the people and to make difficult, in fact, to make almost impossible, the proper regulation of public utilities.

I want to show now, Mr. President, how these holdings have been increasing, how rapidly they are going forward, how rapidly the hands of these interlocking corporations are reaching out into all fields of human endeavor and controlling gradually but surely business of a corporate nature of all kinds in the United States. I propose in a very few words to show the increase of the control of the business of the country by a few banks in Wall Street.

In 1899 there were 1,762 directorships in other corporations held by 15 commercial banks of New York City. Perhaps I had better read the names of those banks. They are: Bank of America, National Association; Bank of Manhattan Trust Co.; Bank for Savings in the City of New York; Bankers Trust Co.; Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co.; Chemical Bank & Trust Co.; Chase National Bank; New York City Bank Farmers' Trust Co.; Guaranty Trust Co.; Irving Trust Co.; Manufacturers Trust Co.; Marine Midland Trust Co.; National City Bank; New York Trust Co.; and Title Guaranty & Trust Co.

These 15 corporations in 1899 held 1,762 directorships in other corporations. In 1913, 14 years later, the same group of banks held directorships in 3,426 other corporations. In 1931 the same group of banks held directorships in 5,432 other corporations.

Let me give just a brief statement in regard to the holding of directorships in other corporations by the National City Bank at the present time. The National City Bank has 7 directorships in aviation companies; it has 41 directorships in other banks; it has 104 directorships in miscellaneous corporations; it has 44 directorships in insurance companies; it has 102 directorships in manufacturing companies; it has 29 directorships in transportation companies; and it has 115 directorships in public-utility companies.

Mr. President, I have prepared and placed on the wall here [indicating] a chart in which there is given somewhat of an analysis of the Chase National Bank, using that bank as an illustration, for the same thing would be true of almost any of the large banks I have mentioned. This chart was prepared by Mr. Frey, secretary-treasurer of the metals trades department of the American Federation of Labor. It is made up, to a great extent, from testimony taken before the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee just a few weeks ago.

The Chase National Bank, of New York City, as shown by the chart, has 82 directors. They are named on the chart. It has in transportation companies 133 directorships; it has 236 directorships in manufacturing corporations. The transportation companies are named on the chart together with the names of the men who sit as directors. The manufacturing companies are also named on the chart, together with the names of the men who sit on the board of directors of the various corporations and who represent the Chase National Bank.

The bank has 59 directorships in other banks, and here [indicating] is the list of the banks, together with the names of the directors of the Chase National Bank who sit on the board of directors of the other banks. So the Chase National Bank is interlocked with 69 other banks.

That bank has 73 directorships in public-utility corporations, and here on the chart [indicating] is a list of the public-utility corporations upon the board of directors of each of which it has one or more directors. They have 82 directorships in insurance companies; and so that the Senate may know that these are not little local insurance companies, I have here on the chart the name of every one of those 82 insurance companies.

The Chase National Bank also has 262 directorships on miscellaneous corporations, some of the most important corporations in the United States, and they are listed on the chart.

Since I can not put the chart in the Record, and since I should like to have in the Record in connection with my remarks a complete list of these various public-utility companies, banks, manufacturing corporations, insurance companies, and miscellaneous corporations, I ask unanimous consent, without reading, to have printed at this point the names of the various corporations to which I have referred and that are already outlined and named on this chart.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Would it be possible, under the Senate rules or under the rules of the Joint Committee on Printing, to have a cut made of the large chart, so that the cut would take approximately one page of the Con-GRESSIONAL RECORD?

Mr. NORRIS. I think not, Mr. President. I should like to have that done if I could; but, to be fair about it, the rules provide that we can not print an illustration, and I suppose that spider web would constitute an illustration, and it would be a violation of the rules to print it in the

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska further yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I have seen charts of various kinds printed in the Congressional Record. I think it takes a special order to have it done.

Mr. NORRIS. It takes a special order to print one of these charts; but I am satisfied that to print that one, much as I should like to have it in the RECORD, would be a violation of the rules; and therefore I do not expect to ask to put it in.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. FESS. The Senator from Nebraska is correct. If it is a mere chart, it can be easily done under the order of the Joint Committee on Printing; but if it is an illustration, it can not be done.

Mr. NORRIS. Several years ago the Senate permitted an illustration to be put in the RECORD at the request of the then Senator from South Carolina, Mr. Tillman. He put in a picture, an illustration of a cow, a horse, or something of the kind, that he had used on a chart; and the rule was changed then.

The particular chart that the Senator is talking about is an illustration. It has more on it than simply the drawing of lines connecting the various corporations.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It would be a very inexpensive and simple matter to have a zinc plate made of that chart. The plate could be made of a proper size to occupy one page of the Congressional Record. The cost would be practically nothing.

That chart contains so much information that anyone can understand it who will take a moment's time to look at it. I very much hope we can arrange to have one page of the RECORD contain a zinc cut showing exactly what is shown on that large chart.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield. Mr. SMOOT. I desire to say to the Senator that that can not be done without a concurrent resolution of the House and the Senate. I have no objection at all as far as I am concerned.

Mr. NORRIS. Knowing that it would violate the rule to put that illustration in the RECORD, and that we would have to change that rule, I had not intended to ask that it be put in. I do not believe I would be justified in doing it, much as I should like to have it go in.

Mr. President, I think I was through with this chart when was interrupted. I want to say, before leaving it, that this is only a sample; and this does not tell the whole story. The interlocking directorates go a great deal farther than is shown here. The control by the Chase National Bank of a certain corporation of which it does not have, we will say, a majority of the stock holdings will be made complete by the other interlocking directorates that come from other banks which in turn, through these directorships, are connected with the Chase National Bank.

I have here a chart outlining in a somewhat similar way the interlocking connection, through directorships, of the house of Morgan. J. P. Morgan & Co. have 19 partners. Here are seven banks and trust companies—in reality eight, because there are two in one or two places-known as Morgan banks. They are not the only banks that are controlled, at least partially by the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co., but they are outstanding ones. They consist of the Bank for Savings in New York City; the Bankers' Co. and the Bankers' Trust Co.; the Corn Exchange Bank & Trust Co., of New York; the Fidelity Trust Co., of Philadelphia, Pa.; the Girard Trust Co., of Philadelphia, Pa.; the Guaranty Trust Co., of New York; and the New York Trust Co. These spaces down here, connected with each one of the banks I have mentioned, show the control by these particular subsidiaries of J. P. Morgan & Co. of the interlocking directorships that they have with other and outside corporations not named here.

For instance, the Bank for Savings in the city of New York has 30 directorships in other banks. The same bank has 56 directorships in miscellaneous corporations. It has 48 directorships in insurance companies. It has 18 directorships in manufacturing companies. It has 32 directorships in transportation companies. It has 20 directorships in public-utility companies. Let us take another one, the Corn Exchange National Bank & Trust Co., of New York. That is another one of the banks controlled by the House of Morgan. The Corn Exchange Bank has 11 directorships in other banks. It has 41 directorships in miscellaneous corporations. It has 26 directorships in insurance companies. It has 28 directorships in manufacturing companies. It has 6 directorships in transportation companies; and it has 4 directorships in public-utility companies.

Here, for instance, is the Guaranty Trust Co., of New York, one of the banks controlled by Morgan. It has 34 directorships in other banks. It has 222 directorships in miscellaneous corporations. It has 39 directorships in insurance companies. It has 92 directorships in manufacturing companies. It has 154 directorships in transportation companies. It has 106 directorships in public-utility companies.

And so on with all the others that I will not stop to read that appear on this chart.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LOGAN. I will ask the Senator if the 4-line doggerel that describes old Noah's fleas could not very well be applied to some of these banks?-

> Old Noah's fleas had other fleas Upon their backs to bite 'em, And those small fleas had smaller fleas, And so on ad infinitum.

[Laughter.]

Mr. NORRIS. I am rather inclined to think that that will apply very well not only to this particular illustration but to all the others.

So that taking the total, Mr. President, the house of Morgan directly, through these banks I have named and which the house of Morgan controls, has 219 directorships in other banks; and Morgan has, in the same way, 642 directorships in miscellaneous corporations. The house of Morgan has 215 directorships in insurance companies. It has 425 directorships in manufacturing and mining companies. It has 423 directorships in transportation companies. It has 318 directors in public-utility companies. This makes a total of 2,242 directorships held directly by the Morgan banks in the various kinds of corporations that I have named.

I do not have the names of these various corporations here as I do in the analysis of the Chase National Bank. I do not have that simply because I did not have time to complete this, but if we should take the names of these various corporations and put them on here, we would find that to a very great extent they would correspond with the corporations named on this chart for the Chase National Bank. In other words, these banks, by their interlocking method of directorships, when they combine, can control practically any corporation of any size in the United States. I do not care whether it is a banking institution, whether it is a railroad, whether it is operating flying machines, whether it is engaged in mining, whether it is engaged in any line of manufacturing, that statement holds true as to practically all of them in the United States.

Now, Mr. President, I want to take up this other chart. I have here on this chart what is named "The Spider Web of Wall Street." It has on it the following banks and trust companies, showing connections with other corporations and other banks:

First, J. P. Morgan & Co.; the Guaranty Trust Co.; the Bankers' Trust Co.; the First National Bank; the Central Hanover Bank; the Irving Trust Co.; the National City Bank: the Chase National Bank.

This chart contains the names of 120 corporations of various kinds that are connected with one or more of these banks. It does not tell the whole story by any means, Mr. President. It represents interlocking directorates on July 1, 1932, between 8 leading banking institutions in New York City on the one hand, and 120 major corporations on the

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LOGAN. Does the Senator mean that these corporations named around the rim are the 120 to which he refers?

Mr. NORRIS. They are the 120. Mr. LOGAN. It seems to me, just from looking at the chart, that there are more than 120 there.

Mr. NORRIS. No; I think the Senator will find, if he will look at them, that there are 120.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not have to count them to find out that there are more than 120 names around that rim.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to say to the Senator from Kentucky, however, and to other Senators, that this list of corporations around here does not come anywhere near naming all of them. This chart, in round numbers, is about 8 feet square. If I had a chart large enough to contain the names of all the corporations that are directly and indirectly controlled through interlocking directorates by these eight banks, and if it were big enough so that you could read it, there is not a wall space in the Senate Chamber that would hold it. Instead of 120 corporations we would have thousands of corporations. You can well see, from even one of the institutions I have given from this chart, that that is so.

So that we have just a miniature picture here. It is 8 feet square; but, as a matter of fact, if all the corporations controlled as these 120 are controlled were put on the map, there is not a magnifying glass in the country that would magnify it sufficiently so that it could be read.

Each line on this map means that the company and the bank or banks connected by the line had at least one director or similar official in common. The chart may look complicated; but it is, in fact, a simplification of the actual state of affairs. No attempt has been made to indicate where there are two or three identical directors between a company and a bank. Only a few of the total number of corporations with which the eight banking institutions symbolized by the legs of the Wall Street spider are interlocked appear in this chart. Five hundred corporations alone are connected with two or more of the eight banks by the same directors. Of this number, approximately 160 have common directors in three or more banks. The web indicates only 120 of the most typical companies. They are found among railroads, public utilities, insurance companies, banks, investment corporations, manufacturing enterprises, chain stores, and so forth.

The main leg of the Wall Street spider is J. P. Morgan & Co. That is a private banking house, a partnership, which does not publish a financial statement of its business. Three of the banks shown on the chart are dependents of J. P. Morgan & Co., the Guaranty Trust Co., the Bankers Trust Co., and the First National Bank. The two largest banks in the United States are close allies of Morgan, the Chase National Bank, and the National City Bank. The Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co. and the Irving Trust Co. are also within the Morgan sphere of influence. All these banking institutions have common directors. Together, they exercise control over one of the most important sections of economic life in the United States to-day.

Mr. President, I ask at this point to have printed the names of these 120 corporations which are shown on the plat here, and which are connected by interlocking directorates with these various banks named.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, what does all this show? It demonstrates very clearly, in my judgment, that the control of all the business of the United States is drifting rapidly toward corporations. Especially when we consider the development and the advance that has been made in this control, as shown by me a short time ago; it demonstrates, it seems to me, that all of us soon will be hired men, working for some corporation.

Mr. President, if the Government of the United States today wanted to take over the railroads of this country, it would have to see only one man, just one, J. P. Morgan. That is true of almost any other operation. Morgan and his associates would be able to enter into the deal if they wanted to, and compel a sale if they wanted to. They can control in any of these corporations the lowering or the raising of wages; they can change the conditions of labor; they can raise or lower the price of the output of any of these manufacturing establishments simply because they control the money of the United States.

The railroad officials are only their servants. The presidents and the officers of these various manufacturing corporations are compelled, whether they like it or not, to obey the mandate that comes from Wall Street. Then will somebody have the courage to deny that there is a money

When we look over the public-utility field and see how the house of Morgan is gradually and rapidly getting control, as shown by the figures and the statistics I put into the RECORD, can we reach any other conclusion than that any of these organizations, any of these operating companies, any of these holding companies, will find it impossible to do anything contrary to the wishes of the men who control the money strings in Wall Street? In that case it has almost reached the point now when it is one man, J. P. Morgan.

J. P. Morgan, with the assistance and cooperation of a few of the interlocking corporations which reach all over the United States in their influence, controls every railroad in the United States. They control practically every public utility, they control literally thousands of corporations, they control all of the large insurance companies.

Why do they want to mix in the insurance business? In the real insuring of people they have no interest; they do not care anything about that. They want the money. They want to be the depositories of the large funds, the enormous funds, the millions of dollars which are necessary in the operation of these great insurance companies. It is the money they are after.

Any of these other corporations which want to borrow money can not find a place on earth to get it unless they go to some one of the webs of this giant spider, it may be in San Francisco, it may be in Washington, it may be in Nebraska, it may be in Maine. Wherever it is, these lines connected with the money power of Wall Street are connected with practically every large banking institution, either wholly or partially.

Mr. President, we are gradually reaching a time, if we have not already reached that period, when the business of the country is controlled by men who can be named on the fingers of one hand, because those men control the money of the Nation, and that control is growing at a rapid rate. There is only a comparatively small part of it left for them to get, and when they control the money, they control the banks, they control the manufacturing institutions, they control the aviation companies, they control the insurance companies, they control the publishing companies; and we have had some remarkable instances of the control of the publishing companies presented before a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary.

These corporations forget nothing. We had illustrations given us where a magazine would start out on a particular line, but would find itself called on the carpet by some one from one of these great institutions. They were told what the policy must be. Absolute failure stared them in the face unless they obeyed. Through the control of advertising, which, incidentally, to a great extent, is handled by corporations which this money trust controls, they control the avenues of publicity.

Mr. President, the tramp on the street who munches a crust of bread somebody has given him is very likely eating something which came from a corporation controlled by this great money trust. Bread is manufactured by corporations, and shipped all over the country, and the price is kept up, while the price of wheat goes down. We have to pay practically the same price for a loaf of bread when wheat is 25 cents a bushel in the Western States, as we paid when wheat was $2.50 a bushel. It is all controlled by corporations. The clothing we wear, the food we eat, the automobiles, in the main, that we use, the gasoline and the oil we buy to operate them, to a great extent are controlled by this financial center represented by this spider.

Mr. President, how long are we to stand for that? How much longer will we stand for it before we realize that we are just hired men of corporations; that we are just slaves; that we have nothing to say about anything that shall be done unless we get the consent of some great big corporation which through its interlocking directorates controls practically every avenue of human activity?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I would like to ask the Senator a question. I do not suppose the Senator objects so much to the management of all these varied financial and industrial activities by corporations as to the fact that many of their officials have created corporations whose stock is filled with water, that they have paid their entrenched officials unconscionable salaries, that they have speculated and gambled with the private financial resources they have been intrusted with, and have carried on their functions in disregard of the public interest and without an effort to do justice to their employees or even to their stockholders?

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, Mr. President, a beautiful theory can be woven, and it can be said that if we get a big corporation that covers everything we will be able to reduce the prices of products to the consumers. But human nature is just the same now as it was a hundred years ago. Give to a man the power, especially if he has in his heart the greed that comes with great financial power as a rule, and when he gets the power the consumer will not get any benefit—the man will get it. When the power is all in the hands of one or a few men, the consumer will be bled white. That has been the lesson of history. Evidence taken only yesterday before the Committee on Banking and Currency shows how one of these men I have named here, drawing a salary of $50,000 a year for operating one of these great banks, received bonuses to the amount, as I remember, of over $3,000,000 in three years besides his salary. He sold stock at from $200 to $500 a share that is now worth less than $40, sold some of it to the employees of the bank, and they are paying on the instalment plan. I understand it would be possible for them to buy the stock on the market for less than what they still owe on it, but they can not do it because they want their jobs, especially in these times.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, the abuses are more apparent to-day than ever before, and for that very reason, if for no other, I agree with the Senator that some action ought to be taken to prevent the further suffering of the American public caused by the unethical and selfish manner in which so many of the large corporations have been managed and which has largely contributed to the present economic distress.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, just a day or so ago, before the Committee on Banking and Currency, it was developed that Halsey Stuart & Co., one of the greatest houses of its kind, if not the greatest, in the United States, had hired a professor out of a university to talk over the radio to the people of the United States. I have heard him, and I suppose all Senators have heard him, telling how to invest money. They call him the "Old Counselor." He was a professor from a university. They paid him, I understand, $50 a week. He did not prepare his addresses; Halsey Stuart prepared them. They got them up for him, and all he did was to read them, and that is one of the ways they operate. That looks a good deal like the methods the public utilities companies have used to control the public during all the years that have passed.

Here were men and women with some money, savings, perhaps the proceeds of a life-insurance policy to a widow from a dead husband, wanting to invest the proceeds, and they were talked to by "Old Counselor," hired by Halsey Stuart & Co., paid by them, talking their words, not his, over the radio, giving this advice. They would naturally suppose he was a professor in a university, an economist, an honest man, and that he was giving his own ideas. When simmered down, the advice was that the securities they were advised to buy were securities which Halsey Stuart & Co. had for sale and which afterwards became practically worthless.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. On yesterday, in the course of some remarks made by myself, I made the statement that the three larger banks in New York City—the Chase National, the National City, and the Guaranty Trust Co—have combined resources approximating $5,000,000,000. At the present time, because the dollar is worth 200 cents instead of 100 cents, their resources in buying power and real financial power are $10,000,000,000. In addition to these are many other banks in New York City. Can the Senator advise the Senate of the total resources of all the banks in New York City?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I can not. I do not have the figures here.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The amount would be much larger than for the three banks?

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes; much larger.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It would approximate many times $5,000,000,000. The consolidated banks in New York, represented by the spider on the chart on the wall, have perhaps $20,000,000,000 of resources, which at the present time, on the basis of the present value of the dollar and its buying power, would be, in effect, $40,000,000,000, and that, exercised through central control, is practically the financial control and power of the United States. Does the Senator agree with that conclusion?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I do.

Mr. President, I am reminded by the interruptions of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Thomas] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh] of one other thing I want to say. I referred to the evidence given by Mr. Stuart, of Halsey Stuart & Co., before the Banking and Currency Committee yesterday and the day before. I referred to the "Old Counselor" giving advice as to how money should be invested. Let me suppose a case. Suppose the Senator from Oklahoma were walking down the streets of Washington and a widow should come along whom he knew had in her pocketbook the proceeds of a life-insurance policy on her dead husband, which she was probably taking to the bank to deposit. Suppose the Senator would knock her down and steal the money from her and undertake to escape. The people roundabout, if they saw what had happened, would seize the Senator from Oklahoma, and if they did not tear him limb from limb—if the mob did not kill him on the spot—he would be sent to prison when he got into court a short time afterwards.

But what about Halsey Stuart & Co.? This same widow with the $10,000 that her husband had worked perhaps during almost a lifetime to accumulate in the form of a lifeinsurance policy, hears the "Old Counselor" say in effect. "Why I am a professor in a university. From the bottom of my heart I am trying to give advice to men and women about how to invest their savings. I am the 'Old Counselor.' I advise you to go and buy some stock in Mr. Insull's company. That is the best investment I know." When that is done now by the men who get millions and millions from the poor people of the United States in that manner, in their fictitious securities that they float and sell to innocent and honest people of the country, when they do that kind of thing and take the $10,000 away from the widow, they are considered financiers. They are not punished like the Senator from Oklahoma would be if he stole it on the street in the case I have just supposed. He did not use any deception. He simply robbed her of the money. But Halsey Stuart & Co. used deception. They hired a decoy. They hired a man who is supposed to be an upright man, a professor in a college. They paid him their money. wrote the articles which he was to read over the radio.

In the outcome they got the money from the widow just the same as the Senator from Oklahoma would have gotten it if he had robbed her on the streets of Washington. But the Senator would go to jail because he would be a criminal. Halsey Stuart & Co. are financiers. They are specialists. The professor is a specialist. He is an economist. They are men of high standing, away up at the top of the ladder, and when we want to find out how we are going to get out of the depression we send for such men and ask their advice about how to get out, when they are the men who put us into the depression. We still believe they know how to redeem us from what looks a good deal like destruction!

SUGGESTIONS ON ECONOMIC CONDITIONS

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I do not desire to discuss the pending amendment or the bill which we are considering, but in view of the informative address which has been delivered by the senior Senator from Nebraska yesterday and to-day and having thought about some matters along the same lines, I want to ask the indulgence of the Senate to offer some suggestions about the new deal which has been talked of considerably during the past few months.

Much has been said of late about the new deal which was promised during the recent presidential campaign. At this session of Congress little that is new has been discussed, and if a new deal if begun now, it appears that the commencement must be made through the use of old and worn-out tools.

A new deal, as I understand it, would mean a better arrangement for capital, labor, and the entrepreneur. The entire earnings of a people, regardless of the enterprise in which they may be engaged, are represented by the earnings of labor, the earnings of capital, and profits.

In considering questions that will bring a new deal to everyone who is interested in the public welfare, it is of the highest importance that the aim of those who propose to usher in the new deal shall be to care for the earnings of capital, the earnings of labor, and to deal with profits. Perhaps it is impossible to devise a workable plan or method unless the information on which it is based is accurate. Society has become so complicated that no man or group of men will possess sufficient wisdom to hastily determine what course may be pursued that will bring about a wise result. I hope that I may be classed among those who believe that through the application of wisdom to problems of government the life and happiness of the Nation may be made secure and that a new arrangement may be ushered in where justice and mercy will flow pleasingly over the land and where happiness will prevail in every walk of life, for, after all, the main purpose of every government should be to bring happiness to the people.

After giving much thought to matters, and advising with others in whose judgment I have confidence, I have concluded that a few suggestions which occur to me may be worthy of consideration by those upon whom rest the burden of finding a solution for many perplexing problems.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Harrison] introduced a resolution asking that a committee be empowered to make a thorough investigation of present-day conditions, taking into consideration every line of industry whereby the people earn their sustenance. I think that was a wise step and that a careful investigation may result in the development of ideas that will greatly aid in reaching sound conclusions. The suggestions which I may advance, upon more careful study, may prove unsound or impracticable. I can not say that the premises on which my ideas are based are true beyond question and that consequently the ideas must therefore be sound. If I had proven the truth of what I may say by actual test, it may be that I would have discarded the suggestions in their incipiency. Propositions and ideas should not be written into law until there has been a test unless it be imperative that legislatures go into the realms of speculation and experimentation. What I suggest I shall ask to be considered as suggestions only. It is through suggestions and resultant tests of their truth that solidity is

The committee which has been vested with power and authority to assemble facts will come face to face with the business interests of the country, and will find out what may be done, if anything, to remedy present conditions and to insure the people of the Nation against a reoccurrence of a period such as now envelops us. I am not among those who believe that the conditions, now almost intolerable, are temporary or that they will soon pass away. I doubt that they will pass away at all unless wisdom to grapple with them is found in high places. Everyone will readily agree that there should be no recurrence of a similar depression. More than one thing may be needed to prevent it. Because nothing has been done in the past to prevent such economic disasters is no reason why we may assume at this time that nothing can be done. Rather, we should treat it as a reflection on the wisdom of the statesmen in the days that are gone that they did not secure us from the travail of the present time, and we should be certain that we do not leave it to some future generation to lay the odium at our door that another economic disaster shall well-nigh destroy a great Nation.

Commerce is the life of the people of the Nation, as well as the people of the world. The wars that we may have in the future will have as their basis a contest for trade and commerce. A people live, thrive, and find happiness through the instrumentalities of commerce. When commerce ceases, or becomes restricted, desolation must follow. It is important, therefore, that we consider the question of trade and commerce as one of the most important questions with which we have to deal.

Commerce within a State can only be regulated by the laws of the State, but commerce between the States and with foreign countries is subject to regulation by the Congress of the United States.

Since Congress may control foreign and interstate commerce it has vested in it the power to deal with the earnings of capital, the earnings of labor, and the profits. As these make up the sum total of all human endeavor along economic lines, the vast importance of the matter is at once apparent. Efforts have been made in the past, and there are suggestions along the same lines now, that Congress may impose conditions upon the right of individuals or groups to engage in interstate commerce. Under the "general welfare clause" of the Constitution it is often argued that the Congress is vested with power to enact legislation which promotes the general welfare, regardless of other provisions in that instrument. I hardly think that is true, but that Congress may devise a plan which will control and regulate vast aggregations of wealth used in direct or indirect interstate commerce, seems to me beyond question.

If the Congress may control foreign and interstate commerce to the extent of requiring whoever engages in such commerce to do so under a Federal charter which would leave to the Congress the power to determine what shall be a fair rate on invested capital, and how the surplus, if any, may be disposed of and for what purposes such surplus may be used, then Congress has ample authority to see to it that when the new deal is brought about there shall be no possibility of the gathering of the great wealth of the Nation into great reservoirs where it is impounded and will not flow save at the will of those who control the gates of the reservoir.

This is a good time to initiate a new era. Business is almost without profit-yielding life. The reservoirs of wealth, which have been accumulated through the sapping of the economic vitals of the people as a whole have about dried up. If we are to build for the future we should build on a more substantial foundation. If the foundation is secure we need not fear that the superstructure will collapse except through negligence and carelessness in its erection. An unsubstantial foundation will allow the superstructure to fall when the weight becomes too great. Our foundation has crumbled, and we found when the stress came that it was builded on the shifting sands. Let us clean out the rubbish and dig deep until we find that which is firm, and then we may build again with the assurance that business will rest secure on a basis that may not be shaken by the storm and stress of economic upheavals.

Mr. President, in working out plans for the new deal no one should forget that capital is always entitled to a fair return on the investment if the investment is wise, the management efficient, and the business lawful. Labor, which is of equal importance with capital, is entitled to a fair rate for the labor given to the enterprise, whatever it is. When capital shall have received a fair rate and labor shall have received a fair wage, that which remains over is profit. The Government may take this profit for taxes toward the support of the Government under laws that are within constitutional limitations. If it may take the profits above a fair rate to capital and above a fair rate to labor, then why may it not take the profits, as trustees, for the use of the owners of the capital and for the use of the labor which provided the profit?

If the Government should determine that invested capital was entitled to a rate of 7 per cent, after the payment of a fair wage to labor, and if there were no profits above that, the Government would not impound any surplus for the simple reason that there would be none to impound. If there were returns above the fair wage and a fair return on the investment, and the Government should impound that surplus, it would then become necessary for Congress to prescribe by law the use that should be made of the surplus held by the Government, at least in part, as trustee for both capital and labor. It would also be for the Congress to prescribe, after a full investigation and an ascertainment of facts, what part of the surplus should be allocated to capital, what part to labor and what part the Government should take toward its support.

It may be that the part allocated to labor could be used to provide unemployment insurance. It may be that the part allocated to capital could be used to pay dividends to stockholders in the years when the earnings failed to provide a sum for that purpose. These things would be matters of detail. The foundation of the plan would be that the Congress should prescribe by law that whoever engaged in interstate commerce or in foreign commerce should obtain a charter from the Federal Government with regulatory powers held by the Congress. If the Congress should then prescribe laws regulating the earnings of capital and the earnings of labor, and take over any surplus above that to be held for purposes denominated by the Congress, then we would have discovered a method whereby human greed would be very greatly restricted and equity would flow to the general public.

Everything that is taken from the public above that which will provide a fair rate on the invested capital and a fair wage to labor is taken without authority. The aggregation of great funds has been brought about because those who controlled the capital exacted more from the general public than they were entitled to. Great monopolies have been fostered for the sole purpose of building up an enormous surplus which was under the control of a few private individuals.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. KING. I did not hear all the Senator's statement. Is it his view that under the power to regulate commerce the National Government may require persons who may engage in commerce extending beyond the borders of their respective States to take out Federal licenses or charters, and that the Federal Government may determine what shall be the earnings and impound the residue and make disposition of it as it sees fit; or is the Senator contending that under the taxing power of the Federal Government the suggestions which he is now making may be brought about?

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I take neither position, may I say to the Senator. I am making these suggestions with the reservation that what I have said may be unsound, but my idea is that it could be done under the taxing power of the Government; that the Congress, under the taxing power which is vested in it by the Constitution, has absolute control of the purse strings of the people—that is evident—and that these things might be done. I do not say that they could be done; but unless they can be done, it appears to me that there is no way to break the grip of the great aggregations of wealth which have been discussed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] yesterday and to-day.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon a further interruption—

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I think there is no doubt as to the power of the Federal Government to tax profits, as the power rests in the Government to tax incomes of individuals and to tax excess profits as it did during the war. I was interested, however, in the suggestion, if I understand the Senator, that Congress could take the surplus profits, impound them, and then use them for such purposes as might be called extraconstitutional or extragovernmental. I have no doubt as to its power to impose taxes; if it were considered wise. Congress could obtain all of its revenue from excess profits and from the taxation of corporations; but it seems to me that it might be straining the taxing power, and certainly the interstate-commerce provision of the Constitution, if, under the authority of either or both, the wealth of the country might be taken and devoted to a social program that might probably be brought within the authority of municipalities, counties, or States.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.
